Mr. Julius C. Renninger was in Cumberland last Friday on professional business.

Mr. Scott T. Jones is out today after a two days' enforced housing on account of illness.

WANTED—A good reliable girl to clerk in store. Apply to Oakland Bakery, Oakland, Md.

Mr. Silas O. Wiley has moved to Oakland with his family and will engage in the carpenter business here.

We have in stock a full line of blanks for Justices of the Peace, including deeds, mortgages, leases, etc.

Mr. Wilson Bittinger, of near Grantsville, was in the city Tuesday when he made this office a business visit.

Mr. Edward E. Sollars, of near Oakland, attended the Roosevelt meeting at Cumberland last Saturday night

WANTED—A settled woman as chambermaid and also waitresses. Apply at Mountain Lake Hotel, Mountain Lake Park, Md.

Mr. E. L. Beckwith is having the opera house block painted which is a very material improvement to the entire property.

Rev. Dr. Charles W. Baldwin, president of the Park Association, spent Saturday in Oakland and at the Park on business.

Mrs. John A. Grant returned to Oakland last Saturday night from a visit of two weeks to her former home in the Valley of Virginia.

LOST—A hand painted belt pin; circular in shape enclosed by a coiled serpent; engraved on back, "Bush, 1904." Finder please leave at this office.

Lieut. Wm. H. H. Friend, of Friendsville, was in the city Tuesday and yesterday when he qualified as Justice of the Peace for District No. 2.

Messrs. Lawson L. and George W. Loar, of Grafton, spent Sunday in Oakland with their mother and other immediate members of their family.

Mr. H. A. Rasche has purchased from Mr. C. F. Hammond a lot on Second street extended upon which he will erect a dwelling, probably yet this year.

Miss Marian Selby, of Howard county, arrived in Oakland last Wednesday evening and will remain for some weeks visiting her brother, Dr. B. F. Selby and family.

Dr. H. W. McComas, mayor of Oakland, was in the city Saturday night. He returned home early yesterday morning in an automobile.—Cumberland News.

Great inducements are offered by the Dixie Realty Company to all to attend the sale of the Bradley Farm near Oakland. See advertisement for full particulars.

Mr. F. G. Hyde, who has been confined to his bed for several weeks with a severe attack of rheumatism, is slowly improving and expects to leave his room in a few days.

Dr. Charles E. Shelton, Superintendent of the Park, after spending upwards of a week in Washington on business connected with Park affairs, returned home Monday afternoon.

Mr. Phineas C. Boucher, of Grantsville, one of the election officials of District No. 3, spent Tuesday and yesterday in Oakland on business connected with the primary election returns.

Subscribe for The Republican.

Messrs. G. A. Fraley and A. T. Matthews were each in receipt of Mitchell automobiles Monday afternoon, the cars coming here direct from the factory. The machines are quite handsome and are equipped with all accessories.

Rev. Dr. W. D. Reed, superintendent of the Oakland District of the M. E. church, has gone to Minneapolis, Minn, to attend the general conference of his church now being held in that city. He will be absent from Oakland for upwards of a month.

Dr. Henry W. McComas and his chauffer, Morrel Jamison, went to Cumberland Saturday afternoon where a new Ford roadster was purchased and driven through to Oakland, arriving here at 6 o'clock Sunday morning, making the run in less than three hours.

President Taft passed through Oakland Sunday evening, a passenger on board B. & O. passenger train No. 1. He delivered speeches Monday in Athens Nelsonville, Chillicothe, and Greenfield, O. During his five-minute stay here the President did not leave his car.

Messrs. McComas & Treacy, agents for the Ford machine, received on Monday another carload of these little wonders, which were unloaded Monday afternoon and Tuesday. The car contained six autos, two or three of them having already been disposed of.

Mayor Henry Boning, Messrs. Gideon Gnagey and Jacob J. Bender, of Grantsville, were brought to Oakland last Saturday by Mr. Louis Deifenbaugh in the latter's touring car where they remained a greater portion of the day attending to some business affairs.

Don't fail to read and digest every word of the argument advanced by the Dixie Realty Company in the advertisement of that corporation which appears in this paper today. To buy at this sale a lot or several of them will be a good investment, even though the buyer does not intend to farm the property.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaiah Umbel, until recently residents of Selbysport District, but who moved a short time ago to Terra Alta, where Mr. Umbel engaged in the meat business, were in Oakland Monday, when they called at this office. Mr. Umbel, while being a native of Garrett county, made his first visit to the county seat Monday.

Mr. John C. Dunham, who was recently appointed Justice of the Peace by Governor Goldsborough, qualified as such Monday afternoon before Clerk E. Z. Tower of the Circuit Court and immediately assumed the duties of his office, occupying rooms in the First National Bank Building Justice Dunham will give all matters entrusted to him immediate attention.

Prof. Edward F. Buchner, of the faculty of Johns Hopkins University was a visitor here one day last week, his mission being in the interest of the new department of technology, for establishing which the recent Maryland General Assembly made a large appropriation. Professor Buchner visited the high school of Garrett county to ascertain if the curriculum will fit local students for this new department, and also to ascertain what technical branches of study will best meet general educational wants and necessities of the State for the future development of the commonwealth's resources.

Don't fail to hear the famous Dixie Twin Auctioneers. They will be at the Bradley Farm auction on May the 28th.

Revival Meeting at Breedlove.

Meeting at Breedlove, W. Va., conducted by D. L. Reid, of the Corinth M. E. Charge, is still in progress. Twenty-eight conversions up to last Sunday; 19 joined the church; Sunday school organized in Breedlove's Hall with about 75 scholars. Subscriptions of over $200 toward starting a church.

Attention, Knights of Pythias.

The members of Garrett Lodge, Knights of Pythias No. 113, of Oakland, will dedicate their new Castle Hall on Thursday, May 30th, (Decoration Day.) with elaborate ceremonies.

All members of the order are invited to join in the dedication of a Pythian home of which we are all justly proud and help make the occasion one long to be remembered in the history of our beloved order.

An elaborate program of exercises will be carried out, to be announced later and we expect to have not only the grand officers of the grand domain of Maryland with us on this occasion but also expect to have some representative of the Supreme Lodge to take part in the exercises.

Let every Pythian make an effort to to be present on this memorable occasion.

MEMORIAL DAY IN OAKLAND.

Annual Decoration of the Graves of the Honored Dead.

Crook Post No. 35, Grand Army of the Republic, desires that there be a general turnout of the citizens, public school children, Knights of Pythias and all other organized bodies of the town, and visitors from the surrounding country are also invited to participate with the Post on Memorial Day, Thursday, May 30th, in decorating the graves of the noble dead who have answered the last roll call and are now resting in our cemeteries.

Crook Post will assemble at Sturgiss' drug store at 10 o'clock a. m., and at 10.30 proceed to the cemetery where the beautiful ritual of the order will be carried out and an address will be delivered by Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker.

Donations of flowers will be thankfully received and can be left at Sturgiss' drug store.

By order of the Post.

A. G. STURGISS,
Commander.
J. A. HAYDEN,
Adjutant.

Elopement Stirs Fairmont Society.

A romantic elopement occured in Fairmont yesterday a Mr. Oris suceeding in inducing Miss Maria Hood, to go to Oakland, Maryland, with him and there become his wife. Miss Hood is only sixteen years old and her husband is but a few years older. Mrs. Emma Hood, the mother of the girl, is a widow, and is much wrought up over her daughter's marriage. She had no suspicion of the marriage. Miss Hood, now Mrs. Oris, is very well know in Fairmont and moves in a good circle of society.—Morgantown New Dominion.

ATTENTION, MR. FARMER!

In your efforts to improve your soil, to grow better crops, and make farming "worth while," have you been getting the worth of your money spent for fertilizer? Do you realize that when you buy a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE that you are getting more than four times as much Phosphoric acid for your money as when buying the expensive acid phosphate? Do you realize that

When buying one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE you get fully as much Phosphoric Acid, for one-half the money, as when buying one ton of Ground Bone, which repeated tests show produces no better results than the Ground Phosphate? Do you know that we guarantee that

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade cantains 1,223 pounds of B. P. L. (Bone Phosphate of Lime)? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 560 pounds of Phosphoric Acid? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 750 Pounds of Lime? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 244.6 pounds of Phosphoric? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains [according to a recent test made by the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station] 5.37 per cent available [2 per cent citric acid test] when applied to the soil direct? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade cantains, according to the analysis, 107.4 lbs. of available phosphoric acid for the first crop's use, if applied under proper conditions, and leaves 452 pounds of phosphoric acid to become available for the use of future crops? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains sufficient Phosphoric Acid supply the needs of one acre of land for from five to six years after it is applied, and will become available as it is needed from year to year by the growing plant? That

One ton af our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade will cost, delivered at most any point in the Southern, Central, Northern or New England States, from $8.00 to $10.00 per ton of 2,000 pounds, if bought in carloads in bulk.

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade, which is being sold and used so extensively throughout the country, contains only one-half as much Phosphoric Acid, only half as much Phosphorus, and less than one-half as much lime, as one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE?

Are you aware that nearly one-half of this acid phosphate consists of sulphuric acid, a product which is not only valueless as a fertilizer, but which is actually harmful to the soils, as it renders them more acid?

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade containing only 280 pounds of Phosphoric Acid, will cost you just about twice as much as a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE containing 560 pounds of Phosphoric acid?

We vouch for the truth of these statements, and if you have not figured these things out for yourself it is high time you were beginning to "sit up and take notice." We will be pleased to give you any further information you may desire if you will address

A CAR LOAD OF PAROID ROOFING

Just received, that we are offering at Car Load Prices.

The United States Government has been using PAROID ROOFING for the last 14 years. Last year it ordered more than a MILLION Squares

GUARANTEES—Guarantees of all sorts are used to sell ready roofing of unknown value but read one of them and you find that it becomes invalid if any of its many conditions are not fulfilled. Your customers stands every chance to lose on such guarantees. Your best guarantee on any thing you sell is your reputation but beyond that your standing guarantee, "If it is not right we will refund your money," is the strongest guarantee that can be made—it covers everything. That's why we say to you and ask you to say to your customers:

"When you see PAROID on your building, if you are not satisfied tell us and we will send you a a check for the cost of the roofing and the cost of laying it." If a broader guarantee than this could be made we would make it.

Yours very truly

TAFT'S RECORD ON RECALL OF COURT DECISIONS

Favored the Principle to Oblige "Poison Makers."

NOTORIOUS WHISKY RULING.

Reconciled His Conscience to the Promulgation of a Presidential Order Legalizing Every Demand of the Makers of Imitation Whisky — He "Recalled" Seven Federal Court Decisions to Accommodate the Opponents of Roosevelt and Dr. Wiley.

Now that Mr. Taft is so violent in his opposition to any proposal to permit the people of a state to assert their understanding of the meaning of the constitution made by them when that meaning has been perverted by a judicial ruling, it is well to examine his past record in this particular. Recorded facts prove that President Taft is not opposed to the "recall of decisions" of the federal courts when the recall is made by "a representative part of the people," even though that part consists of one of 100,000,000 Americans.

Here is an "expose" especially interesting at this time. It appears in the editorial columns of the Philadelphia North American:

"Long before Theodore Roosevelt upheld the hands of Harvey Wiley and forced the passage of the pure food law there had been notorious frauds in the making, marking and branding of distilled liquors. But the question seemed pretty well settled by the upholding of the explicit provisions of the national pure food law in the rulings of Dr. Wiley, sustained by repeated messages of President Roosevelt, opinions of Attorney General Bonaparte and decisions of different federal courts.

Merely Common Sense.

"The question was simply one of common sense. There was to be no prevention of or penalty for the sale of any sort of liquor. The rulings meant only that the purchaser was entitled to the privilege of learning from the label whether he was buying what he was paying for.

"Undoctored whisky was to be labeled 'whisky.' A mixture of two real whiskies was to be labeled 'blend.' A mixture of a whisky with something that is not whisky was to be labeled 'compound.' A concoction that smelled and tasted like whisky, but contained no whisky, was to be labeled 'imitation.'

"That was all there was to the provisions of the pure food law governing interstate commerce in whisky. It was such a simple, incontrovertible regulation for square dealing that every American who thought he knew along what lines the administration of William H. Taft would be conducted scoffed at the idea that the question was not a closed chapter.

"When the rectifiers of Cincinnati and Peoria hinted at the influence they could bring to bear upon a Cincinnati newspaper and Speaker Cannon and prophesied the discrediting and the downfall of Wiley we thought them overconfident in proclaiming that they could reopen a contest which had been won and won over and over by the people, by the state food commissioners and friends of pure food before President Roosevelt and the federal courts.

"So there was wonder when there followed President Taft's executive order reopening the whisky branding question settled by Attorney General Bonaparte's successive opinions and President Roosevelt's orders giving executive effect thereto.

Taft's Conscience Reconciled.

"At the time of the ruling in favor of the swindlers by Solicitor General Bowers, in June, 1909, the North American said:

> "The real meaning of this reopened controversy, of course, is that the conspiracy to weaken, break down and nullify the pure food laws is widespread, powerful and persistent. * * * With President Taft rests the responsibility of spreading credence or giving the lie to the general boasting of the druggers of food and drink that the entire toil of Roosevelt and Wiley to safeguard the health of the people is to be obliterated before 1912 for the benefit of certain strong but not altruistic interests.

"Six months' consideration resulted in President Taft's reconciling his conscience to the promulgation of a presidential decision legalizing every demand of the cheating poison makers of the Taft-Cox and Joe Cannon bailiwicks. But this notorious annulment of a portion of the work of Wiley and Roosevelt is not the point of present comment. The focus of present interest is President Taft's aversion toward any questioning of the sanctity of judicial decisions.

"But when the food committee of the National Consumers' league addressed to President Taft an appeal for the 'recall' of Dr. Wiley's resignation and cited certain facts decidedly pertinent to President Taft's horrified denunciations of 'nostrum makers' and 'subverters of the constitution,' who 'lay the ax to the root of the tree of liberty,' who dare question the infallibility of any judicial construction of any law?

"For the Consumers' league makes clear in taking up the Taft decision in favor of the makers of imitation whisky that in this ruling the president recalled the decisions of President Roosevelt, Attorney General Bonaparte, Solicitor General Bowers and seven federal courts.

Seven Times Sustained.

"Finding themselves unable to sway the Roosevelt administration in spite of the efforts in their behalf of Secretary Wilson, the whisky poisoners went into the courts. Seven times the Roosevelt ruling was sustained, as follows:

"Aug. 24, 1908, in federal court at Cincinnati.

"Aug. 27, 1908, in same court, strong supplemental opinion refusing a rehearing.

"United States circuit court for southern Illinois, later in the same year, completely sustained the Roosevelt ruling.

"Feb. 4, 1909, United States Circuit Judge Cochran, at Richmond, specifically ruled that the stuff which Roosevelt had ordered to be labeled as imitation whisky was exactly that.

"Aug. 11, 1908, the court of appeals for the District of Columbia broadly sustained the Roosevelt ruling.

"July 7, 1908, the United States district court for western New York completely sustained the Roosevelt rulings.

"The supreme court of the District of Columbia, by decree in a case, 'United States versus four barrels of liquid purporting to be whisky,' held that the contents was an imitation of whisky.

"Oct. 28, 1908, federal court at Baltimore broadly sustained the Roosevelt ruling that imitation whisky was imitation whisky, and must be so labeled.

Alphonso Taft's Opinion.

"What the Consumers' league failed to cite, however, was that President Taft in that one ruling not only recalled seven federal court decisions, but also another which, while it did not emanate from a court, was certainly judicial. For it was handed down by a great and honored jurist who sat in the cabinet of President Grant. This was the eighth decision recalled:

> "Alcohol and whisky are, unquestionably, different articles in contemplation of law, as they are in fact, having different qualities and different values. (Opinion of Alphonso Taft, attorney general, construing section 3149 of internal revenue laws, see Internal Revenue Record, Aug. 21, 1876, volume 22.)

"Just what process of reasoning the president employs to determine positively that he has the right to recall seven court decisions with a single signature, while the recall of one by the sober judgment of millions of citizens in a state would destroy our fundamental national liberties, we are unable to understand, except by remembering that striking portrait drawn by the lamented Dolliver of the amiable person in the White House 'entirely surrounded by men who know exactly what they want.'"

"GRATITUDE" MEANS MALIGNANT ATTACK UPON ROOSEVELT

Taft's Tirade Not New to Men Who Know Him.

When Seeking the Presidency In 1908 He Strove to Appear as a Stanch Progressive—Wore a Mask For Two Years—Has Now Openly Stamped Himself as a Reactionary.

Washington, April.—Stung to the quick by his belated recognition of the long patent fact that the voters of the Republican party had repudiated his candidacy for renomination and are overwhelmingly in favor of the nomination of Colonel Roosevelt as their candidate for the presidency this year, Mr. Taft has at last thrown aside all restraint and carried out the threat which he has been muttering to his intimates for some weeks to speak out in public his real thoughts about the man who made him president.

In Mr. Taft's tirade against Mr. Roosevelt at Springfield, Mass., there is nothing essentially new to those who have been on anything more than relations of casual intimacy with the president for some time. It is a fact known to not a few of those closely connected with the campaign of 1908 that even at that time the Taft family was displaying that peculiarly malignant temper toward Mr. Roosevelt which so often takes the place of gratitude in the hearts of those who have benefited by a great service rendered by a friend. It is a fact known to not a few persons that at times during the campaign of 1908 the talk about Mr. Roosevelt among members of the Taft family was such as to cause the greatest uneasiness to the managers of Mr. Taft's campaign for the presidency, lest it should become public and work serious damage to the campaign. Those familiar with the true feeling toward Mr. Roosevelt in the Taft family have been surprised that Mr. Taft has concealed for so long his real attitude toward his benefactor.

From the time last fall when the strong sentiment of the country in favor of Colonel Roosevelt began to manifest itself unmistakably, there has been much talk from Taft sources about Colonel Roosevelt's ingratitude to Mr. Taft. It has been assumed by Mr. Taft's partisans that, because Colonel Roosevelt was instrumental in bringing about Mr. Taft's nomination and election to the presidency, he was therefore bound at all times, under all circumstances and at all costs, to support Mr. Taft's administration and Mr. Taft's renomination and election. That assumption is entirely unwarranted and has no logical justification. The fact is that Taft, the president, is not and never for one moment has been the Taft Mr. Roosevelt and his intimate associates knew as secretary of war and whom they supported as a candidate for the presidency.

While Mr. Taft was seeking the presidency he constantly sought to appear as a stanch and true progressive. But on that November night in 1908 when the count of the votes showed that he had been elected to the presidency, he ceased to make any effort actually to be a progressive. For some time he continued to wear a mask as a progressive, but in the last two years of his presidency he has not kept up even that feeble effort to deceive the people of the country. By his constant association with the Aldriches, the Cannons and the Lorimers, by his ready submission to their influence and advice, by his active support of the measures they devised and favored; by his co-operation with them in matters of patronage, and by his unblushing attempt to coerce the real progressives through the brazen use of federal patronage, he has stamped himself openly as the reactionary which he has always been at heart.

A single illustration will suffice for the demonstration of this proposition. In his speech at Cincinnati, in July, 1908, accepting the nomination for the presidency, Mr. Taft took occasion to reiterate his indorsement of Mr. Roosevelt and to enumerate some of the acts which he regarded as the distinctly beneficial achievements of his predecessor. In that speech he said:

"He (Mr. Roosevelt) recommended the passage of a law, which the Republican convention has since specifically approved, restricting the future issue of stocks and bonds by interstate railways to such as may be authorized by feredal authority. He demonstrated to the people by what he said, by what he recommended to congress, and by what he did, the sincerity of his efforts to command respect for the law, and to save the country from the dangers of a plutocratic government, toward which we were fast tending."

In numerous speeches during the campaign of 1908 Mr. Taft declared his cordial support of Mr. Roosevelt's proposition to secure the enactment of a law controlling the issue of securities by interstate carriers. When he became president, he pretended to make such a law one of the paramount measures of his legislative program. He caused to be prepared, with much advertisement and publicity, a bill purporting to contain provisions aimed at such control of the issue of securities. This bill was drafted by the eminently successful corporation lawyer whom Mr. Taft had placed at the head of the department of justice. The moment that bill was read by the genuine progressives of the senate and house, they denounced its provisions to control the issue of securities as intended really to further the designs of the railroad reactionaries and the special interests whom Mr. Taft has steadily sought to please from the day he was inaugurated.

After a hard fight in the house, the Taft-Wickersham provisions were stricken from the bill and a substitute provision was adopted which at least embodied a recognition of the principle of federal control over the issue of such securties, and was, therefore, a distinct step in advance. When that measure reached the senate, Mr. Taft's allies and cronies there were vastly distributed by this provision. Aldrich, Crane, Penrose, Gallinger and all the other representatives of the special interests in the senate at once protested against it. These were the men with whom Mr. Taft was associating intimately, with whom he was working constantly, and upon whom he was relying for support in the senate.

They were the same men who had most vigorously opposed his nomination when they, like Mr. Roosevelt, believed him to be a real progressive, but already they had learn that his progressiveness was merely a mask worn for the purpose of securing the presidency. They knew now that he was as good a reactionary as any of them and they counted upon his support in defeating this provision for the control of the issue of securities by interstate carriers. They did not count in vain.

With Mr. Taft's knowledge and connivance, they arranged a deal with the Democratic opposition in the senate whereby they not only struck from the bill this provision which was in accordance with the Republican platform and the many speeches of Mr. Taft's campaign, but they stopped the further efforts of the real progressives in the senate to make the railroad bill, of which this provision was a part, a genuinely effective and valuable measure. Then they inserted in the bill as a sop to the public clamor for real legislation a provision for the appointment of a commission which was to determine not the method by which the government was to exerise its right to control the issue of securities by interstate carriers, but whether or not the government had such power. The appointment of this commission was a stultification of the Republican platform and of every speech Mr. Taft had made in support of that platform. It was fair notice to the whole country that from that day forward no faith or credence could be given by the country to any declaration of any Republican platform upon which Mr. Taft might be running for office.

But now, in the face of this incontrovertible fact, and of scores more of exactly similar purport and effect, Mr. Taft has the effrontery to stand before a public audience and denounce Theodore Roosevelt and present himself in the attitude of the one who has the right to feel aggrieved. It is an astounding exhibiton of willingness to deceive the people of the country in the effort to secure office.

THE END OF A PERILOUS RIDE.

Courtship In the Saddle to the Music of Flying Bullets.

By MARTHA M'C.-WILLIAMS.

[Copyright, 1902, by Martha McCulloch-Williams.]

If only Esther had not sung "My Maryland, My Maryland," which she loved best of all the war songs. Her untrained voice was so rich and true it carried half across the bush pasture. She had stolen there with salt for the young horses grazing for safety amid the intricate thickets. They had had none for a month. In the third year of the civil war, to man and beast alike, salt was almost a luxury throughout middle Tennessee. The whole region was debatable land. The bluecoats held the railway towns and turned them into fortresses more or less secure. Over the wide green country road about gray horsemen rode and raided almost at pleasure. Thus salt was among the things reckoned "contraband of war" and to be bought only in such niggard quantities as were marked upon the permits from headquarters.

Between bluecoats and gray, horses had come to be the most uncertain of all possessions. Esther sang because she dared not whistle the regular horse call. She knew Princess, her own mare, would come at sound of her voice and most likely bring the herd pellmell at her heels, since she was easily its queen. She was also thoroughbred, jet black, the last foal of a dam never beaten at four miles. Princess was five years old, Esther seventeen. They had grown up playmates and comrades, each full of tricks and delight in the other.

Esther need not have sung. Her foot was scarcely off the rail fence when Princess came charging, mouth slightly open, ears batted. Five yards off her mistress she stopped short, drooped her head, half wheeled and sidled gently until her withers lay under Esther's hand.

Incautiously she thrust her hand within her huddled apron and brought up some salt grains upon her open palm. Princess licked them savagely, thrust her head fiercely against Esther's breast and made as if to paw her with an angry hoof.

Princess truly loved her mistress, but she was mad with salt hunger, almost the strongest known to the beasts of the field. She caught the apron folds and Esther's left hand between her teeth and backed, rearing slightly and pawing, not viciously, but with light flicking hoofs. To save herself Esther flung her free arm about the mare's neck and swung clear of the ground, saying sternly: "Ho, Princess! Stand! Let go!"

Princess kept backing and pawing. The herd caught the sound and came rushing. She wheeled to meet the rush, with Esther still swinging, and let fly at her mates with both heels. In the shock of impact her teeth shut cruelly upon Esther's hand, but still the girl did not cry out.

She hung facing the mare, so saw nothing else until muscular fingers locked themselves in Princess' foretop and gripped her nostrils hard. Instantly her mouth flew open. Esther snatched away her hand and dropped to earth. For a breath she stood silent, then said, with a stamp of her foot, "Princess, I never thought you could be so mean!"

"Aren't you yourself to blame?" Princess' captor said. He was a tall, well made fellow, with a soldierly air for all his citizen's coat, a pair of keen gray eyes set in a brown face and the dust of hard riding all over him. "Give the salt—at once." Esther obeyed in silence. Neither spoke again until the last grain had been licked up and the beasts were biting the earth where it had lain. Then it was Esther who asked a question. "How does it happen you are here?"

"I came for a horse and crept out of hiding to listen to a song," the man said, smiling. "The song assures me I may tell you I am John Sandford, a scout for Forrest—in plain words, a spy. At daylight this morning I found out something my general ought to know at once. Since then I have ridden my horse down. The poor beast is lying by the thicket yonder. I must have something in his stead—something that can go like the wind."

"You shall not have Princess, though she was so bad," Esther said quickly, locking her arms around the black mare's neck. "Marquise, the brown over there, is almost as fast. Father would give her to you gladly, only he has taken the oath, so you must not ask him. He will not mind you taking her."

"I see. I will come and thank him after the war," Sandford said, laughing. "Now tell me the nearest ford and how I can get to it quickest."

"The bend is nearest—only ten miles off—but you cannot cross there. The Yankees keep pickets in a stockade just by the ford. You will have to strike for the Riffle. That is five miles lower down."

"The Riffle! How shall I get there?"

"Go out that way," Esther said, sweeping her arms southerly. "Strike through the woods to the big road. It is only a mile. Follow it to the crossroads, and there take the left"—

She stopped short. Straight from the south came the grumble of drums, undervoiced by the blurred beat of hoofs.

Sandford's head went up. "Mounted infantry," he said.

"If they know would they be after you?" Esther asked. Sandford nodded.

For a minute he stood silent, then cautiously approached the brown mare, sprang lightly upon her back and said: "Those drums sound my boots and saddle, but it is clear I cannot go down the big road. Is there no other way? Think hard! I must be across the river before tomorrow morning."

"Will they hang you if they catch you?" Esther asked.

Sandford laughed. "That does not so much matter," he said, "though I would rather keep on living. What does matter is telling Mr. Forrest the news. If that can be done"—

He stopped, looking down. Esther shivered slightly. "You mean it will help—help us to fight and win?" she asked. She was a vivid patriot, tensely loyal to her south. If she had been a man she would long ago have been away at the fighting. Something of all this shone in her eyes. Sandford looked straight into them as he answered: "It will help us to win a battle. As to the end, God knows. Now tell me the way."

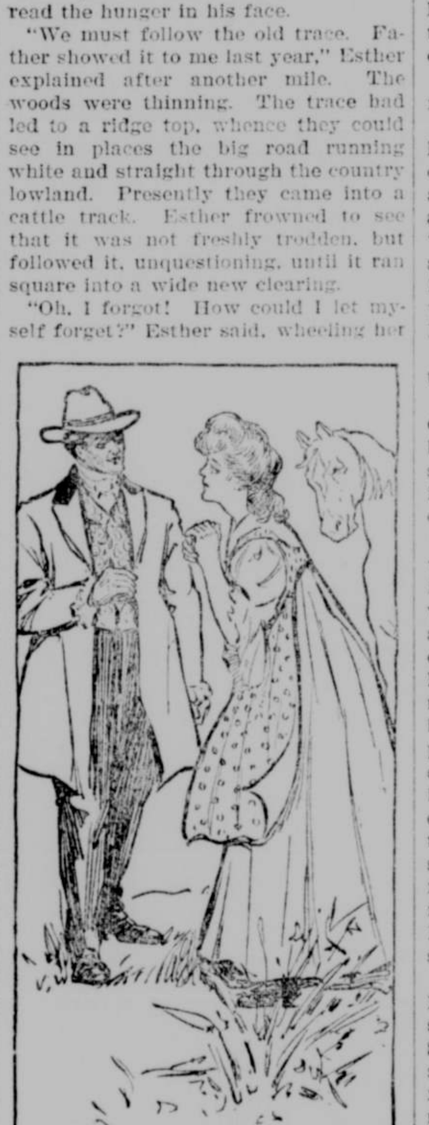
"There is none I can tell you, but I can show you one—a blind trail, woods, roads and cattle tracks," Esther said, scrambling upon her mare's back and wheeling her half about. "Meet me outside the back bars. I shall be there in a little while."

"No, no! You must not think of it. I cannot allow you"—Sandford began. The strengthening drums silenced him. Esther smiled and dashed away.

Twenty minutes after she was at the bars to meet him, sitting straight and light in saddle, as he had known she would ride. Without a word she gave him a parcel. Then he knew she had read the hunger in his face.

"We must follow the old trace. Father showed it to me last year," Esther explained after another mile. The woods were thinning. The trace had led to a ridge top, whence they could see in places the big road running white and straight through the country lowland. Presently they came into a cattle track. Esther frowned to see that it was not freshly trodden, but followed it, unquestioning, until it ran square into a wide new clearing.

"Oh, I forgot! How could I let myself forget?" Esther said, wheeling her horses and motioning Sandford back. "Bill Risley has settled here. He's the only Lincolnite in our end of the county. He and his boys are forever spying. If they saw us they would run right straight to the soldiers"—



"WILL THEY HANG YOU?" ESTHER ASKED.

"They would not have far to go. Look!" Sandford said, waving his hand downward. Through the low road a winding column swept, a column brave in blue and brass, with drums still beating, colors flying. It was the advance guard—only two platoons.

As Sandford and Esther watched them the same thought shaped itself in both minds. They faced each other smiling. Sandford spoke first, with somehow a curious tightness in his throat. "They can never catch us, and the chances are they cannot shoot to hit us."

"No, they cannot catch us—not under five miles. They could not do it at all, only our horses are full of grass," Esther said, smiling in turn, though her face was white. "You can swim?" she said interrogatively. Sandford nodded. Then suddenly he caught himself sharply, lifted his hat and said: "Young lady, you must go home. Only a madman would let you stay longer. Never mind about me. It's only life or death."

"And maybe a battle lost," Esther said, her color coming in a rush. "I will not go back. Follow me! We must beat them to the crossroads."

Wheeling, she went arrow-wise through the clearing. Down, down they swept into the big road a hundred yards in front of the blue column. Sandford flung his weight forward, shouting to Esther, "Low—stoop low!" at the same time trailing in behind her so as to shield her as much as he might.

Trot! Gallop! Charge! he heard the bugle blow behind. He heard, too, the thunder of quickening hoofs. But the beat was not in rhythm with their own horses—it was slower, more ponderous. If only their beasts held speed in five minutes they would be safe from bullets. Overhead bullets whined fretfully, then struck, cutting roadside bows or kicking up spurts of dry, white dust.

"We are leaving them! Keep straight on!" Sandford panted as they came to the second milepost. Esther answered only by a little shake of the head. "We must turn!" she said as Sandford made to touch her hand. "The road goes uphill beyond the crossroads. We could not keep ahead. We have come too fast."

"Tell me the way and let me go alone," Sandford entreated. Again Esther shook her head.

"I cannot tell you," she said. "No; we must not follow the crossroads—the woods again. Two miles through them we shall strike the river."

The road began to rise. Esther leaned forward half the length of Princess' neck. The horses were dripping sweat, their pace slackening sensibly. She knew that even without the mounting roar of pursuit. Dropping shots still punctuated the roar. Sandford turned to look. The foremost file was just half a mile from them.

"This way!" Esther cried, urging Princess into tangled growth. The mare balked the least bit and even made to rear. A touch of the whip sent her forward, but fifty yards in Esther drew her to a walk, saying to Sandford very low: "Ride slow. If they cannot see or hear us they will not know which road to take."

One horse trod in the other's tracks, quite as though they felt the need of caution. It was slow work, but in an hour they stood still, breathing heavily, in the river bottom meadows that stretched quite to the waterside. The river itself showed shrunken and fitful between high banks. Another big road ran along the margin of it. Over the stream there were frowning bluffs, sheerly precipitous. The roadway was worn down yards below the meadow level. Thus the two who rode across the grass were unaware of what passed along it.

They came swiftly, yet soberly. Sandford raised Esther's hand to his lips.

"You have saved my life—and more," he said slowly, then burst out impetuously: "But please, please, never do it again! No man's life is worth it. All along I have been asking myself, 'What if she were your sister?' You are a heroine, but please go straight home. If I was risking only life I would take you there at all hazards. Even as it is"—

"I am going!" Esther broke in, white to the lips.

They had come to the river road. Glancing along it, they saw squads of bluecoated horsemen dotting its whole stretch. The scout was caught fairly in a trap from which there was but one way out—the river.

"In there!" Esther cried, waving toward the stream. Sandford caught her reins. "With you—not otherwise!" he said. Instantly he urged the animals forward. The nearest bluecoats, fifty yards off, sent a hail of lead after them. Before they could reload the horses were in deep water, breasting it gallantly. Sandford slipped from his horse, dragged Esther out of the saddle and held her in the hollow of his arm, the while with his other hand he guided the horses quartering downstream. Hanging thus, shielded from the bullets, he had a fair hope of escape. But less than midstream a ball ripped through poor Marquise's backbone and sent her screaming to the bottom.

"Hold to the saddle! You must, else I shall go straight back and give myself up," Sandford said imperatively. Soldiers were plunging in after them—stronger swimmers it might be, with fresher horses. He took the checkrein in his teeth and swam beside Princess, giving her her head, but keeping her to the course. Esther clung obediently just where he had set her hands.

And then he knew. Here was the one woman in all the world for him, although he had never heard her name. Across the blinding consciousness he heard a shout, hoarse, happy, many keyed "Sur-r-render, Johnny Reb! Game's up! Thar blows the gunboat!"

He faced about and drew Esther to his breast, whispering, "Darling, forgive!" Princess snatched her freed head high, turned half about and struck bottom. They had been swimming for yards along the margin of a submerged ledge. In a twinkling Sandford had crowded Esther into the saddle and was wading waist deep beside Princess. Half a mile downstream he heard the puffing gunboat.

The ledge ran down to the bluff's end. A shell struck the woods before the swimmers gained them. Oh, joy! Another shot echoed the shell, a shout from out the wooded south bank. And over it there rose the familiar yell, not faint and quavering, but in lusty strength from 500 throats. Mr. Forrest had a knack of being on the spot when wanted. Solid shot soon persuaded the gunboat that it might be better occupied elsewhere.

It panted off between banks of cheering blue and yelling gray. If the graycoats yelled in greeting to their comrade, what shall one say of what they did when the whole story was told? But when, three hours later, in face of the whole brigade, there was a wedding, at which Mr. Forrest himself gave away the bride, nobody made a sound. Every head was bared, and more than half of those looking on saw bride and bridegroom through dim eyes. The bride went straight home, under flag of truce, by way of Bellsboro, where the Federal commander, a lover of true romances, turned out the guard in her honor and gave her a silver cup, her only wedding present.

Mrs. John Sandford has silver a-plenty, but none so treasured as that plain, thin bit. A proud and happy grandmother, she loves to tell the story of it to some little lads whose greatest ambition is to grow up soldiers like grandpapa and grandmamma.

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

Warning to Natural Gas Customesr.

Owing to the severe cold weather this winter and the ground being frozen deeper than usual and as the service lines from the street to the houses are not more than twelve or eighteen hicnes in depth, we find in several cases where the frost is deeper than the service lines there is more or less danger of the lines pulling part and causing leaks.

The Gas Company is doing everything possible to prevent any leaks of this kind and will take this opportunity to notify all customers of Natural Gas, to use every precaution against accidents and should they detect the odor of gas at any time, to immediately shut off the gas at the meter and notify the Gas Company at once. We particularly caution you not to look for a leak with a light.

Opportunity for Investment.

All persons who are interested in improving their stock of horses or making an investment by buying stock in a stallion, will surely profit by coming to Oakland and seeing the best three year old imported Percheron colt that has ever been shown in this community. His color is very dark gray; weight, 1935 pounds. For bone and muscle he is unsurpassed.

In taking a share in this horse you are not helping to pay a bonus share for someone else or $50 for someone helping to sell him. Eight shares at $200 each on three equal annual payments, will buy this magnificent colt. The horse is guaranteed to be a sure foal getter and in case of death we furnish another stallion for breeding free for three years.

The horse is at the stable of L. J Brown for sale of shares or for service.

MORERI II,

20279.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

MEMORIAL DAY IN OAKLAND.

Annual Decoration of the Graves of the Honored Dead.

Crook Post No. 35, Grand Army of the Republic, desires that there be a general turnout of the citizens, public school children, Knights of Pythias and all other organized bodies of the town, and visitors from the surrounding country are also invited to participate with the Post on Memorial Day, Thursday, May 30th, in decorating the graves of the noble dead who have answered the last roll call and are now resting in our cemeteries.

Crook Post will assemble at Sturgiss' drug store at 10 o'clock a. m., and at 10.30 proceed to the cemetery where the beautiful ritual of the order will be carried out and an address will be delivered by Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker.

Donations of flowers will be thankfully received and can be left at Sturgiss' drug store.

By order of the Post,

A. G. STURGISS, Commander.
J. A. HAYDEN, Adjutant.

Riding Party Reaches Oakland.

Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth, accompanied by three guests in the persons of Lieutenants Edward St. John Greble and Byron A. Long, of the army, and Miss Jeanette Allen, daughter of Major and Mrs. Allen, arrived in Oakland on their thousand mile journey from Washington, D. C., to Geneseo, N. Y., where is located Mrs. Wadsworth's summer home. The party was accompanied from Washington as far as Hot Springs, Va., by Miss Helen Taft, from which point she returned to Washington. After remaining in Oakland over night Mrs. Wadsworth and party continued their journey.

FRANK RATHBUN ELECTED COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT

Mr. Browning will Retire from the Position August 1st.

The new school board for Garrett county met for its first session last Saturday morning. The members are Mr. C. E. Ellithrop, of Bittinger; Mr. P. H. Yost, of near Grantsville; and Joseph T. Glotfelty, of near Oakland.

Mr. Glotfelty was placed in nomination for the presidency of the board and his election immediately followed. He is the new member of the board, receiving his appointment from Governor Goldsborough, having qualified on Saturday morning before the Clerk of the Circuit Court, Mr. E. Z. Tower, from whom he received his commission.

The next official to be elected to complete the organization was one to serve as secretary and treasurer of the board, as well as to serve as superintendent of the schools of the county. Mr. Franklin E. Rathbun, of Mountain Lake Park, was placed in nomination and unanimously elected. President Glotfelty suggested that the salary of that official be $1,600 per annum, with a clerk-hire allowance of $200 per year. This was put into the form of a motion by Mr. Ellithorp, the minority member, seconed by Mr. Yost and carried. This $1,800 is the same amount spent for administrative services as has prevailed for several years in the county. Mr. Rathbun enters upon his duties at the expiration of the term of Supt. E. A. Browning, which according to the law is August 1st.

The date for the examination of those teachers whose certificates expire this year as well as for those who hold no certificates at all, was set for Friday and Saturday, July 18th and 19th. It was ordered to be held at three places in the county: Oakland, Grantsville and Accident, the same examination for all three places, all subjects thereof being held simultaneously. This date was selected because it is the close of the final normal school of the county. It will be conducted by Supt. Browning, Supt.-elect Rathbun and an assistant.

The annual institute date to be suggested to the State Board of Education was ordered for the week immediately preceding the opening of all the schools of the county—September 9th to the 13th inclusive. This is to be conducted by the superintendent-elect. The date, therefore, for the opening of school next fall is set for Monday, September 16th.

The trustees of the various schools of the county had been appointed the day immediately preceding this meeting by the old board. This list was ordered printed at the office of The Mountain Democrat and will soon be ready for distribution.

The new board entered upon its work with an energy and interest and with a determined spirit to make the educational work of the county the best that it possibly can with the facilities at its command. And this enthusiasm united with the hearty cooperation of all the citizens of the county should keep up and advance the good work of our public schools in making a higher citizenship.

COMMITTEE.

STATE CONVENTION HONORED GARRETT COUNTIAN

Elected Mr. Scott T. Jones Delegate To National Convention.

The Republican State Convention of Maryland, which met in Albaugh's Theatre, Baltimore, Tuesday for the purpose of electing delegates to the National Republican Convention to be held in Chicago on June 18th, was largely attended and the proceedings throughout were harmonious.

Resolutions commending the administration of President Taft and pledging the delegates to the National Convention to use every effort in their power to secure the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt as the Republican standard bearer, were adopted.

Garrett county was honored in the selection of one of her eminent citizens, in the person of Mr. Scott T. Jones as one of the twelve district delegates from the State. Mr. Galen L. Tait, of Montgomery county, is Mr. Jones' associate from the Sixth Congressional District.

The Delegates-at-large from Maryland are Governor Goldsborough. Hon. George L. Wellington, W. C. Carrington and W. H. Warburton.

ROBBERY AT SWANTON

Two Young Men Arsested and Are In Jail.

Two young men, Marshall Thorp and Elmer Wilt, of near Swanton, were arrested at Westernport by a deputy sheriff of Allegany county, on a warrant charging them with having broken into and robbed the Westernport Mercantile Company's store at Swanton on Friday night, carrying away with them jewelry, cutlery, shoes and other goods valued at more the a hundred dollars.

Following the arrest of the parties they were brought to Oakland and placed in jail after a hearing before Justice John C. Dunham to await the action of the grand jury next month.

At the homes of the men much of the plunder they took from the store was recovered.

Will Remodel B. & O. Station At Piedmont, W. Va.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has awarded to Roydhouse-Arey Company, of Philadelphia, a contract for remodeling the passenger station at Piedmont, W. Va., at a cost of approximately $7,000. A large, well finished general waiting room, 28 feet by 50 feet, will be provided with tile floors. Smoking and women's rooms, with tile floors, will also be provided, and ample sanitary toilet facilities. The office and baggage facilities will be improved. These changes will greatly add to the appearance and usefulness of the station at Piedmont.

The plans and specifications were prepared by M. A. Long, the company's architect, who will have direct supervision of the improvement.

Locating in Grantsville.

W. J. Wright, for many years one of the leading farmers of Addison township, sold his farm recently to Durst Bros. (George and Clarence) of Elk Lick township, and will make his home for the time being in Grantsville, Md., having rented jointly with Charles H. Bill the old Samuel J. Beachy residence at the west end of Grantsville. Mr. Wright had a public sale April 9th and disposed of over $3,000 worth of personal property, including four horses, which brought in the aggregate $1,001. The purchasers of these fine animals were Guerney F. Shaw of Grantsville, Chas. Schlossnagle and John Hetrick of Cove, and J. C. Wright of Preston county, W. Va. The farm sold by Mr. Wright to the Durst Bros. is known as the old S. M. Ringer place, situated 4½ miles northwest of Grantsville on Negro mountain, Mr. Wright lived there 22 years. Durst Bros. took possession April 10th.

BALTO. & OHIO CO-OPERATING WITH RED CROSS

Has Just Completed A Course of First Aid To Injured Instruction.

Co-operation with the American Red Cross Society and futhering the ends of its campaign of safety to employes and the traveling public, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has completed a two-week's course of instruction in First Aid to injured at terminal points east of Pittsburg. The First Aid car of the Red Cross, in charge of Dr. M. J. Shields, field representative of the society, conducted meetings which were well attended by railroad men in train service, shop mechanics and other employes who are liable to injury in their work.

The First Aid car visited Pittsburgh, Connellsville, Rockwood, Cumberland, Harper's Ferry, Martinsburg and Brunswick, meetings being held in the car, railroad shops, and local halls. At the 25 meetings 2,225 railroad men were present and were instructed in emergency treatment of accidents, how to arrest the flow of blood, apply temporary bandages and splints when fractures are sustained, resuscitate the injured and set up artificial respiration.

The chairmen of the local Safety Committee accompanied the car over each division and with the assistance of the local railroad surgeon organized First Aid corps among the employes for assisting in the practical demonstration of the relief work.

A railroad man was placed on the temporary operating table and bandaged by his fellow employes in the most effectual manner to afford emergency relief until the arrival of a sergeon. Instruction was given in making stretchers out of jackets worn by workmen, the jackets being suspended between crowbars, piping and other material. It was also shown how to cope with an injury from electrical shock, breaking the contact with the wire and rendering temporary aid to the victim. The railroad men were also shown how to properly carry an injured person when there is no material available from which to make a stretcher.

The First Aid campaign under the auspices of the Red Cross Society will be extended to reach every division of the Baltimore and Ohio system. An itinerary of this kind is being prepared. The First Aid car will remain in Washington until the close of the International Conference of the Red cross, May 7 to 17, after which the trip over the Baltimore and Ohio system will be continued.

District Assessors and Sub-Registrars Appointed.

At the meeting of the Board of County Commissioners held last week the following were appointed district assessors: Herman Steiding, J. M. Lowdermilk, James Ross, Jacob Stump, W. M. Frazee, S. G. Savage, David Durst, Abraham Moon, Charles Layman, L. T. Friend, James Merrill, Urner Beachy, L. C. Bray, George W. Legge, Sr.

The commissioners also appointed Dr. N. I. Broadwater physician to the jail and secretary to the Board of Health. Sub-registrars of vital statistics were also appointed as follows: George W. Moon, Louis Littman, Asa E. Riley, J. Milton Fike, L. C. Fike, Henry Baker, John W. Stark, H. M. Kemp, G. L. Michaels, Henry Kahl, Conrad Speicher, Homer Brenneman, Marshall Frankhouser, Samuel Sines, Chas. A. Tower, E. E. Friend, Robert Lathrum, N. B. Harvey, I. W. Abernathy, Thomas H. Layman, Thomas Crowe, S. P. Specht, Mahlon Schooley, Lafayette Moon, George B. Brown, W. H. Jacobs, Jonas Weitzel, Mrs. J. B. Emory, L. C. Bray, Mrs. Sue B. Laughlin, S. K. Adams, M. D. Friend.

FACT AND COMMENT ON FINANCE AND BUSINESS.

We all work for reward. The multi-millionaire often despises money but covets power. Others aspire to social recognition. Most of us strive to gain an increasing amount of material recompense for our services, for the greater the reward the more "comfortable" we can make life for ourselves and those associated with us. The muiti-millionaire may be as unselfish as the minister who earns a thousand dollars a year, and apparently gives away twice that sum. Altruism and poverty are not necessarily twin brothers. Neither are plutocracy and grasping greed. Having swung away from the worship of Croesus, we are apt to go to the opposite extreme. The more we see of all classes—the very rich, the moderately so, the less well-to-do and the very poor—the more we are convinced that the size of a man's bank account bears little relation to the quality of his soul.

Is it not just as uncalled for to condemn a man to-day because he is rich as it was to worship him years ago?

But this little excursion does not bring us to the particular point to be discussed. This is the rise in wages that is going on here, there and everywhere. We are so constituted—fortunately—that when we hear of workers demanding more pay our sympathies involuntarily go out to the underdog. "By all means give them an increase" we either mentally or orally remark. The sentiment as laudable. It is most humane. It does credit to our hearts. But what of our heads? Do the public realize that they must pay every extra dollar granted the textile workers, the miners, the railway engineers and every other set of employes?

When the question of advancing wages arise the query each one of us should put to ourself is not "Should the employers grant the increase?" It is "Should we grant the increase asked?" For we—you and I and every other user of the things needful for this life—have in the long run to settle the wage sheet.

We are not arguing against advance—that is not the matter under consideration. We simply want to have bearings of the whole problem propeily understood. The burden is not merely one for the employer to bear. You must bear your share. Are you prepared to pay the additional charge that will be made for your food stuffs, your fuel, building materials, etc., etc.,? If so, then you can with good grace advocate the granting of the concessions that are being asked by so many workers in various lines. But do not go on the assumption that the fight is solely between the employer and the employe. You are the employer. The services rendered, the things made, or mined, or transported are not for the use of the individuals or companies paying out the wages; they are for your use and you do the paying.

Have you ever been in a restaurant with some one who took a delight in wasting such things as they didn't have to pay for directly? Remonstrance would bring the retort that it didn't matter, as no charge could be made. No? Who stands the needless, wicked loss? The proprietor? Not for an instant! The cost is written into your bill, and not only into your bill, but into the bill of every other patron. The stuff wasted has to be paid for by somebody, hasn't it?

Each one of us is part and parcel of that great machine, the world, and though we cannot perhaps trace our connection with most of the economic happenings do react upon the condition of each one of us. The "free" bread and butter wasted in the restaurant, like my barber friend's home-made pickles, all enter into economic calculations. So, when we read that this and the next class of labor want more pay, let us ask whether we ought to grant it. If, after realizing clearly our relation to the matter, we still favor the side of generosity, all the more praise is due us. Only remember we cannot "soak" the bosses with-out "soaking" ourselves. All this is very elementary, of course, but it may not be altogether untimely.

Saw Mill Burned.

The sawmill of Brenneman Bros., located near Bittinger, and which had been in operation for several months, was burned to the ground together with a large lot of valuable lumber stacked near the mill, and no one was about the mill at the time of the fire which occured after midnight. The loss will be over one thousand dollars with no insurance.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Mr. Weimer's Deferred Answer to Mr. Robinson's Communication.

To the Editor of The Republican:

DEAR SIR—Mr. Robinson is insisting that I am responsible for the defeat of Senator Speicher's Oakland Local Option Bill, does me too much honor. The facts are as I stated before: The bill was not reported from the Committee on Temperance, and if it had been, a two-thirds vote could have suspended the rules and passed it. If the Temperance committee smothered the bill because of my expressed opposition then my influence with the committee was such that I wish I could have used it in a worthier cause. No member of that committee consulted me about the matter and if I am responsible it is on the ground that a statement from somebody that I opposed the bill threw the committee on Temperance into a state of consternation, in the midst of which they threw up their hands and said: "It is useless to report the bill. Weimer will oppose it; let it die in the committee room and let us see to it that Robinson, the great reporter, officiates at its funeral with special care to show the fatal stab from Weimer's hand."

Robinson has presided at the obsequies of the bill with due attention to my fatal wound, and done this, so he would have us believe at his own expense. This is truly magnanimous. Professional reporters are generally paid so much a column for their effusions, but Robinson writes nearly five columns of matter which he publishes in each of our three Oakland papers at so much per column at his own expense just for the gratification of his righteous feeling that the voters of Garrett county ought to know the angelic purity of Senator Speicher's devotion to temperance and his persistent, unwearied endeavors for legislation in its interests as well as to show Weimer's errors. This lofty patriotism is so unusual that I was led to infer that in some way Senator Speicher had something to do with the matter. Mr. Robinson says that "Senator Speicher is in no way connected with the said article either in inspiring its publication or suggesting and of its statements." He would have us believe that the forty dollars, more or less, required to pay for the printing of the articles was cheerfully paid by himself. I do not believe it. There is a colored gentlemen in the woodpile somewhere. I do not say that Senator Speicher furnished the money. I do not know any thing about it. I do not say that the "wet" opponents of the Local Option Bill whom Senator Speicher served so faithfully paid for this glowing defense of their savior. I do not know where this money came from. It does seem unreasonable that Mr. Robinson should spend so much labor in writing these orticles and then pay so much for printing them just for the pleasure of misrepresenting both Senator Speicher and myself and by so doing seek to make Senator Speicher's perfidious treachery to a pledge, which he denies, redound to his glory and my shame. I admit that such a course on the part of Mr. Robinson is possible.

My conduct with reference to the State-wide Local Option Bill was consistent with my pledge and principles.

1. I did every thing I could to have the bill reported from the Committee on Temperance at an early date so that deliberate action could be taken upon it.

2. I was ready at any time and eager to support the bill.

3. I was opposed to any amendment to the bill.

4. An amendment was offered which would change the bill by providing that Baltimore city, Baltimore, county, Anne Arundel county, Allegany county, St. Mary's county, Charles county, Washington county, Ellicott City and the city of Havre de Grace vote on this question as entire units and not by districts and wards. By this amendment the bill was not changed in the slightest particular excepting for six counties and three cities. It did not affect Garrett county nor any county not mentioned in the amendment. It still left the bill a STATE WIDE LOCAL OPTION BILL. In all this discussion let this not be forgotten. THIS BILL AS AMENDED PLACED EVERY SQUARE FOOT OF THE TERRITORY OF THE STATE UNDER LOCAL OPTION. I voted against the amendment which was lost.

5. One of the Delegates the then moved to reconsider the amendment stating that if the amendment was not accepted he would move to lay the bill on the table and he had assurance from two others that they would vote with him. These three votes had the balance of power. If they voted against the bill it was lost and no temperance legislation could be secured this year. Many of the delegates like myself regretted the situation, but felt that the bill thus amended would be strong, effective and a splendid temperance advance. Accordingly we voted for the amendment which carried. The bill thus amended passed the house by a splendid majority, the vote being 62 to 37.

It is interesting to note that of the delegates who were supporting the original bill, from the city of Baltimore and from every county or section that was affected by the amendment, every one with a single exception voted for the amendment when it came up the second time. In voting for the amendment and then for the amended bill I felt that I was doing the best that could be done under the circumstances. After conscientiously reviewing the whole situation I am still of the same opinion. Had the bill passed the Senate, Garrett county would soon have been without a saloon. No one will say that the bill I voted for did not provide the means to accomplish this much.

How did the bill fare in the Senate? Before studying this question let it be understood that the Senate was so evenly divided on this subject that on several important contests relative to the fate of this bill ONE VOTE was decisive. It was here that Senator Speicher made his speech before the Senate. That he voted as a "wet" observe his votes:

1. When the amended bill passed the House and before it could be sent to the Senate so that body could take early action, one of the so called "wet" Senators moved that the Senate adjourn until Monday at twelve o'clock noon. This was on Saturday at two oclock P. M. The object of the "wets" in seeking this recess was presumably to kill time and also to give the "wets" a chance to work their plans. The motion carried, Senator Speicher voting with the "wets", see Senate Journal page 1334

2. Fearing that the "wets" would seek to prevent the bill coming to a vote by consuming time with talk and other filibustering methods one of the "drys" sought to amend the rules so that unlimited debate and amendment could be avoided and the bill brought to a vote. The "wets" opposed this motion. The Chair referred this Order to the Committee on rules, whereupon the author appealed from the decision of the Chair. The "wets" sustained the Chair by a vote of 13 to 12. Mr. Speicher voted with the "wets" and his vote was decisive. This was Monday, March 25, see Senate Journal page 1338,

3. On Thursday March 28 upon an order "That the Committee on Temperance be directed to report immediately to the Senate House bill No. 31 now in that Committee" the order was rejected by a vote of 12 to 15. Mr. Speicher voted with the "wets." See Senate Journal page 1763.

4. When on Friday, March 29, the Local Option bill was reported by the committee, the committee, offered two amendments, the first was as follows: "Nothing in this act shall apply to Baltimore, city Baltimore county, Anne Arundel county, Allegany county, Charles county, St. Mary's county and Ellicott City." Should this amendment pass, the bill which was still a State-wide Local Option bill as it came from the House, would provide that a large area of the State would be without Local Option, an area exceedingly important because therein dwell more than half the people of the State. The amendment passed by a vote of 14 to 13. Senator Speicher voted with the "wets." See Senate Journal, page 1005. If Senator Speicher had voted with the "drys" the amendment would have been lost. His vote was decisive. If Maryland has not now a State-wide Local Option Law it owes that fact to the vote of the Senator from Garrett county, who went to the Senate pledged to vote for and use his best endeavors to have enacted into law a State-wide Local Option bill. Here is an exact copy of his signed pledge.

"We the undersigned Republican candidates for the State Senate and House of Delegates, respectively, hereby pledge ourselves, if elected, to vote for and use our best endeavors to have enacted into law a State-wide Local Option bill.

(Signed) HARVEY J. SPEICHER.
Candidates for State Senate.

How Senator Speicher under such a pledge could vote for the amendment as he did I leave for him to explain to his constituents. It is too much for me. In his speech before the Senate, March 27 Senator Speicher repeatedly denied having made this pledge. He said "I owe to the people of my State and Conty to make clear to them what the Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon said in regard to my election two years ago on a clear pledge to support the Local Option bill is untrue and without any foundation.

Speaking of a conversation he had with a member of the Anti-Saloon League in Oakland before his election he says "I told him the people of my county knew where I was on the temperance question and if they were not willing to trust me in regard to these matters without pledging myself to the Anti-Saloon League people, they had a perfect right to vote for some other candidate, and that you may be able to beat me, but I am not willing to be pledged; that if I go to the Senate to serve my people I am going without having my hands tied." See Senate Journal pages 1661, 1662 and 1663.

These statements in that speech reveal Senator Speicher's consciousness that his vote was an infraction of his signed pledge. For the sake of a temporary consistency he denied the signing of his pledge. This may have bamboozled the Senate for the time, but I am mistaken in his constituents if they condone this wrong and its attendant hypocrisy. The pledge with Senator Speicher's signature has not been destroyed. It can be produced at any time.

Amendment No. 2. was as follows: "And the town of Oakland in Garrett county shall be treated as an entire political subdivision." This amendment was adopted. Senator Speicher voted with the "wets." See Senate Journal, page 1889.

Thus amended the bill passed the Senate. It was so utterly crippled and useless that when it was returned to the House for action on the amendments the whole thing was indifferently laid on the table. Now in the light of this conduct on the part of Senator Speicher let up return to his Oakland Local Option bill which provided that the corporate town of Oakland should have the right to decide by ballot whether they want the saloon or not. Mr. Robinson declares that Senator Speicher urged the passage of this bill "In order that whatever might happen to the State-wide bill he would still be able to give the wet territory of his County the privileges they would have otherwise have lost."

It looks beautiful, does it not? Yes, put in that way it looks beautiful, but put in the light of Senator Speicher's record and the facts in the case it stinks. We have looked at the record. What are the facts in the case? It is well known that in the election in Oakland for several years where the question of temperance was involved the "wets" have had the majority. I have in mind now two or three instances where this was strikingly true, and it seems apparent to those who know conditions here that a vote on this question confined to the town of Oakland would mean defeat to the temperance people. Now Senator Speicher either knew this state of affairs or he did not know it. If he did know it his conduct was despicable, if did not know the situation here he should have come to those living here and advised with them. I could have told him at once that his bill was no good; that it would not give relief to Oakland. This is what I meant by saying that he should not have introduced the bill without consulting Oakland people. I admit that I felt outraged by such conduct on the part of the men who had played so false to all our hopes and expectations for temperance legislation against his signed pledge. I did oppose his bill; I could not conscientiously do otherwise. If it were to do over again I would oppose his bill. The only way to make Oakland dry is to have a county-wide local option vote. What the good people of Garrett county want as I understand it is a chance for a county-wide vote as to whether their county seat shall be dry or not. Senator Speicher must have known that and if he did he could have offered a bill striking out the exemption from the splendid county measure which is now in force throughout the rest of the county. This is exactly what the "wets" did not want done. This is exactly what Senator Speicher did not do. If the Senator really wanted Oakland and his own home town to go dry he really ought to have come in out of the "wet."

Early in the season I had proposed to Senator Speicher that I should offer a bill to repeal the exemption of Oakland from the county law, but he promptly assured me that he would not let it go through the Senate on the ground that it was not fair to force the saloons out of Oakland by a vote of the county. In the light of Senator Speicher's record and the facts in the case this Oakland bill does not look so beautiful. It looks like a dirty insulting sop to his temperance constituents who had reason to suppose he had at least manhood enough to keep his signed pledge. The whole action looks like a dastardly reflection on the intelligence of his constituents.

I have explained my conduct as plainly as I know how. I regret, indeed, the defeat of our Local Option bill. I deeply regret that there is no redress for Oakland. I regret that Mr. Robinson has singled me out for his attack and thus brought me under necessity of replying. I regret that in order to show the ground of my conduct I have been obliged to call attention to Senator Speicher's conduct as it has impressed me. I have no personal feeling of unkindness for him. I cannot but feel profound regret that my state and county should have been deprived of a Local Option law by the vote of a senator from Garrett county.

Yours truly,
E. A. WEIMER.

"Taxpayer" Wants to Know Who is Responsible.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Will you be kind enough to enlighten one of your readers as to who is responsible for some of the Governor's appointments for Garrett county? There are others, I am sure, who feel interested to know.

Have we not in the town of Oakland and in Garrett county enough respectable, honest, moral and decent men to fill the offices that come our way?

This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

Senator and Mrs. Harvey J. Speicher and youngest son and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Speicher and two little daughters came down from their homes at Accident, Md., in their large touring car and spent Sunday very pleasantly as guests of their wives' parents, Eld. and Mrs. Joel Gnagey, who reside a short distance west of this city.—Meyersdale Republican.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Miller, of Washington, D. C., came to Oakland Thursday night and on Friday they went down to Accident to attend the funeral of Mrs. Catharine Turney, whose death occurred there on Thursday morning at an early hour. Mrs. Turney was aged eighty-four years and leaves surviving her a number of children, among them being Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Charles T. Glotfelty.

The Grantsville correspondent of the Meyersdale Republican related a sad incident in her correspondence with that paper last week when she chronicled the illness of "Miss Wilda Getty, daughter of Banker J. O. Getty, who has been suffering with a severe affection of the eyes which has necessitated her remaining in a darkened room during all the hours of sunlight, only being permitted out of her room after sundown with a protector over her eyes. Miss Getty was obliged to give up school the greater part of the winter owing to her eyes, but after using dark glasses she felt hopeful of improvement. Now, however, a flash of light causes her intense pain and to one of her merry, active disposition, this enforced confinement is exceedingly irksome. Her many friends hope for her speedy and complete recovery.

CLEAN-UP DAYS.

Today and Tomorrow Have Been Designated by the Civic Club.

The Civic Club, that body of energetic ladies of Oakland whose efforts for the beautifying of Oakland have been crowned to some degree with success, are not weary in well doing, but have redoubled their efforts to make Oakland a "spotless town" by designating today and tomorrow general clean-up days.

By dodgers placed in each dwelling and at the places of business in town property owners and tenants are requested to place all rubbish and the winter accumulation of trash in barrels or boxes and have them in the alleys or other handy places so that the teamsters may not be delayed in collecting the same.

Concerted action by all the residents of Oakland will be appreciated by the ladies and the residents of Oakland who take pride in their properties and the general appearance of the town.

Encountered Snow Storm (?)

When the South Cumberland correspondents of the two Cumberland papers having nothing else with which to fill space they write of weather conditions prevailing in the Glades, which according to the newspaper men of Cumberland extend from a mile east of Mountain Lake Park to and including Oakland. Monday's Cumberland Times, for lack of a space filler, used the following dope relative to the prevailing (?) weather here Sunday night:

Railroad men arriving over the Third Division this morning report that a snow storm was encountered in the Glades near Oakland last night and that upwards of two inches of snow fell during the storm. The snow did not lay on the ground but accumulated on boards and the leaves of trees. The weather was biting cold. On apple trees which are all in blossoms at this place the snow hung in clusters, and it is generally believed that great damage has been done.

O. H. S. Notes.

We feel sure that every person will rejoice with us in the fact that the high school is out of debt. The following bills have been paid:

Piano	$250.00
Papering and painting	28.00
Pictures and framing	29.50
Gas lights	12.00
Window shades, etc.	3.60
Total amount expended	$323.10

The members of the faculty and the student body wish to thank each person who so generously aided in defraying these expenses. We should be glad to have every person in the community see the improvements that have been made in our surroundings.

A diploma of honor will be presented to each pupil who has a record for perfect attendance for the year. At the present time we have three who have been neither absent nor tardy during the school year: Harold Harned, Walter Dawson and George Queer. Also a diploma of honor will be presented to the pupil making the highest average in each class:

The botany class has been very enthusiastic. Mr. Harned has offered a prize to the student who has done the neatest mounting and has the most accurate analysis. The prize to consist of a good magnifying glass and a book, "How to Know the Wild Flowers," by Mrs. William Starr Dana. This is an excellent book, and the person receiving it may justly feel proud. The judges are Mrs. Totten, Mrs. Waters and Mr. Loraditch.

Next Friday evening the principal will entertain the members of the senior class and the faculty at the home of Mrs Waters.

The Oakland Normal school will open June 10th and close July 19th. The instructors will be C. Edward Bender and Capt. Sanner.

The teachers' examination will be held at the close of the Normal.

A base ball game will be played Monday afternoon, between the O. H. S. team and the Terra Alta team at Oakland.

Last week we unintentionally omitted from the list of those neither absent nor tardy the name of Walter Dawson.

Tuesday morning Mr. N. U. Bond visited the school and gave a very interesting talk about life in certain sections of our country, which was greatly enjoyed by all.

The O. H. S. will close Friday, May 17th, and in the afternoon the following program will be given: Song by society; instrumental solo, Dottie Doman; recitation, Elliott Shircliffe; impromptu speeches, four members of the O. H. S.; violin duet, Louis Littman, Glen Martin; wit and humor, Playford Naylor; German song by German class; reading, Ruth Michael; song by school; recitation, Vernon Lyon; song by faculty; recitation, Elizabeth Chance; song by school.

Mr. Property Owner or Contractor. If you need Paint for any purpose it will pay you to write me for samples and prices before buying, on account of the money saving to you, as well as the high quality of the goods. Also Asphalt Roofing, on liberal terms to responsible people. Address,

RAFTER,
Kitzmiller, Md.

There will be no more bonus offers made. Nothing better will be presented during the contest.

The three 5-year subscriptions may be for either one, two or three parties.

The two 20-year subscriptions may be for either one or two parties.

Rest assured the piano will please you. That is a certainty. It will take work to win, but the contestants in the Republican contest are workers as they have already demonstrated. Now, let us see who will go to work and win. The sooner they begin to hustle for the finish the more votes they will have on the last day. Remember the busy bee: it starts early.

The election of Prof. F. E. Rathbun, of Mountain Lake Park, to the Superintendency of the public schools of Garrett county, by the School Commissioners, is commendable and is pleasing to the whole people of the county whose servant as a public official Mr. Rathbun will soon become. His election to this most important office is a recognition of his scholarly attainments as well as his executive abilities and the Board of School Commissioners have earned for themselves the approbation of the friends of public instruction in making Mr. Rathbun their choice.

Repairing Pike Bridges.

The work of repairing National Pike bridges is still going on. A stone wall, with handsome cement tops, has just been completed at the small bridge near Tressler's on the east end of town, and is a beautiful piece of workmanship, perfect in every detail. Below the bridge near the side, another wall has been built to prevent the water which passes through the culvert from spreading over the field, thus making the culvert protection of the most compact substantial kind, impregnable to floods. The workmen have moved their toolhouse farther west and are now engaged on the bridge near the sulphur well.—Meyersdale Republican.

THE DEATH RECORD

CONRAD J. QUEER.

Conrad J. Queer, a well known and highly respected resident of Brothersvalley township, died at his home Wednesday morning, May, 1912, of pneumonia, aged 66 years and 14 days.

Deceased was born and raised in this township, and when a young man went to Mountain Lake Park, Md., where he married Miss Emma Kimmel, and resided until about three years ago. He is survived by his wife and the following children: Mrs George B. Hefley, Berlin, Pa., Mrs. C. S. Parnell, Cumberland, Md., Mrs. W. C. White, Mt. Lake Park, Md., and Daniel and Hazel at home. The funeral took place Friday at his late home, conducted by Revs. H. H. Wiant and H. B. Burkholder. Interment in the Odd-Fellows cemetery.—Berlin (Pa.) Record.

The announcement of the death of J. C. Gortner, son of Mr. Fred. Gortner, was received here Wednesday evening. The young man died at Morgantown, W. Va., after an operation for gall stones. The father was telegraphed for but did not arrive at Morgantown until after the death of his son. The remains arrived here today. The young man was about thirty years of age.

ESTABLISHED 1884 BOTH PHONES

Why Should You Install Modern Plumbing?

Because, in the first place, your health demands it. A good plumbing system will protect you from the dangers of sewer gas and will keep your home healthful and sanitary.

The "Standard" porcelain enameled fixtures which we can supply are an ornament to any home, as well as being thoroughly sanitary. Their smooth, enameled surface is easily cleaned and will keep its beautiful, snow-white finish during years of service.

Our workmanship is careful and thorough, whether for repairs or for installing new plumbing.

It would pay you to find out more about it.

PROMPT SERVICE ESTIMATES GIVEN

GEORGE A. BITTINGER CAPTURED

Escaped Jail Bird Overpowered and Returned to Prison by Deputy DeWitt.

Deputy Sheriff George DeWitt of Oakland is entitled to a Carnegie medal or some other reward for bravery for his action, single-handed, on last Friday morning, in capturing and bringing to Oakland George A. Bittinger, twice escaped prisoner from the Oakland jail, when he, with three other prisoners, sawed their way to freedom.

Bittinger was incarcerated several months ago on a criminal charge. He was indicted by a later grand jury for having broken jail—a statutory offense under the Maryland law, but succeeded until last Friday in eluding the officers of the law. Thursday Deputy Dewitt went down into the enemy's country and prowled through the woods, scouting here and there until he was in the vicinity of Bittinger's abode, where he camped until he saw Bittinger return home, armed with a shot gun. Entering the house Bittinger left his gun and started for his barn nearby when the officer pounced out, and then ensued a marathon which led through Savage river with water to the waists of the pursued and pursuer, Bittinger in the lead for quite a distance with the officer a close second. The race was brought to an end, however, with Deputy DeWitt the winner, when he caught Bittinger and overpowered him after a hard tussel to gain possession of the revolver Bittinger drew and attempted to use.

GORTNER.

Mrs. D. J. Slabaugh and granddaughter Edna Shaffer returned the latter part of last week from a visit with her son and family at Piedmont, W. Va.

Noah Lichty has taken a large contract of ditching with his steam ditcher for H. W. Smouse.

Mr. John T. Browning of Oakland, was a business caller at W. C. Welch's Tuesday.

Mrs. H. F. Wortring and little son Harold, of Fairmont, W. Va., have returned to their home after spending a week with her parents Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Schlossnagle, also with her father-in-law at Brookside.

Misses Addie and Mable Wamsley spent Tuesday night at their uncle's J. W. Sanders.

Mr. James P. Treacy and an automobile agent from Pitsburgh were business callers at W. C. Welch's Tuesday.

P. P. Gortner's have purchased a new Ford automobile.

Mr. Toot Stemple of Aurora, W. Va., spent Tuesday night at this place on business.

A number from Gortner attended the funeral of Mrs. George Blamble at Red House last Monday morning.

H. L. Bowman, wife and two children of Piedmont, W. Va., spent several days recently with Mrs. Bowman's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Sanders.

Miss Fannie Welch spent Tuesday in Ookland.

There will be preaching services in the Union church Sunday at 10:30 A. M. by the German Brethern, and at 8 P. M. by Rev. Bauman of the U. B. church, also Sunday school at 9:30; every one invited.

Our community was shocked Wednesday morning to hear the sad news of the death of Jocob Gortner, son of Fred Gortner of Loch Lynn. He had spent the winter in Florida, and returned to Morgantown, W. Va., this spring where he was employed. He was well known through out this country, as he had spent most of his life here.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mothers' day was observed in the M. E. church Sunday morning, Dr. Shelton delivering the address, which was very interesting and instructive. White carnations were distributed to all mothers present. The music was a pleasing feature.

The people of Mt. Lake Park and Loch Lynn are highly gratified with the appointment of Prof. F. E. Rathbun as secretary, treasurer and examiner of the school board. Frank will make good.

Next Sunday at 3 p. m. a men's meeting will be held in the M. E. church, to be addressed by Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton. All men and boys over fifteen years of age are urged to be present.

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Straucer were week end visitors of Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Gough.

Mrs. Virginia Pierce and son John, of Parkersburg, are here visiting relatives. John had been quite ill but is now much better.

Mr. Tallson and Mrs. Jones, of Wheeling left Monday after spending a week here superintending work on their house and grounds.

Mr. and Mrs. Hermon O. Smith, of Parkersburg, arrived yesterday and took possession of the Dr. Sumner Stone cottage for the season.

Miss Belle Pritchard, of Mannington, came to the Park Monday and opened her handsome cottage on E street.

Mrs. E. L. Stone, of Wheeling, is here having her cottage put in order for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. P. T. Garthright are improving their H street properties.

Mr. Charles Weimer, noted last week as being seriously ill, is much better and considered out of danger.

Mr. Levi Echard has been quite ill for a week but is now better. He has a good nurse in the person of Mr. C. F. Dawson.

Major and Mrs. J. P. McKee left here Monday for their home in Pittsburgh, after being here a week arranging for a private water supply for their cottages. They will return later with their family to spend the summer.

The streets of Loch Lynn are being put in good condition for the summer under the direction of Mr. Levi Hewitt.

Mr. Geo. T. Sigler, of Florida, is here visiting his sister, Mrs. P. Z. Musgrave. He will be here two or three weeks.

Commissioners Meeting.

OAKLAND, May 16, 1912.

The Board of County Commissioners for Garrett County, Maryland, will meet in their office in the town of Oakland, on to transact all routine business.

At 1 o'clock p. m., on the above date, Road Case No. 210 will be taken up for adoption or rejection. All parties interested are expected to be present. Said road beginning on the Aurora road at the gate of Mr. S. J. Lichty, in Election Dist. No 8 and running through the lands of Messrs. Lichty, Schrock, Fike, Martin, Gnagey, Best, Roth and Keepp and to intersect the Horse Shoe Run road at the Red House.

By order of the Board.

A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS!

This is to notify the taxpayers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1912 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract Section 45, Chapter 568, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills.

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and on all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. will be allowed and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The Treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon the books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of state and county taxes are paid when same is made.

J. B. EMORY, Treasurer.

A CALL LOAN.

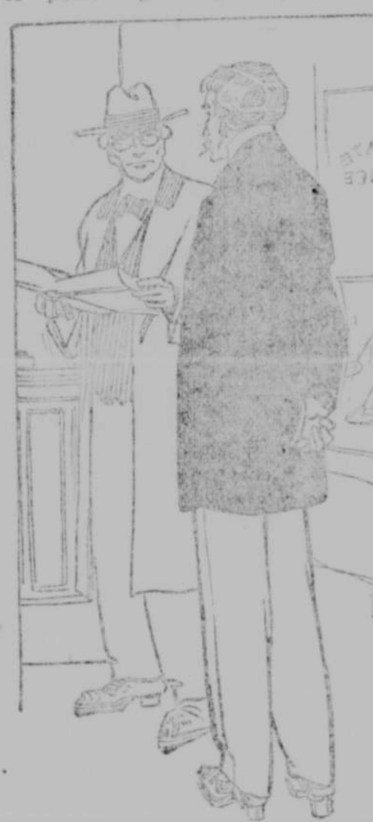
Tale of Chaparral Banking and a Near Train Holdup.

By O. HENRY.

[Copyright, 1907, by the McClure company.]

In those days the cattlemen were the anointed. They were the grandees of the grass, kings of the kine, lords of the lea, barons of beef and bone. They might have ridden in golden chariots had their tastes so inclined. The cattleman was caught in a stampede of dollars. It seemed to him that he had more money than was decent. But when he had bought a watch with precious stones set in the case so large that they hurt his ribs and a California saddle with silver nails and Angora skin suaderos and ordered everybody up to the bar for whisky—what else was there for him to spend money for?

Not so circumscribed in expedient for the reduction of surplus wealth were those lairds of the lariat who had women folk to their name. In the breast of the rib sprung sex the genius of purse lightening may slumber through years of inopportunity, but never, my brothers, does it become extinct.



"YOU ARE CARRYING ONE VERY BAD BIT OF PAPER."

So out of the chaparral came Long Bill Longley from the Bar Circle branch on the Frio—a wife driven man—to taste the urban joys of success. Something like half a million dollars he had, with an income steadily increasing.

Long Bill was a graduate of the camp and trail. Luck and thrift, a cool head and a telescopic eye for mavericks had raised him from cowboy to be a cowman. Then came the boom in cattle, and Fortune, stepping gingerly among the cactus thorns, came and emptied her cornucopia at the doorstep of the ranch.

In the little frontier city of Chaparosa Longley built a costly residence. Here he became a captive, bound to the chariot of social existence. He was doomed to become a leading citizen. He struggled for a time like a mustang in his first corral, and then he hung up his quirt and spurs. Time hung heavily on his hands. He organized the First National bank of Chaparosa and was elected its president.

One day a dyspeptic man, wearing double magnifying glasses, inserted an official looking card between the bars of the cashier's window of the First National bank. Five minutes later the bank force was dancing at the beck and call of a national bank examiner.

This examiner, Mr. J. Edgar Todd, proved to be a thorough one.

At the end of it all the examiner put on his hat and called the president, Mr. William R. Longley, into the private office.

"Well, how do you find things?" asked Longley in his slow, deep tones. "Any brands in the roundup you didn't like the looks of?"

"The bank checks up all right, Mr. Longley," said Todd, "and I find your loans in very good shape, with one exception. You are carrying one very bad bit of paper, one that is so bad that I have been thinking that you surely do not realize the serious position it places you in. I refer to a call loan of $10,000 made to Thomas Merwin. Not only is the amount in excess of the maximum sum the bank can loan any individual legally, but it is absolutely without indorsement or security. Thus you have doubly violated the national banking laws and have laid yourself open to criminal prosecution by the government. A report of the matter to the comptroller of the currency—which I am bound to make—would, I am sure, result in the matter being turned over to the department of justice for action. You see what a serious thing it is."

Bill Longley was leaning his lengthy, slowly moving frame back in his swivel chair. His hands were clasped behind his head, and he turned a little to look the examiner in the face. The examiner was surprised to see a smile creep about the rugged mouth of the banker and a kindly twinkle in his light blue eyes. If he saw the seriousness of the affair it did not show in his countenance.

"Of course you don't know Tom Merwin," said Longley almost genially. "Yes, I know about that loan. It hasn't any security except Tom Merwin's word. Somehow I've always found that when a man's word is good it's the best security there is. Oh, yes, I know the government doesn't think so. I guess I'll see Tom about that note."

Mr. Todd's dyspepsia seemed to grow suddenly worse. He looked at the chaparral banker through his double magnifying glasses in amazement.

"You see," said Longley, easily explaining the thing away, "Tom heard of 2,000 head of two-year-olds down near Rocky ford, on the Rio Grande, that could be had for $8 a head. I reckon 'twas one of old Leandro Garcia's outfits that he had smuggled over, and he wanted to make a quick turn on 'em. Those cattle are worth $15 on the hoof in Kansas City. Tom knew it, and I knew it. He had $6,000, and I let him have the $10,000 to make the deal with. His brother Ed took 'em on to market three weeks ago. He ought to be back most any day now with the money. When he comes Tom 'll pay that note."

The bank examiner was shocked. It was perhaps his duty to step out to the telegraph office and wire the situation to the comptroller. But he did not. He talked pointedly and effectively to Longley for three minutes. He succeeded in making the banker understand that he stood upon the border of a catastrophe, and then he offered a tiny loophole of escape.

"I am going to Hilldale's tonight," he told Longley, "to examine a bank there. I will pass through Chaparosa on my way back. At 12 o'clock tomorrow I shall call at this bank. If this loan has been cleared out of the way by that time it will not be mentioned in my report. If not I will have to do my duty."

With that the examiner bowed and departed.

The president of the First National lounged in his chair half an hour longer, and then he lit a mild cigar and went over to Tom Merwin's house. Merwin, a ranchman in brown duck, with a contemplative eye, sat with his feet upon a table, plaiting a rawhide quirt.

"Tom," said Longley, leaning against the table, "you heard anything from Ed yet?"

"Not yet," said Merwin, continuing his plaiting. "I guess Ed'll be along back now in a few days."

"There was a bank examiner," said Longley, "nosing around our place today, and he bucked a sight about that note of yours. You know I know it's all right, but the thing is against the banking laws. I was pretty sure you'd have paid it off before the bank was examined again, but the son of a gun slipped in on us. Tom, I'm short of cash myself just now, or I'd let you have the money to take it up with. I've got till 12 o'clock tomorrow, and then I've got to show the cash in place of that note or"—

"Or what, Bill?" asked Merwin, as Longley hesitated.

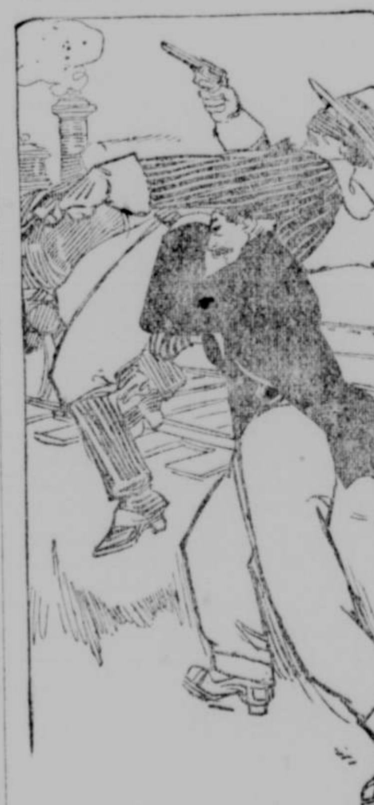
"Well, I suppose it means be jumped on with both of Uncle Sam's feet."

"I'll try to raise the money for you on time," said Merwin, interested in his plaiting.

"All right, Tom," concluded Longley as he turned toward the door. "I knew you would if you could."

Merwin threw down his whip and went to the only other bank in town, a private one run by Cooper & Craig.

"Cooper," he said to the partner by that name, "I've got to have $10,000 today or tomorrow. I've got a house and lot here that's worth about $6,000, and that's all the actual collateral. But I've got a cattle deal on that's sure to bring me in more than that much profit within a few days."



HE WAS LIFTED FROM HIS FEET AND THROWN FACE DOWNWARD.

Cooper began to cough.

"Now, for God's sake don't say no," said Merwin. "I owe that much money on a call loan. It's been called, and the man that called it is a man I've lain on the same blanket with in cow camps and ranger camps for ten years. He can call anything I've got. He can call the blood out of my veins and it'll come. He's got to have the money. He's in a devil of a—well, he needs the money, and I've got to get it for him. You know my word's good, Cooper."

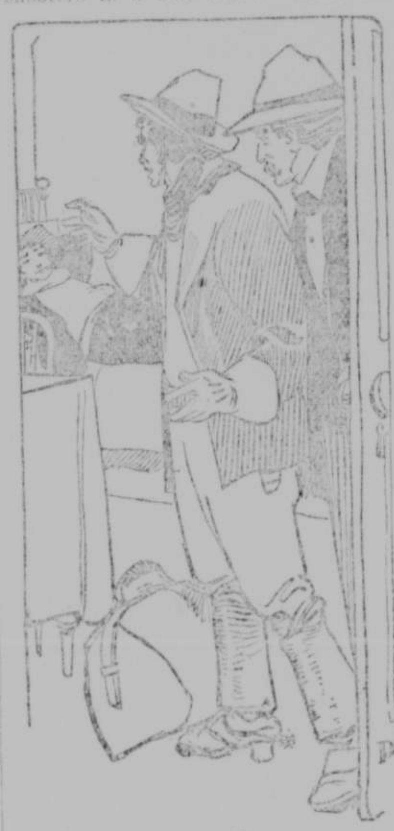
"No doubt of it," assented Cooper urbanely, "but I've a partner, you know. I'm not free in making loans. And even if you had the best security in your hands, Merwin, we couldn't accommodate you in less than a week. We're just making a shipment of $15,000 to Myer Bros., in Rockdell, to buy cotton with. It goes down on the narrow gauge tonight. That leaves our cash quite short at present. Sorry we can't arrange it for you."

Merwin went back to his little bare office and plaited at his quirt again. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon he went to the First National and leaned over the railing of Longley's desk.

"I'll try to get that money for you tonight—I mean tomorrow, Bill."

"All right, Tom," said Longley quietly.

At 9 o'clock that night Tom Merwin stepped cautiously out of the small frame house in which he lived. It was near the edge of the little town, and few citizens were in the neighborhood at that hour. Merwin wore two six-shooters in a belt and a slouch hat.



"WHAT'S THE WORD, ED?" GASPED MERWIN.

He moved swiftly down a lonely street and then followed the sandy road that ran parallel to the narrow gauge track until he reached the water tank, two miles below the town. There Tom Merwin stopped, tied a black silk handkerchief about the lower part of his face and pulled his hat down low.

In ten minutes the night train for Rockdell pulled up at the tank, having come from Chaparosa.

With a gun in each hand Merwin raised himself from behind a clump of chaparral and started for the engine. But before he had taken three steps two long, strong arms clasped him from behind, and he was lifted from his feet and thrown, face downward, upon the grass. There was a heavy knee pressing against his back and an iron hand grasping each of his wrists. He was held thus, like a child, until the engine had taken water and until the train had moved with accelerating speed out of sight. Then he was released and rose to his feet to face Bill Longley.

"The case never needed to be fixed up this way, Tom," said Longley. "I saw Cooper this evening, and he told me what you and him talked about. Then I went down to your house tonight and saw you come out with your guns on, and I followed you. Let's go back, Tom."

They walked away together side by side.

"'Twas the only chance I saw," said Merwin presently. "You called your loan, and I tried to answer you. Now what'll you do, Bill, if they sock it to you?"

"What would you have done if they'd socked it to you?" was the answer Longley made.

"I never thought I'd lay in a bush to stick up a train," remarked Merwin, "but a call loan's different. A call's a call with me. We've got twelve hours yet, Bill, before this spy jumps on to you. We've got to raise them spondulics somehow. Maybe we can— Great Sam Houston! Do you hear that?"

Merwin broke into a run, and Longley kept with him, hearing only a rather pleasing whistle somewhere in the night rendering the lugubrious air of "The Cowboy's Lament."

"It's the only tune he knows!" shouted Merwin as he ran. "I'll bet"—

They were at the door of Merwin's house. He kicked it open and fell over an old valise lying in the middle of the floor. A sunburned, firm jawed youth, stained by travel, lay upon the bed puffing at a brown cigarette.

"What's the word, Ed?" gasped Merwin.

"So so," drawled that capable youngster. "Just got in on the 9:30. Sold the bunch for fifteen straight. Now, buddy, you want to quit kickin' a valise around that's got $29,000 in greenbacks in its in'ards."

Ironclad Warships.

The idea of the ironclad warship is at least as old as the reign of Napoleon. It was suggested to Napoleon, patented in this country during the war of 1812 and suggested again later to the French government, but in each case failed to receive recognition. At the beginning of the Mexican war successful experiments were made with it under the auspices of the United States government, but again the matter was, strangely enough, allowed to drop. Shortly afterward, however, the French government finally took up the idea, and French ironclads in the Crimean war did good service against the Russian forts. But the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac was the first real encounter between real ironclad ships.—New York American.

GENTLE REPROOF MOST SUCCESSFUL

How St. Peter Was Punished For Denying His Lord.

Some Mistaken Methods Called to Attention Regarding Evangelistic Work. Undershepherds Admonished to Feed the Flock of God.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Washington, D. C., May 12.—"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me more than these?"—John xxi, 15-17.

The context shows that these words were addressed by the Redeemer to St. Peter on the occasion of His third manifestation to His disciples after His resurrection. This was presumably three or four weeks after the Master's resurrection from the dead.

During all those thirty days the mental attitude of all the Apostles and the other disciples can be better imagined than described. They were perplexed; they had had evidences of the Master's resurrection; they had had the Scriptures called to their attention which proved that this was necessary and that God had previously so arranged. They had hoped for further conferences with Jesus and that He would tell them definitely what to do.

Instead, left to themselves, they were thoroughly disheartened. They had left all to follow Him, to tell the people that He was the long promised Messiah, and that He would soon set up His Kingdom, which would bring blessings to Israel, and, through Israel, to all the families of the earth, in harmony with the Abrahamic Covenant. Now apparently all these hopes were dashed.

They Toiled All Night.

Their first night was a discouraging one—they caught nothing. In the morning they beheld a stranger on the shore. The stranger suggested casting the net on the other side of the boat. And although the suggestion seemed foolish, having been so unsuccessful, yet they did so, and immediately the net was filled with fishes! It did not require long for them to learn the lesson. They knew instinctively that the unknown stranger was their Master.

All interest had just centered in the fishing business, but now boats, fish and nets all lost their value in the estimation of these fishermen! Here was their risen Lord, for whose third appearance they had been waiting now nearly three weeks! Fearing that the Master would disappear before he could get to Him, St. Peter plunged into the sea and swam ashore. To his surprise the stranger already had fish, and had them cooked, and all were invited to join in the breakfast on the shore of Galilee.

The stranger had not the clothing by which they had known their Lord, neither did He have the marks of the nails in His hands and feet, that they might thus identify Him. This was a different manifestation. They knew Him as did those with whom He walked to Emmaus who recognized Him in the blessing of the bread, and not by His features or clothing or wounds. They recognized that none other than He could perform such a miracle.

"Lovest Thou Me More?"

The stranger addressed St. Peter particularly, saying, "Lovest thou Me more than these"—these boats and nets? St. Peter answered, "Lord, Thou knowest that I affectionately love Thee." He used a word expressing fondness of love. Jesus replied, "Feed my lambs."

Then came the question a second time, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me?" A great pressure was felt by St. Peter. Why did the Master so particularly question his love? St. Peter answered, "Lord, Thou knowest that I affectionately love Thee." Jesus this time replied, "Tend My sheep." For the third time Jesus said to Peter, "Simon, son of Jonas, dost thou affectionately love Me?" Here Jesus used the same word that St. Peter had used, as though He questioned the affection and depth of St. Peter's love. Ah! the third time must have sent the memory of Peter back to the scene in Pilate's Judgment Hall, when he denied his Master the third time. And now Jesus for the third time had asked him respecting his love, and whether it was really a love of affection! St. Peter's choking reply was, "Lord, Thou knowest all things! Thou knowest that I affectionately love Thee!" The Lord's reply was, "Feed My sheep."

Our Mistaken Methods.

Have not Christians in general overlooked this important lesson, namely, that the chief work of the ministers and under-shepherds of the Lord's flock during this Age is to "feed the flock?" Is it not true that comparatively little feeding is being done? On the contrary, the thought usually received by new converts is, Now you are saved, go, evangelize, and bring others to Christ—especially bring money, for with plenty of it we can convert the world.

The advice to St. Peter should be heeded. The "lambs" should be fed until they become "sheep." The sheep should be tended, cared for, guided, instructed; and the sheep should also be fed with the stronger "meat" than that which the lambs could appropriate.

THE BLUE LINEN GOWN.

A Lost Bag and a Chase For the Owner.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

"Main floor—all out!" An elevator gate crashed open and sharp heel taps rapped across the tessellated floor, and a girl paused beside Fielding. He caught a glimpse of an exquisite profile under the drooping brim of a wide hat and a soft roll of dusky hair and a perfect figure gowned in blue linen. Then the girl fluttered away and boarded a downtown car.

Fielding's eyes came back and discovered something lying at his feet. He picked it up just in time to save it from the snatching grasp of a ragged street lad.

"Me mother lost it," asserted the boy brazenly as he hovered near.

Fielding smiled as he looked at the dainty bag of blue linen and white leather, heavily stitched and bearing a small monogram in gold in one corner. He tossed a quarter to the boy and studied the monogram closely. The intertwined letters were A and E.

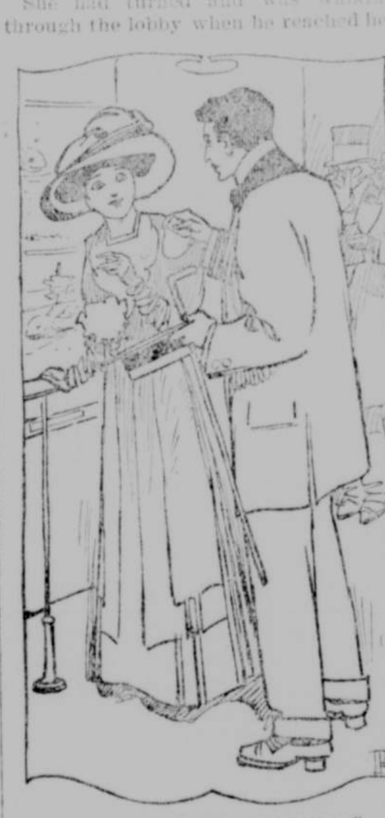
With sudden recollection that the girl was getting farther away from him every moment, he jumped on the next South ferry car, stuffing the bag in his coat pocket.

He had scarcely ridden two blocks when a northbound open car passed swiftly. He caught a glimpse of a blue linen gown and large hat before it whizzed from sight. In another instant he was on the ground and crossing the street to catch the following car.

He made it easily and with a degree of satisfaction, for he felt no doubt that the owner of the blue bag was on her way back to the Biggs building to search for her lost property.

Fielding leaped from the car and dashed across the street in spite of a policeman's warning hand.

She had turned and was walking through the lobby when he reached her side. He removed his hat and mopped his dripping face.



"OH, YES, INDEED, IT IS MINE."

"I beg your pardon," he ventured to the crown of her big hat.

She stopped and turned a surprised face to his—not the exquisitely beautiful face he had hoped and expected to see, but the plain and intelligent countenance of his head stenographer, Miss Murphy.

"What is it, Mr. Fielding?" she asked, with surprise.

"I—I thought it was some one else," stammered her employer dazedly. "You see, I was looking for some one in a blue gown, and I thought you were she."

Miss Murphy looked suspiciously at his flushed countenance and noted his incoherent speech.

"Lots of girls are wearing these blue dresses," she reassured him; "most any one would have made the same mistake. Terribly hot, isn't it?" She bowed respectfully and caught an elevator going up.

Fielding stood in the doorway once more, hot and bewildered with his fruitless chase and angry with himself for having been so easily led astray by a blue gown and a large hat. Come to think of it, Miss Murphy's gown had lacked the peculiar attractiveness of that other, and her hat was a black one, while the one he sought was a soft white leghorn—not that Fielding knew a leghorn hat from a beaver or any other sort—he simply knew black from white.

He decided that there was a bare chance he might get a glimpse of the right girl if he once more invaded the lower downtown district. The owner of the blue bag must have missed it by this time, and every moment was only making his search for her more difficult. Of course he could advertise the bag, but that would be quite different from meeting the divinity herself and delivering the bag into her surprised and grateful hands!

Fielding forgot heat and hunger and weariness as he pursued his search for the blue gown. While he waited for a southbound car he caught a glimpse of a girl in a blue gown entering a jewelry store close by. Her hat was white and flapping, and he could not see the color of her hair, but her figure was everything to be desired and admired.

It was the work of an instant to enter the store and cautiously survey this girl in the blue gown, when a pink and white baby face, surrounded by puffs and sausages of pale golden hair, confronted him haughtily. He hurriedly made exit and boarded the first car that came along, trying to forget the anxious eyed jeweler who had rushed to the door in his wake.

Block after block the car jerked its way down to the Battery, Fielding, hot and eager and feeling very much of a fool in his obstinate quest. His afternoon was quite spoiled. There would be no shore dinner at the yacht club, no pleasant run through the Jersey roads. When the car reached the terminus he would take the subway and make a dash for home and a tub and then search for a bite to eat, for he was ravenously hungry.

At the Battery the green park lured his tired eyes from the hot streets, and he strolled for a few moments, watching the crowds hurrying to and from the ferries, his glance alert for the wearer of a blue linen gown. His common sense told him that the flowerlike face of the girl he sought would not be among these crowds, but rather uptown.

Just then he saw her—unmistakably the one he sought. She was entering the door of the aquarium, and Fielding—old New Yorker that he was—who had never been inside its doors, was quickly after her.

Quietly, unobtrusively, he followed her from case to case, now and then catching a glimpse of her sweet face and again seeing nothing save the brim of her pretty hat. At last in the upper gallery he stood close beside her while they watched the darting golden forms of tiny tropical fishes.

Apparently she had not noticed his presence until he spoke in a low voice, and then she started and flushed rosily.

"I hope you will pardon me," he was saying, hat in hand, "but didn't you drop this bag in front of the Biggs building this afternoon?" He drew the bag from his pocket and held it forth.

"Oh, yes, indeed. It is mine," she said, with a joyful little laugh. "I missed it after I had boarded my car, and as I didn't know just where I had lost it I concluded not to bother about it. It contained nothing but my cards. Thank you very much."

She turned away with a graceful little gesture that indicated the interview was at an end, and Fielding, mentally cursing himself for an idiot that he had not investigated the bag and at least discovered her name, moved slowly in the opposite direction.

Absorbed in these melancholy thoughts and with the excitement of his quest at an end, he was leaning over the rail, gazing moodily at the performing seals on the floor below, when he heard the sound of a familiar laugh and his name uttered.

"Jack! Where did you come from? I've been waiting hours at the office for you."

His sister Eleanor panted indignantly toward him, her eyes wide with surprise. "Where is Alice—I thought you didn't know her?"

"I don't know her—whoever she is," he said a bit crossly. "What's up, Nell, and why were you waiting for me at the office?"

"You know I've been expecting Alice Evans to visit me. Don't say you have forgotten, Jack Fielding! She came this morning, and where do you think the child wanted to go the first thing? Why, the aquarium, of all places, and I had never been here myself! So I told her we'd go down to your office and you would take us to luncheon, and then we three would go down to the aquarium together!"

"Exactly!" said Fielding impatiently.

"Well, we went to the Biggs building, and we must have passed you when we went up in the elevator, for they said you'd just gone down, and as they didn't know whether you had gone for the day or not we decided to wait. Alice became tired after awhile and said she couldn't stand the heat another minute, so she agreed to come down to the Battery and wait for us. When an hour passed and you hadn't returned I just came on! Now, where is Alice and where did you meet her?"

"Did she have on a blue linen and is she—is she beautiful?" demanded Fielding eagerly.

"Yes—to everything," said his sister, with a curious glance. "I always said when you saw her you'd fall down!"

"She's here, then—see, yonder!"

Together they walked along the gallery, and then there was an exquisite moment for Fielding when Eleanor introduced the girl in the blue gown and her little gloved hand rested in his for a brief instant.

One day, long afterward, Jack Fielding told the girl in the blue gown how much he loved her.

"You see, dear," he concluded tenderly, "it must have been foreordained that we were to be more than ordinary acquaintances or I would never have been started on that mad chase in the hottest day of the year after your blue gown!"

"Very true," said Miss Evans demurely.

"And what are you going to tell me, dear?" he questioned anxiously.

A sweet smile curved her tender lips and her brown eyes sought his with the look that comes only once with its beautiful revelation—it's gracious surrender.

"Now that you have found me," she whispered softly, "you must keep forever."

THE TEMPLE BELL.

A Mysterious Disappearance and the Explanation.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Hedges and I toiled up the dry bed of Furnace creek and left Death valley.

"Hark!" said Hedges in a strange voice.

Across the hidden jagged ranges came a sweet musical echo. It was repeated again and yet again to my astounded ears.

"It's a bell," I almost screamed at him, "a bell here—a church bell in Death valley!"

With a choking cry Hedges melted from my side. I heard the stamping of his mule and then the sharp clatter of small hoofs among the stones.

"Come on!" he shouted back at me. "Once in India I heard it and"— His voice died away in the darkness, and when the sound of hoofs ceased altogether I was left alone with the intermittent sound of the bell.

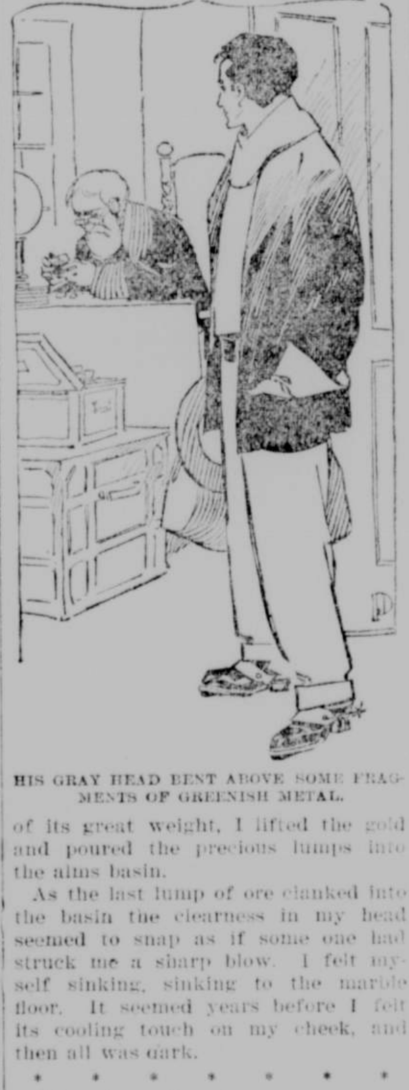
I stood listening, listening, until at last my feet moved toward that spot in the gloom where my barro was picketed. I felt for and found the remaining bag of ore which Hedges had left to my share, and I flung it across the back of the beast with eager hands.

A great clearness was in my mind, and in my heart was a yearning pity for the poor—the poor of the world, at whose feet I longed to pour my sack of gold—and I hastened forward eager to give all that I had to charity.

The bell rang softly as I approached, and every chime fell straight on my pitying heart. A faint red glow was reflected on the rocks ahead, and around the bend of a huge bowlder I came upon the temple in the wilderness.

The red light came from the sanctuary lamp hanging within the tiny building. It tinged the gray rocks with a strange, unearthly coloring and gave to the white walls of the temple a delicate rosiness.

My knife ripped a hole in the canvas sack, and then, staggering because of its great weight, I lifted the gold and poured the precious lumps into the alms basin.



HIS GRAY HEAD BENT ABOVE SOME FRAGMENTS OF GREENISH METAL.

As the last lump of ore clanked into the basin the clearness in my head seemed to snap as if some one had struck me a sharp blow. I felt myself sinking, sinking to the marble floor. It seemed years before I felt its cooling touch on my cheek, and then all was dark.

* * * * * * *

When I awoke stars were shining out of a black sky, and I heard a hoarse whinny from the burro near by. I was lying on my back, and my temples throbbed dully.

The white temple had disappeared. My eager search among the rocks was unavailing.

Thus I found myself a beggar at the gate of Death valley.

I knew that Furnace Creek ranch was somewhere—it must be near, and without food and with only a small canteen of water I set forth on a journey that I knew must end in death.

The next day I met Hedges. He was riding slowly toward me with eyes fixed on the ground. Behind him trailed a pack mule. His bag of ore had disappeared.

"Medford!" he almost sobbed as I trudged painfully into view. He slipped from his mule and ran toward me with outstretched hands. "What is the matter, old man? Why didn't you follow me that night? I had to go. You see, I had heard the bell before!"

I stared at him from hopeless eyes, and he read the truth.

"You didn't—you followed the bell?" he stammered.

"Yes," I said thickly.

"And your gold—the ore?"

"I gave it—gave it to the poor of the world," I said bitterly. "I had to do it."

He nodded understandingly. "I will tell you my experience, Peter, after you have eaten. I have food here and materials for a fire. I will make some coffee."

"Where have you been?" I asked.

"I found the ranch. I left my sack there and loaded with food to return for you. Don't say another word until you have rested."

Late in the afternoon when the sun was drawing down behind the dark range Hedges told his story:

"Five years ago, before I met you, Medford, I traveled for a large dealer in precious stones. I went to Calcutta on the track of a pair of magnificent pigeon blood rubies, the property of a gambling maharajah, who was hard pressed by his creditors.

"These I bought, together with several other splendid stones, the combined value of which was $200,000.

"I walked into Calcutta from the maharajah's palace just as dusk was falling. Perhaps the pressure of my revolver against my breast gave me assurance, for it is a dark and lonely road, but there was a fascination in watching the dying of the red glowing Indian sunset and the coming of the velvet black darkness jeweled above with stars and pointed here and there with gleaming lights from scattered dwellings.

"I was crossing a bleak stretch of wild ground, rank with parched grass and weeds, when I first heard the temple bell—the same bell that you heard last night and from which I ran away.

"It seemed as if all the poor downtrodden, plague stricken natives of India called appealingly for alms. It mattered little that the jewels were not my own. I tore them from my belt with feverish impatience and threw them into the alms basin, and they disappeared. Then something happened, and I went down, down!

"When I regained consciousness I was still lying in the parched grass, and a pariah dog was licking my face. The stars shone overhead, but the temple was gone—marble walls and floor, luring bell—all gone!" Hedges buried his head in his hands and was very still.

"And what did you do?" I asked after a long silence.

"I raved like a madman," returned Hedges, lifting his head fiercely. "I ran into the city and found a man whom I knew, and he put great forces to work and discovered nothing. No one had seen or heard of such a temple, and they believed I had been drinking and been set upon by robbers.

"I would be breaking stone now if I had not had a rich relative who left me the fortune to replace the stolen gems. I am repaying him now."

"Of course I am ruined," I said.

"Half of what I have is yours, Peter, and you can pay me back," he said quickly.

I held up my hand. "I couldn't, Hedges. You know I am grateful. I am engaged to marry Ethel Lambert, as you are aware. I have nothing but my profession, no capital whatever, and I made this journey down into hades for the gold to get a start. I have lost it and must begin again. I cannot ask her to wait much longer, and the professor"—

"Is Professor Lambert a stiff on money?" demanded Hedges. "I thought him quite the other way, you know."

"He isn't a bit mercenary," I said hastily, "only I haven't got the face to take Ethel from her luxurious home into the poor quarters I can now afford, and so"—

"So you'll both be miserable forever after," interrupted Hedges dryly. "Let's go back to San Francisco and see Professor Lambert before you do anything desperate."

We resumed our journey the next day and several weeks afterward found me dressed once more in civilized garments, shaven and shorn, ringing the professor's doorbell. I did not ask for Ethel, though my eyes were aching to see her, and so I was taken through the house and into the long passageway that led to the laboratory.

Professor Lambert was a metallurgist. I found his gray head bent above some fragments of greenish metal on the table.

When he had warmly greeted me I told my unlikely story, knowing it was scarcely credible, yet when I had concluded the professor took me by the hand and led me into a back room.

Then he told me the story of how he had experimented with bell tones, hoping to carry out a theory of his own that some day he might produce a bell whose tones might find a response in human hearts. He hoped to attain a pitch of tone whose vibration might strike a chord of human sympathy in every heart, that the hearing of it might promote good fellowship and love and end in universal peace—a very pretty theory.

The one casting he had made had resulted in producing that strange bell whose call was to sacrifice, to give all in response to its command. Startled at the production and still uncertain as to its value, he was shocked to awake one morning and find that his assistant had disappeared and with him the bell.

Secretly he had pursued the man. His agents had trailed the thief from country to country, and even after I had fallen senseless in the little chapel and had been thrown into outer darkness by the adventurer the detectives had fallen upon the temple and carried it and the thief triumphantly to San Francisco and justice.

A train of burros carried the stage setting from place to place. Wherever men walked in solitary places with gold or silver or precious stones the temple might be found.

"Your gold ore is in that sack in the corner," concluded the professor, with a smile. "And now suppose you go down and see Ethel."

Eager as I was to meet my sweetheart, I waited long enough to telephone the strange story to Hedges, patiently waiting in the hotel to share his golden store with me, before I went to claim my happiness.

GRANTSVILLE

Dr. G. C. Keller, of Winchester, Va., spent a few days of last week as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Getty. While here he cast his vote at the presidential primary election for his chosen candidate. It is rumored that he expects to remove to Grantsville and resume his practice of dentistry. Welcome, Doctor.

We see also that our old friend Jonas E. Gnagey has registered and has become a citizen of District No. 3, after an absence of about twenty years.

The normal school is being successfully conducted by Prof. R. R. Sanner, with an enrollment of ten pupils. What the school lacks in quantity will be made up in quality.

Miss Marie Jordan, daughter of Arthur Jordan, is slowly improving after a serious illness of nearly two months. Miss Gibson, a trained nurse, has been in attendance since her sickness and by her careful nursing Marie is being restored to health.

Mr. Thomas H. Bittinger, the newly appointed Justice of the Peace, was to Oakland and took the oath of office. Persons being in need of the law can be supplied at the usual rates as he is now a full fledged J. P.

Mr. and Mrs. Gideon Gnagey spent Saturday and Sunday at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Edward Sausman, of Jennings.

Mr. Albert Bowser has moved on the C. D. Hershberger farm, about two miles east of Grantsville.

Miss Wilda Getty has been confined to a darkened room on account of serious trouble of the optic nerves.

Mr. Charles Younkin unloaded two car loads of buggies last week.

BITTINGER.

Considering the weather and the press of work on the farm, the vote cast at the recent primary in this district shows a growing interest among our citizens, and it is hoped that this interest will continue to increase, until every voter will exercise his right to take part in the selecting of candidates for public office, as well as in voting for their choice at the general election.

Dr. Henry McComas, of Oakland, passed through this village last Monday evening in his automobile.

Mr. and Mrs. Elias Orendorf, who recently returned from a winter's stay at Virginia Beach, Virginia, have resumed housekeeping on the old homestead in this village.

Jacob Brenneman spent last Sunday with his brother, William Brenneman, on the east side of Meadow Mountain.

C. E. Ellithorpe attended the reorganization of the School Board at Oakland last Saturday.

The Otto & Orendorf Lumber Company, of Springs, Pa., will shortly move their mill to this place and begin cutting the Elias Orendorf timber.

Rev. C. H. Shull spent a day in Oakland, last week, returning to his home here on Tuesday.

The Lutheran Annual Conference will meet at this place on May 28th, and the the young people are busy preparing some special music for that occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Beachy were shopping in Accident last Monday afternoon.

Coming In All Its Entirety.

Downie & Wheeler's World's Best Shows Combined will exhibit in Oakland, Saturday, May 18 one day only. A gigantic amusement enterprise. A whole city of people employed. The strange colony of people, handsome horses, rare wild animals and golden caravans are scheduled to arrive in the early hours of Saturday morning, transported upon Downie & Wheeler's own new special train of cars. Circus day will begin with a grand glittering free street parade, at 10.30 a. m.—a vision of beauty and splendor, defying all competition or comparison. The show has $50,000.00 invested in chariots, tableau floats, musical vehicles, fanciful and historic costumes and expensive odd things of distinctive parade use. It is now well understood that Downie & Wheeler's Circus Combined carry as many people, horses, wild animals and show properties as any other show traveling. The agent of Downie & wheeler's Show was in town, contracting with grocers, bakers, creameries, etc., for for the immense quantity of food to be delivered to the show grounds in the early morning. There is no question but that a tremendous crowd of people will be in the city, as everybody will want to see the new big Combined Double Circus. Its hundreds of special and extraordinary features will afford a day of rare enjoyment and valuable instruction to everybody.

WANTED—A settled woman as chambermaid and also waitresses. Apply at Mountain Lake Hotel, Mountain Lake Park, Md.

The big Bradley Farm has been cut up into little farms and will be sold at public auction May 28.

Road Petition.

This is to give notice that thirty days from the first publication of this notice application will be made to the County Commissioners of Garrett county to appoint viewers to locate a county road leading from gate at county road at the Thomas Gary farm to intersect the county road at Blooming Rose church, a distance of about 1½ miles, to pass through the lands of George Hileman, Fred Camp, Captain Friend, Edward Schroyer, Albert Frazee and George Savage.

ATTENTION, MR. FARMER!

In your efforts to improve your soil, to grow better crops, and make farming "worth while," have you been getting the worth of your money spent for fertilizer? Do you realize that when you buy a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE that you are getting more than four times as much Phosphoric acid for your money as when buying the expensive acid phosphate? Do you realize that

When buying one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE you get fully as much Phosphoric Acid, for one-half the money, as when buying one ton of Ground Bone, which repeated tests show produces no better results than the Ground Phosphate? Do you know that we guarantee that

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade cantains 1,223 pounds of B. P. L. (Bone Phosphate of Lime)? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 560 pounds of Phosphoric Acid? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 750 Pounds of Lime? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 244.6 pounds of Phosphoric? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains [according to a recent test made by the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station] 5.37 per cent available [2 per cent citric acid test] when applied to the soil direct? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade cantains, according to the analysis, 107.4 lbs. of available phosphoric acid for the first crop's use, if applied under proper conditions, and leaves 452 pounds of phosphoric acid to become available for the use of future crops? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains sufficient Phosphoric Acid supply the needs of one acre of land for from five to six years after it is applied, and will become available as it is needed from year to year by the growing plant? That

One ton af our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade will cost, delivered at most any point in the Southern, Central, Northern or New England States, from $8.00 to $10.00 per ton of 2,000 pounds, if bought in carloads in bulk.

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade, which is being sold and used so extensively throughout the country, contains only one-half as much Phosphoric Acid, only half as much Phosphorus, and less than one-half as much lime, as one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE?

Are you aware that nearly one-half of this acid phosphate consists of sulphuric acid, a product which is not only valueless as a fertilizer, but which is actually harmful to the soils, as it renders them more acid?

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade containing only 280 pounds of Phosphoric Acid, will cost you just about twice as much as a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE containing 560 pounds of Phosphoric acid?

We vouch for the truth of these statements, and if you have not figured these things out for yourself it is high time you were beginning to "sit up and take notice." We will be pleased to give you any further information you may desire if you will address

FARMERS GROUND ROCK PHOSPHATE CO.,

D. J. Swartzentruber of Oakland is our agent for Garrett County, Md., He will be pleased to attend your wants. For further information call on him.

I wish to have all the orders I can get for Rock Phosphate in by May 20th for buckwheat, so please send me a postal card and state how many sacks of 150 lbs. to a sack. This will cost 66c per sack, cash, from the car at Oakland. This fertilizer has proven to do just as much good as Double Eagle or any other kind that has been tried side by side with this. 300 lbs. per acre is usually put on. Thank you for an order. D. J. Just received, that we are offering at Car Load Prices.

The United States Government has been using PAROID ROOFING for the last 14 years. Last year it ordered more than a MILLION Squares

GUARANTEES—Guarantees of all sorts are used to sell ready roofing of unknown value but read one of them and you find that it becomes invalid if any of its many conditions are not fulfilled. Your customers stands every chance to lose on such guarantees. Your best guarantee on any thing you sell is your reputation but beyond that your standing guarantee, "If it is not right we will refund your money," is the strongest guarantee that can be made—it covers everything. That's why we say to you and ask you to say to your customers:

"When you see PAROID on your building, if you are not satisfied tell us and we will send you a a check for the cost of the roofing and the cost of laying it." If a broader guarantee than this could be made we would make it.

MORERI II,

20279.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

FOR SEASON 1912.

The Best and Most Popular Breed of Horses.

MARTIN'S BRILLIANT BRED

PERCHERON STALLION ARTILLERY 54339

Sired by the Great Breeding and Show Stallion Champion Major 41208 [48866]

who won first in the three-year-old class Ohio State Fair, 1903; and first in the four-year-old class Ohio State Fair, 1904, and other prizes too numerous to mention. One of the greatest and best bred horses that ever came over the water and weighs 2250 pounds.

PEDIGREE: Sired by Major 41208, (48866); he by Victoria 2449, (42905); he by the great and only Besigue, 19602, the greatest breeding show horse in all France; he by Brilliant 3rd, 11116, (2919), a stallion for which the late Mr. M. Dunham paid $4,000 in France. Brilliant 3rd, (2919), proved an excellent investment in the effect that he exercised on the breed, and was certainly worth the amount paid for him. Brilliant 3rd was one of the greatest prize winners of his day, as was also his sire Fenelon (38) who sold for $6,000, the most noted of the sons of Brilliant (755). Brilliant 1271, (755), commonly called Dunham's Brilliant, because he was imported by the late M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Ill., and stood at the head of the celebrated Oak Lawn Stock Farm for 12 years, and was shown from the Atlantic Ocean to the Rocky Mountains and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico and never met defeat, and is entitled to the well earned name of King of Percherons. He by Brilliant 1899 (656), by Coco II 714, by Vaux Chaslin (713), by Coco (712), by Mignon (715), by Jean Le Blanc 739.

DAM: Gentile 31498 (43242), by Mouille (35212), Brilliant III, 11116, (2919), by Fenelon 2882 (38), by Brilliant 1271 (755), by Brilliant 1899 (756), by Coco II (714), by Vieux Chaslin (713), by Coco (723), by Mignon, 715 by Jean Le Blanc (739).

SECOND DAM: Brilliant (7014), by Brilliant 1899, (756), by Coco II (714) by Vieux Chaslin (713), by Coco (712), by Mignon (715), by Jean Le Blanc (739).

THIRD DAM: Brilliantee, belonging to M. Guillemin.

You will notice in Artillery's breeding that he runs to Brilliant on his sire side. Brilliant on his dam side, and his grandmother was a sister to Brilliant, a pedigree seldom equalled and never excelled, and he is a demonstrative sire of high class colts and without a doubt the best draft stallion in the country.

ARTILLERY is a black, 7 years old, weighs 1800 pounds, he is a low down, wide out horse, with the very best of feet and legs and stands on them the very best; he is absolutely sound; there is just as much in the breeding of a draft horse as a road horse to produce the right kind of results; here is one bred right and the size is right, color is right, disposition right and from the right family and will make one of the best breeders in the State of Maryland and worth a dozen of the short bred ones as a sire.

The Highly Bred Hambletonian Stallion NORVON 30781,

Sire of Prince B 2.29 1-4.

NERVON'S sire is the great Norval 2.14¾ trotting to W. H. Sulky, who in turn is a great sire of trotting speed, having many more trotters to his credit than any other son of the noted Electioneer 125, sire of one hundred and sixty, including Aron 2,07¾, Sonol 2.08¼, Palo Alto 2.08¾, Norval 2.14¾, is the sire of W. G. Lewis 2.06¼, Champion three heat gelding of the world. Countess Eve 2.09¼, Nervon G 2.09½, Flowing Tide 2.09¼, Donough 2.10½, Annie Leyburn 2.10½, Jubilate 2.11¾, Norval King 2.12¼ and 109 others in two thirty.

NORVON'S DAM is Violette by Onward 2.25¼, champion brood mare, sire of 1910 and 1911, sire of 200 in 2.30 list, including Onward Silver 2.05¼, Margaret O 2.05¼, Beauzetta 2.06¾, Pearl Onward, 2.06¼, Gazette 2.07¼, Colbert 2.07½, Pelatus 2.09¼, Col. Thornton 2.09½, Major Mason 2.09¾, Cornelia Belle 2.10.

SECOND DAM Carrie T by Almont 33 sire of 37 in 2.30 list, including Westmont 2.13¼; sons of Almont 33, has sired 610 in 2.30 list, including Flying Jib 2.04, Chehalis 2.04¼, Delnorte 2.08, Ella T 2.08¼ daughters of Almont 33, produced 136 in 2.30 list, including Emma E 2.09, Winslow Wilkes 2.09¾.

NERVON is a show ring winner, a sire of speed with no opportunity, a sire of great roadsters from ordinary dams. He is a beautifully made, up headed, rich bay stallion, stands 16 hands high and weighs 1200 lbs.

This horse was bred by Col. R. P. Pepper, Frankfort, Ky. Individually he is a horse of grand finish and plenty of substance with a fine disposition, deep, strong shoulders, strong back, very strong loins and stifles, strong bone with good feet and legs. His blood lines are of the best as will be seen by his Pedigree. Being the Electioneer and Wilkes cross he is only bred in the purple but is a show horse as well, having been shown ten times and only beaten once. He won first premium at the Ohio State Fair. He is a sure foal getter of large, fine colts. Can show 2.40 and with proper training will trot fast. He is worthy of consideration by good breeders. Come and see him.

Terms: Artillery $12 Norvon $15 to insure living colt.

Persons parting with mare after having been served will be held for service. The best of care will be taken, but will not be responsible for accidents.

CLASS OF 1912 WAS GRADUATED MONDAY NIGHT

Commencement Exercises Were Held In The Maryland Theatre.

The graduating exercises of the Oakland High School of the class of 1912 were held in the Maryland Theatre last Monday night which were attended by a large crowd of parents and patrons of the school and the friends generally of education in Oakland.

The feature of the evening was an address by Mr. Frank E. Rathbun, recently elected Superintendent of the public schools of the county. Mr. Rathbun's effort was a scholarly one and it greatly pleased all who were in attendance at the exercises.

The program opened with a selection by the Oakland orchestra, followed by an invocation by Rev. Dr. J. C. Ely of the Presbyterian church. Miss Hellice Rathbun rendered very beautifully a vocal solo, "If I Were a Rose," followed by an impersonation of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, "Knee Deep In June," by Percy Procter Kildow. The oration was delivered by Walter Wyatt Dawson, who chose as his subject "The Value of Money." Miss Eleanor Curtiss Hinebaugh, rendered most artistically a piano solo from Horvath. Prof. E. A. Browning, the retiring County Superintendent, presented the diplomas to the graduates. Mrs. A. B. Riker rendered a vocal solo, "When the Flowing Tide Comes In," which was followed by an address by Rev. A. B. Riker and a selection by the orchestra.

The graduates were Misses Eleanor Curtiss Hinebaugh, Mildred and Roda Welch, and Messrs. Percy Procter Kildow, Walter Wyatt Dawson, Vernon Lyon and Ralph Sanders, all most excellent young ladies and young gentlemen.

We have in stock a full line of blanks for Justices of the Peace, including deeds, mortgages, leases, etc.

ROOSEVELT WILL HAVE 32 OF OHIO'S 42 DELEGATES

Taft's Home State Cives Its Preferential Vote to The Colonel.

The final blow to the aspirations of President Taft to succeed himself in the White House, was delivered Tuesday when his native State of Ohio gave its preferential vote to Colonel Roosevelt, who will have at least thirty-two of the forty-two delegates in the National convention. In addition the Colonel will have all of the six delegates-at-large from Ohio, giving him 38 of the 48 votes for the nomination from Ohio.

In the election of Tuesday President Taft failed to show marked strength in any section of the State except his home county of Hamilton. There the vote was approximately two to one in his favor.

The farming districts and those portions of the State which are settled by agriculturists were against Taft almost without exception, owing undoubtedly to the farmers' resentment of the President's attempt to effect reciprocity with Canada.

On the Democratic side the State is being claimed by both Harmon and Wilson, with the probabilities that the voters favored Harmon as their choice.

NEW PENSION MEASURE.

Provisions of the Law Enaced Affecting Old Soldiers.

The enactment into law of House Bill No. 1 of the present Congress, as amended by the Senate, is a matter of importance to all Civil and Mexican War soldiers and sailors. The pension bureau estimates its beneficiaries at 420,965, the average annual increase per pensioner being $61.28 under the new law, and the approximate annual increase of the pension appropriations is placed at $25,797,702.

The features of the bill follow:

Any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service of the United State during the Civil war, who has been discharged honorably, and who has reached the age of 62 years or over, is entitled to receive a pension as follows:

Age 62—90 days, $13.00; 6 months, $13.50; 1 year, $14.00; 1½ years, $14 50; 2 years, $15.00; 2½ years, $15.50; 3 years, $16.00.

Age 66—90 days, $15.00; 6 months, $15.50; 1 year, $16.00; 1½ years, $16.50; 2 years, $17.00; 2½ years, $18.00; 3 years, $19.00.

Age 70—90 days, $18.00; 6 months, $19.00; 1 year, $20.00; 1½ years, $21.50; 2 years, $23.00; 2½ years, $24.00; 3 years, $25.00.

Age 75—90 days, $21.00; 6 months, $22.50; 1 year, $24.00; 1½ years, $27.00; 2 years, $30.00; 2½ years, $30.00; 3 years, $30.00.

Regrets His Departure.

The Piedmont Independent, in its last issue, paid the following tribute to Prof. Frank E. Rathbun, the recently elected superintendent of the Garrett county public schools, who will assume active charge of the office on or about August 1st:

The town of Piedmont is about to lose not only a good school superintendent, but a good citizen and upright christian gentleman as well. Prof. F. E. Rathbun, who has had charge of our public schools for the past five years, is, we are sorry to say, about to leave us, to take up the management of the public school affairs of Garrett county, Maryland. During the stay of Mr. Rathbun among us he has won many warm friends, whose good wishes will follow him to his new field of labor. We regret to lose Mr. Rathbun, but as the position which he has offered to him will be far in advance of the one which he holds here, we cannot blame him for taking advantage of it and bettering his condition. We can only say that our loss will be Garrett county's gain. After the first of August he will be in full charge of the school system of Garrett county.

Entertained.

The graduating class and the teachers of the Oakland High School were entertained at the home of Mrs. Lou Waters on last Friday evening, May 17, by Prof. Bender.

Miss Daisy Grant rendered several musical selections and Prof. Bender sang two solos. Afterwards refreshments were served. The teachers present were: Misses Daisy Hanna, Mae Arnold and Mr. Loraditch. The graduating class is composed of Eleanor Hinebaugh, Walter Dawson, Vernon Lyon, Mildred and Rhoda Welch, Ralph Sanders and Proctor Kildow.

MR. GILMOR S. HAMILL ELECTED AS DELEGATE

To the Democratic National Convention To Be Held in Baltimore.

At the State Democratic Convention, held in Baltimore last week, another honor came to Garrett county in the election of Mr. Gilmor S. Hamill of Oaklank, as one of the District Delegates to the National Convention to be held in Baltimore in June.

With the selection of Mr. Hamill as a delegate to the Democratic Convention Oakland and Garrett county has been twice honored within the past week or two in that she will have representation in both national conventions, Mr. Scott T. Jones, of Oakland, having been elected a delegate to the Republican convention in Chicago.

THE DEATH RECORD

IRA F. STEINER.

Mr. Ira F. Steiner, for many years connected with the financial department of the B. & O. Railroad in Baltimore, died at his home in that city Tuesday. His funeral will occur this afternoon at Frederick, Md. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Alice Kepner, of Oakland, and by one son, Donald Steiner, by a former marrage.

JOHN JOHNSON.

John Johnson, aged about 55 years, died at his home in Oakland Tuesday night after a brief illness of acute indigestion. His funeral will occur today with interment near Yough Lake.

Sermon to Old Soldiers.

In accordance with the ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic the old soldiers will attend divine services in a body on next Sunday morning when a sermon will be delivered to them by Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker in St. Paul's M. E. church. The veterans will assemble at Sturgiss drug store on Alder street at ten o'clock and march from thence to the church, where the service will be conducted commencing at 10.30 o'clock. Upon the occasion special music will be rendered. A general invitation to the public is extended.

Married.

STEYER—FRIEND—At Pomona, California, on April 26th, Miss Dora Friend of that city, and Mr. George N. Steyer, formerly of Garrett county, but for the past year or more a resident of Selma, California, were united in marriage. After June 10th the couple will be at home at Parlier, Cal.

MEMORIAL DAY IN OAKLAND.

Annual Decoration of the Graves of the Honored Dead.

Crook Post No. 35, Grand Army of the Republic, desires that there be a general turnout of the citizens, public school children, Knights of Pythias and all other organized bodies of the town, and visitors from the surrounding country are also invited to participate with the Post on Memorial Day, Thursday, May 30th, in decorating the graves of the noble dead who have answered the last roll call and are now resting in our cemeteries.

Crook Post will assemble at Sturgiss' drug store at 10 o'clock a. m., and at 10.30 proceed to the cemetery where the beautiful ritual of the order will be carried out and an address will be delivered by Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker.

Donations of flowers will be thankfully received and can be left at Sturgiss' drug store.

By order of the Post.

A. G. STURGISS,
Commander.

J. A. HAYDEN,
Adjutant.

GOVERNOR AND ROADS COMMISSION TO VISIT GARRETT

Party Will Arrived Tomorrow Morning and Make a Tour Throught to Grantsville.

With the appointment of Mr. Andrew Ramsay, of Mount Savage, Allegany county, the reorganization of the State Roads Commissions under the present administration of affairs in Maryland is completed, Mr. Ramsay having been appointed Tuesday by Governor Goldsborough, following the appointment of Mr. Walter E. Miller, of Wicomico county, and Senator Goslin, of Caroline county, also made on Tuesday. Chairman O. E. Weller, of Baltimore county, was appointed by the Governor several months ago. All Republicans with the exception of Senator Goslin.

It was thought that Mr. N. U. Bond of Garrett county, would be named by the Governor as a member of the Commission, a petition to that effect, with the signatures of every leading Republican in the county, attached thereto, having been forwarded to the Executive some days ago.

The Commission will arrive in Oakland tomorrow morning on train No. 3 from Baltimore and from here will go by automobile over the State road through to Grantsville and on to Frostburg from that point, expecting to make a complete tour of every county in the State and inspect the work already completed and that under way which is under State supervision or contract. It is planned by the Governor and the commission to have the National Road through Maryland completed in two years.

Illness of Senator Wellington.

We regret to note the serious illness of former Senator George L. Wellington, who was stricken at his home in Cumberland after his arrival there from Baltimore last Sunday evening. This morning, while his condition is somewhat improved over that of yesterday, he is still quite an ill man. His Garrett county friends hope for his speedy recovery.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Last week was the wettest in the history of Friendsville.

Many people have their gardens to plant yet on account of so much rain.

Quite a number took in the show at Uniontown last week.

Earl Stotler, accompanied by Rev. O. C. Dean, W. A. East and Lloyd Reckner, drove his automobile to Uniontown Friday.

Miss Izetta Fox was visiting at Selbysport lately.

Ben. Frantz will move into the Lewis property which he has purchased.

The Masons of this burg were on a visit to Oakland last week.

Ward Friend, wife and and family returned to Friendsville from Texas last week. They will make this their permanent home.

Just keep your eyes on Friendsville for the next few months and you will surely know that we are on the map.

The young men of our town are greatly disappointed on account of losing their ball ground and find it hard to get another. The citizens should look into this matter for a town without a ball team is nowhere and it keeps our boys at home.

The band is practicing its Memorial Day music and they have some fine music too.

A meeting will be held in the Bank Building by the Power Company this Tuesday and great things are predicted.

A. M. Frederick, of Fairchance, who with his wife has been staying at W. Frederick, Jr.'s, has been very sick.

C. V. Guard lost a very valuable horse a few days ago.

J. G. Kolb was plastering at Cove last week.

The town council met in reguiar session on Monday evening. The road and street committee's report was adopted. The street supervisor made his report work done. It was decided to collect of taxes in arrears immediately.

Announcement.

I have opened a fancy, staple and green grocery store in the Jarboe Building, and will always keep a well selected stock of groceries in season.

Prompt deliveries will be my motto. A share of your patronage is earnestly solicited.

Ten Thousand Summer Visitors

Should be attracted to this section every season. Only about 150 miles from the center of population of the U. S. Six hours ride from Ten Million prosperous people. 10,000 people remaining in Garrett county 100 days at an average cost of $2.50 per day would leave $2,500,000 in HARD CASH. This should be our annual payroll. How much of this vast sum would remain in Garrett county? Our fertile "Small Farms" would reap a harvest.

Every Woman, Man, Child

Attending the Sale will have the pleasant diversion of guessing on prices that lots will bring, regardless of their being bidders or buyers. The most interesting Guessing Event will be the Great WATCH GUESSING Contest—for the nearest to the price the Home Place brings. THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1912.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Mr. Robinson Repties to Mr. E. A. Weimer.

Cumberland, Md., May 20, 1912.

To the Editor of The Republican:

DEAR SIR:—After all these weeks of breathless anxiety and expectation; after arousing the curiosity and interest of your readers by regular announcements that "not this week, but next week," he would make reply to my queries anent his attitude on the Oakland Local Option Bill and the cause of its defeat; that he would proceed to meet the criticism which a month or more ago he had invited, intimating the while that he meant to rout his detractors horse, foot and dragon, visit dire disaster upon his critics, cover his enemies with confusion, drive them through the ropes "beaten to a frazzle" by his clear-cut and lucid explanations, literally annihilate them with the sledge-hammer-blows of his irresistible logic and argument—after whetting our appetite for sensational disclosures and keeping us keyed up to the highest tension, almost to the snapping point, for weeks and weeks—Hon. E. A. Weimer, of Garrett county, lightning-change political artist, funny local option comedian and versatile legislative vaudeville acrobatic star of the 1912 session of the Maryland General Assembly, becomes sponsor for a most remarkable and unusual literary deliverance. The mighty king with his forces has marched up the hill—and then he marched down again; behold, the proverbial mountain has labored and brought forth a real mouse—tail and all.

Mr. Weimer's effort in some quarters may be considered a response, but by no geometrical, chemical or any other process can it be made either a defenoe or a reply to my article published in your paper some weeks ago, in which I charged him with being responsible for the defeat of Senator Speicher's meritorious Oakland Local Option Bill, in that he prevented its passage by the House of Delegates; and in which I not only made the charge, but produced the evidence, the proof of my every statement.

Mr. Weimer's diatribe—I can find no better word through which to convey the proper estimate of his effusion in The Republican of May 16th—his diatribe really discusses an entirely new proposition while ignoring totally the real issue involved—take up a subject which is as foreign to the subject of my article of May 16th to which Weimer assumes to "reply," as the sinking of the Titanic is to the O'Malley bribery charges, or the electrocution of Rev. Richeson is to Delegate Weimer's frequent Washington conferences with certian gentlemen at intervals during legislative session. The subject—and the only subject—under discussion was the Oakland Local Option Bill, and Weimer's responsibility for its failure to pass the House after Senator Speicher had put it through the Senate. Mr. Weimer took exception to my news-article in the Oakland newspapers at the close of the Legislature; in which I charged him with being the responsible party; he tried to discredit my knowledge and information on that point in The Republican of April 11th; I "pulled the proof" on him and clinched the facts in my article dated April 16th, and to these strictures he now essays to "reply." Instead, however, of meeting the issue fairly, honestly and honorably, the Garrett Delegate utilize nearly 12 inches of his more than 50-inch "reply" in figuring out whether I paid for the publication with my own money, or whether Senator Speicher or some "wet" person is paying for it; 10 inches are used to explain Mr. Weimer's "conduct with reference to the State-wide Local Option Bill," and the remainder of the valuable space, more than half of it, is devoted to a vicious attack upon Senator Speicher and his record—not his record upon the Oakland Local Option Bill, but his record upon the Anti-Saloon League Bill, which Weimer persists in substituting for the Oakland Bill, the only one that has been at issue in this entire controversy.

Weimer's feverish anxiety to know whether or not I am paying the expense of publication in this discussion with my own money is about as germane to Weimer's anti-temperance conduct as the question of whether Anti-Saloon League Anderson, Weimer himself, or some anti-Speicher crooked Republican politician is paying the bills on the other side as well as writing the article, while Weimer subserviently signs them. Whether I use my own cash to pay my own publishing bills; or whether someone other than Weimer is both writing his articles and paying for their publication; or whose money was spent in Weimer's numerous junkets during the session; or—a few other questions I might ask if I cared to embarrass the Garrett County Statesman by going beyond the legitimate limits of this discussion; these are matters in which the people of Garrett county have little or no concern. What they really wanted to know was, whether Weimer, the temperance advocate and evangelist, was responsible for the defeat of the bill that would have given Oakland local option, in face of his temperance proclivities and professions, and this has the been proven, I believe, to their entire satisfaction. The interest of the people next centered upon Weimer's promised "explanation" of how it happened, his well advertised intention and inferred ability of clear himself of these nasty charges—and finally, their interest has been amply satiated by their Delegate's ignoble attempt to squirm and wriggle out of the stocks which hold him, and his efforts to mitigate his own disreputable conduct, to evade the consequences of his own folly, by seeking to besmirch the good name of one his most prominent fellow-countians, and to detract from that gentleman's public record as a co-representative of the good people of Garrett county in the Legislature of Maryland—a public record which, from my close scrutiny, continued observation and careful investigation, I must conscientiously state reflects great credit upon the people of his sections who sent him there, and which does honor to himself through arduous work, sincere effort and successful achievement. Senator Speicher of Garrett county, represented his people with marked ability and rare fidelity, and the confidence reposed in him has been immeasurably justified. I regret exceedingly, that I cannot thus endorse the record of Delegate Weimer, however much I might desire to proclaim "the angelic purity of that gentleman's devotion to temperance," or whatever my personal inclination to enumerate and magnify Senator Speicher's "error."

The people are now interested to know, since it has been shown that Weimer alone is responsible for the defeat of the Oakland Local Option Bill, (indeed, finding subterfuge, evasion and misstatement unavailing he has made full confession), they want to know why did he do it, if he is the sincere, the good, the consistent temperance-advocate-from-principle he pretends to be—if he was not himself "O'Malleyed" by the "wet" interests during the exciting closing days and hours of the local option fight, when no man of Weimer's calibre and stamina particularly, was above suspicion? Here is where the interest of the people lies, and nothing can confuse them or distract them from a straightforward and manly explanation; and there being nothing forthcoming in this case, the odium rests where it first was placed, and no one false cry of "Stop, thief!" can direct public attention elsewhere.

Thus would Weimer pass over lightly the tragedy of the Oakland Local Option bill—the primary and only subject of this controversey—and he would attempt to ring in the Anti-Saloon League Bill and Senator Speicher's connection with that measure, in order that he might escape the denunciation rightfully due him; he would attempt to justify an uncalled-for, an unwarranted and an absolutely undeserved attacked upon Senator Speicher, when the State-wide Local Option Bill is not and never has been a part of, or a consideration in, this controversy which Weimer himself inaugurated.

With Weimer's wanton and vicious assault upon Senator Speicher through that gentleman's actions and attitude when the Anti-Saloon League's Local Option Bill was pending in the Senate, I have nothing to do. In my personal opinion Senator Speicher's high standing his own connty, amongst his own people, and the high regard in which he is held by all public men and legislators make a defense for him unnecessary—assault and criticism may well be passed over in dignified silence when they emanate from a source of incompetent, so irresponsible, so insipid, so mawkish as in the case in point. Should the distinguished Senator himself desire to recognize Mr. Weimer by dignifying his dirty flings in a reply, all well and good. But, admitting that the provocation to participate in Weimer's pastime of dabbling in the mud-bucket is strong, Senator Speicher, either as a private citizen or as a public man, requires no advocate before his people when Delegate Weimer is his accuser. Nevertheless, there are one or two points in the Weimer screed to which I cannot refrain from referring very briefly:

The whole structure of Weimer's attack upon Senator Speicher is built upon the illogical hypothesis that the Senator betrayed his Garrett county constituents, at least those of them who favored the passage of a local option bill, because, forsooth, his vote on several occasions happened to be the vote which decided the question then being voted upon; viz: 14 to 13; 13 to 12, etc. But it could be argued with quite as much consistency and perhaps more accuracy, that either of the other 12 or 13 Senators of the majority vote, had likewise decided the question, the fact that the Senator from Garrett had voted with the majority proving nothing is it does not also prove that Senator Speicher's idea and opinions upon matters of legislation before the Senate ran parallell with those of a majority of the other intelligent, honest and conscientious Senators from various sections of the State who declined to be bulldozed or intimidated by Mr. Anderson or other temperance fanatics. Instead of trying to prove that Senator Speicher voted insincerely or corruptly because he was in the majority, the true inference is that the Senator was right; because, while there doubtless are exceptions, the majority is more frequently right than wrong, and upon this principle of majority rule because the majority is assumed to be right, the great system of a republican from of government is based. It is safe to say, by way of further illustrating the point, that Delegate Weimer is never in better company nor does he do himself greater honor, than when he finds himself with a majority, however, seldom that happy circumstances may exit.

Mr. Weimer criticizes Senator Speicher—nay, he denounces him roundly (if impotently)—for, as he alleges, defeating the Anti-Saloon League Local Option Bill in the Senate, and the very next moment with eyes cast heavenward, he lays the solacing unction to his selfish little soul that he (Weimer) did a very wise and judicious thing by defeating the Oakland Local Option bill in the House himself, at least permitting it to go by default when he could easily have had it passed, as he has admitted. Is there anything quite as inconsistent as this within the knowledge of the most trained and experienced reader of these facts? Do you, people of Garrett county, know of anything or anybody quite as heartlessly selfish or egotistical as Weimer in this exposition of his perfidy? Indeed, he measures up closely to the lamented Brann's "Meanest Man in America," whose selfishness and inconsistency, it was said, had so shrivelled his manhood that it would "rattle around in a mustard seed like a buchshot in a tin boiler," and "whose milk of human kindness, if it were churned, would produce limberger cheese."

I have reached the one logical conclusion that Weimer must be merely the tool of some Garrett county politicians who have determined to go after Senator Speicher's political scalp, and who are starting out by first trying to belittle and discredit one of the best and most commendable public records ever made by a representative from Garrett county in the Maryland Senate, or in the House of Delegater, either, for that matter, Delgate Weimer's, of course, always excepted—in his own mind. Observing the full force and effect of the Senator's coup in putting through a bill giving local option to Oakland (the only "wet" territory remaining in Garrett county) regardless of what became of the Anti-Saloon League's Local Option Bill; appreciating the result of his cleverly-conceived flank movement against the "wet" interests Senator Speicher made when he introduced and passed his Oakland bill, and jealously desirous of preventing whatever additional applause and commendation this splendid move would merit, it was decided to checkmate the Senator's plan by allowing the Oakland bill to die in the House committee, if possible, but to kill it on the floor if necessary; and who, mark you, did they engage to do this mean piece of business? Why, Weimer, of course. And then as soon as the session was over, they were to go after Senator Speicher and discredit him, if they could, before his people regardless of his splendid record in the Maryland Senate, and at the same time cover up their track in the matter of the Brutus-thrust at the Oakland bill, thus killing two birds with one stone. And who, again, started this newspaper controversy which has degenerated into a muck-raking demonstration? Why, Weimer, of course. And who has lent himself to the vile attacks, the libellous insinuations and the baseless charges—who is attempting to heap infamy and disgrace upon the upright, consistent and conscientious State Senator from Garrett county? Why, Weimer, of course. And Weimer now complains that I am mistreating him, in exposing the gaping wound he inflicted upon the Oakland Local Option Bill, pointing out his "errors," while parading the righteousness of Senator Speicher before the public!

Well, what can a man of Weimer's standard expect at the hands of reputable citizens and newspapers when he deliberately resorts to such pretexts in order to satisfy personal prejudices or serve the individual ambition of unscrupulous politicians and conscienceless political camp-followers? In all sincerity, I would not be surprised to learn that they have promised to run Weimer himself for the State Senate next year in opposition to Senator Speicher, provided that that gentleman should consent again to serve his people in the Upper House at Annapolis. They may promise Weimer the Senatorship, but I question the quality of their support or their ability to "deliver the goods." The result of such a comedy if enacted is already apparent.

GORTNER.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Lichty were hastily summoned to the bedside of their daughter Mary, who has spent the past few months in Canada and is suffering from appendicitis

Mrs. C. L. Wamsley has been on the sick list for a few days.

Senator Speicher, of Accident, was a business caller at W. H. Smouse's Monday.

Miss Pauline Sanders spent the past two weeks with her sister, Mrs. Geo. Yutzy, at Crellin.

Miss Barbara Gortner, Mrs. Reed, Mrs. Mary Davis and brothers spent Monday evening with P. P. Gortner and family.

Geo. DeWitt, Misses Mabel Frankhouser, Gertrude Fisher and Anna Brenneman, of Oakland, spent Sunday at J. H. Sander's.

Miss Bridget C. Maroney, of Oakland, spent several days recently at Gortner.

Mrs. D. J. Swartzentruber has been suffering from a very severe case of "pink eye." We are also sorry to note the illness of Miss Fannie Welch.

Hauger Brothers, of Terra Alta, spent Saturday evening and Sunday at W. C. Welch's.

Misses Anna Gortner, Laura Sanders, Leola Schlossnagle and Messrs. Ernest and Harvey Gortner and Harvey Smouse attended the high school commencement in Oakland Monday night.

A large crowd attended the funeral of J. C. Gortner at the Union church at Gortner last Sunday. He was a young man in his thirty-third year, and was highly respected and loved by all who knew him. He always won many friends wherever he would go. He was converted a number of years ago, and joined the United Brethren church. His funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. E. S. Bauman. The family of the departed one have our sincere sympathy.

On page eight of this paper we publish the local laws applicable to Garrett county which were passed by the recent Legislature and signed by Govenor Goldsborough. There are seven acts in all which will be published the required number of times in these columns.

Mrs. Charles F. Hammond will leave tomorrow for Charlottesville, Va., to attend the commencement exercises of the University of Virginia from which school her son Mr. Roy Hammond will graduate. Mrs. Hammond will be accompanied to Charlottesville by her sister, Miss Grace Smoot, of Newburg, W. Va.

Boxes for the reception of waste paper, placed at the corners of streets in Deer Park, will be provided by Mayor Hennen. That part of the town east of the B. & O. track is to receive attention, and by Memorial day, when a big crowd is expected, Deer Park will be attired in its very best. The road scraper has arrived.

Preparations are being made in Deer Park for a proper observance of Memorial Day. Some good speakers will be present, and the Deer Park band will take part in the exercises, and, in addition, a choir of young ladies will sing patriotic songs. The observance this year is to be a straight out demonstration of Union sentiments.

The ladies of the Civic Club of Oakland have been quite busy the past several days superintending the removal of rubbish and old tin cans and other litter which has been in evidence since spring opened. The work is being systematically and exceptionally well done, and the results are self evident. No portion of the town, said one of the ladies, was in better condition than that section bordering Water street.

The Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce special composed of a large number of Pullmans bearing members of the business men's association of the Iron City, passed through Oakland yesterday afternoon about two o'clock, lingering, however, for the engine to be supplied with water, when it went on the way westward. More than three billions of Pittsburgh's moneyed interests were represented on the train.

We have for publication a communication of considerable length from the pen of State Senator Speicher anent the controveasy brought about by the failure of the State-Wide Anti-Saloon League bill in the Legislature, but which we cannot publish this week on account of lack of space coupled with the fact that our columns are now overcrowded with matter relative to the same. We shall publish Senator Speicher's communication, however, in the next issue of this paper.

LITTLE BOY DEAD

As the Result Of Injuries Sustained Yesterday Afternoon.

Carlton, aged four years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy O. Winters of near Oakland, died this morning at two o'clock as the result of internal injuries received yesterday when he fell from a heavily ladened wagon which was being driven by his father, the rear wheel of the vehicle passing partially over his body and inflicting such injuries to his abdomen that made his recovery almost impossible.

The little boy was an extremely bright child and his untimely and tragic death falls as a heavy blow upon his parents.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. Bert Wolf of Palmer, W. Va., en route home from a business trip to Tunnelton spent a few days with relatives in this place.

Mrs. Marion Chamberlaine on her way home to Baltimore city from Los Angeles, Cal., where she spent the winter, is resting from the worry of her long and tedious journey by spending a few days with friends in this place, Dr. Kemp and family.

"Slugger" Miller, a miner employed by the Bloomington Coal Co., was caught under a fall of bone coal and slate while at work in his place on last Saturday afternoon and narrowly escaped being crushed to death. He sustained numerous bruises about the body and limbs. His left hand was badly lacerated and bruised.

Mr. John C. Brydon, of New York City, is in town on business.

The special train over the W. M. R. R. carrying W. M. and P. & L E. R. R. officials preceeding No. 4 as an extra, had a very narrow escape from derailment and a probable plunge down an embankment into the Potomac river on on last Saturday evening between 7 and 8 o'clock. About a quarter of a mile west of Hampshire station, Enginer Deffinbaugh of the special, noticed a mass of rock and earth on the track that had slipped down from the mountain side. He applied the emergency but had not time to stop his train and it plunged into the obstruction fortunately doing but slight damage to the front of the engine, as the speed had been greatly reduced. The officials were shaken up to some extent and were very much excited over their narrow escape. The train crew got to work with shovels and with conductor Summers as boss, soon had the obstruction removed, delaying the train about an hour. The slide not only interfered with the track but cut out the telegraph wires and for an hour this special with its load of officials from two roads was completely lost to the railroad people. This naturally caused a great deal of anxiety in the dispatcher's office at Cumberland and muchexcitementamong railroad employees at that point, until superintendent Berry, walked from the slip to Hampshire, the nearest station and telephoned the Junction the condition of affairs. Fifteen minutes after the special and passenger train No. 4, had gotten past the slide, tons and tons of earth, rock and trees came down on the track, completely obstructing traffic of all kind until Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock.

Mr. G. C. Pattison, prominent in the coal and mercantile business in this place, is in the East on a business trip.

Since last June, soon be one year, our town and vicinity can now be said to be entirely free from typhoid fever. The last two cases, Mrs. William Guy and little Mary Forbach have passed the canvalescent stage and are up and around their homes.

"The bottom has fallen out," that is the answer the coal men give you, when you inquire about the cause of the dull times in the coal trade. No orders and no price for the coal when you get an order. The outlook for summer's work is far from encouraging.

Mr. Daniel Smouse, one of our prominent young business men, was a visitor to the county seat on Tuesbay, having been called there on important business.

An insurance inspector or adjuster was in town Tuesday inspecting our water pressure and our means of fighting fire, with a view, we understand, of lessening the rate on some of the business places, which the owners claim are rated too high. We understand the fire marshal and his assistant gave him an exhibition of our squirting machinery, which startled the New Yorker and he returned home with some ideas of fighting fire that he never dreamed of before.

Great preparations are being made for the monster Junoir Order carnival to be held in its hall May 31 and June 1 st. The grand entree preceeding the opening of the dance on the evening of May 31 st with its varied fancy costumes of gorgeous hues will be as dazzling in tinsels and splendor as a circus parade. The first cotillion will be lead by Mess. Jacob Stump and Grant Harshbarger. Mr. Daniel Smouse is master of cermonies and is sparing no efforts to make the carnival one of the greatest affairs the town has ever witnessed. Come early and get your eyes focussed on the sights. You will enjoy every minute of your visit. It is for a worthy cause and a worthy order doing good in our community every day. Don't forget to come and give us a lift.

Our fever patients Mesdames Garvey and Macrobie and Master Dayton Buckhannon in the Hoffman hospital are reported as getting along nicely with the exception of the young Buckhannon boy, who lies in a critical condition.

MORERI II,
20279.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.
Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.
Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.
TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

DRY VALLEY'S INDIAN SUMMER.

How Springtime Returned to a Middle Aged Sheepman.

By O. HENRY.

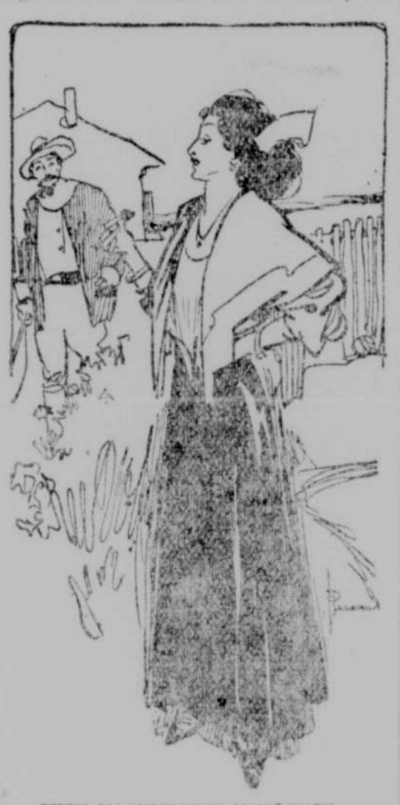
[Copyright, 1907, by the McClure company.]

Dry Valley Johnson shook the bottle. You have to shake the bottle before using, for sulphur will not dissolve. Then Dry Valley saturated a small sponge with the liquid and rubbed it carefully into the roots of his hair.

Dry Valley had been a sheepman. His real name was Hector, but he had been rechristened after his range.

Many years of living face to face with sheep on their own terms wearied Dry Valley Johnson. So he sold his ranch for $18,000 and moved to Santa Rosa to live a life of gentlemanly ease.

Dry Valley bought a four room cottage in the village and a library on strawberry culture. Behind the cottage was a garden of which he made a strawberry patch.



WITH MAGNIFICENT INSOLENCE.

When his strawberries were beginning to ripen Dry Valley bought the heaviest buggy whip in the Santa Rosa store.

In the house next to Dry Valley's lived a widow with a pack of children that gave the husbandman frequent anxious misgivings. In the woman there was a strain of the Spanish. She had wedded one of the name of O'Brien.

Between the two homesteads ran a crazy picket fence overgrown with morning glory and wild gourd vines. Often he could see little heads with mops of black hair and flashing dark eyes dodging in and out between the pickets, keeping tabs on the reddening berries.

Late one afternoon Dry Valley went to the postoffice. When he came back, like Mother Hubbard, he found the deuce to pay. The descendants of Iberian bandits and Hibernian cattle raiders had swooped down upon his strawberry patch.

Dry Valley slipped into the house, got his whip and charged the marauders. The lash curled about the legs of the nearest, a greedy ten-year-old, before they knew they were discovered. His screech gave warning, and the flock scampered for the fence like a drove of javelis flushed in the chaparral. Dry Valley's whip drew a toll of two more elfin shrieks before they dived through the vine clad fence.

Dry Valley, less fleet, followed them nearly to the pickets. Checking his useless pursuit, he rounded a bush, dropped his whip and stood, voiceless, motionless, the capacity of his powers consumed by the act of breathing and preserving the perpendicular.

Behind the bush stood Panchita O'Brien, scorning to fly. She was nineteen, the oldest of the raiders. Her night black hair was gathered back in a wild mass and tied with a scarlet ribbon. She stood with reluctant feet, yet nearer the brook than to the river, for childhood had environed and detained her.

She looked at Dry Valley Johnson for a moment with magnificent insolence and before his eyes slowly crunched a luscious berry between her white teeth. Then she turned and walked slowly to the fence with a swaying, conscious motion, such as a duchess might make use of in leading a promenade. There she turned again and grilled Dry Valley Johnson once more in the dark flame of her audacious eyes, laughed a trifle schoolgirlishly and twisted herself with pantherish quickness between the pickets to the O'Brien side of the gourd vine.

Dry Valley picked up his whip and went into his house. He stumbled as he went up the two wooden steps. The old Mexican woman who cooked his meals and swept his house called him to supper as he went through the rooms. Dry Valley went on, stumbled down the front steps, out the gate and down the road into a mesquite thicket at the edge of town. He sat down in the grass and laboriously plucked the spines from a prickly pear one by one. This was his attitude of thought, acquired in the days when his problems were only those of wind and wool and water.

A thing had happened to the man—a thing that, if you are eligible, you must pray may pass you by. He had become enveloped in the Indian summer of the soul.

Dry Valley had had no youth. Even his childhood had been one of dignity and seriousness. At six he had viewed the frivolous gambols of the lambs on his father's ranch with silent disapproval. His life as a young man had been wasted. And now in his sear and yellow leaf one scornful look from the eyes of Panchita O'Brien had flooded the autumnal landscape with a tardy and delusive summer heat.

But a sheepman is a hardy animal. Dry Valley Johnson had weathered too many northers to turn his back on a late summer, spiritual or real. Old? He would show them.

By the next mail went an order to San Antonio for an outfit of the latest clothes, colors and styles and prices no object. The next day went the recipe for the hair restorer clipped from a newspaper, for Dry Valley's sunburned auburn hair was beginning to turn silvery above his ears.

Dry Valley kept indoors closely for a week except for frequent sallies after youthful strawberry snatchers. Then, a few days later, he suddenly emerged brilliantly radiant in the hectic glow of his belated midsummer madness.

A jaybird blue tennis suit covered him outwardly almost as far as his wrists and ankles. His shirt was oxblood, his collar winged and tall, his necktie a floating oriflamme; his shoes a venomous bright tan, pointed and shaped on penitential lasts. A little flat straw hat with a striped band desecrated his weatherbeaten head. Lemon colored kid gloves protected his oak tough hands from the benignant May sunshine. This sad and optic smiting creature teetered out of its den, smiling foolishly and smoothing its gloves for men and angels to see. To such a pass had Dry Valley Johnson been brought by Cupid, who always shoots game that is out of season with an arrow from the quiver of Momus. Reconstructing mythology, he had rised a prismatic macaw from the ashes of the gray-brown phoenix that had folded its tired wings to roost under the trees of Santa Rosa.

Dry Valley paused in the street to allow Santa Rosans within sight of him to be stunned and then deliberately and slowly, as his shoes required, entered Mrs. O'Brien's gate.

Not until the eleven months' drought did Santa Rosa ease talking about Dry Valley Johnson's courtship of Panchita O'Brien. It was an unclassifiable procedure—something like a combination of cakewalking, deaf and dumb oratory, postage stamp flirtation and parlor charades. It lasted two weeks and then came to a sudden end.

Of course Mrs. O'Brien favored the match as soon as Dry Valley's intentions were disclosed. Being the mother of a woman child and therefore a charter member of the Ancient Order of the Rat Trap, she joyfully decked out Panchita for the sacrifice. The girl was temporarily dazzled by having her dresses lengthened and her hair piled up on her head and came near forgetting that she was only a slice of cheese. It was nice, too, to have as good a match as Mr. Johnson paying you attentions and to see the other girls fluttering the curtains at their windows to see you go by with him.

Dry Valley bought a buggy with yellow wheels and a fine trotter in San Antonio. Every day he drove out with Panchita. He was never seen to speak to her when they were walking or driving. The consciousness of his clothes kept his mind busy; the knowledge that he could say nothing of interest kept him dumb; the feeling that Panchita was there kept him happy.

He took her to parties and dances and to church. He tried—oh, no man ever tried so hard to be young as Dry Valley did. He could not dance, but he invented a smile which he wore on these joyous occasions, a smile that in him was as great a concession to mirth and gayety as turning handsprings would be in another. He began to seek the company of the young men in the town, even of the boys. They accepted him as a decided damper, for his attempts at sportiveness were so forced that they might as well have essayed their games in a cathedral. Neither he nor any other could estimate what progress he had made with Panchita.

The end came suddenly in one day, as often disappears the false afterglow before a November sky and wind.

Dry Valley was to call for the girl one afternoon at 6 for a walk. An afternoon walk in Santa Rosa was a feature of social life that called for the pick of one's wardrobe. So Dry Valley began gorgeously to array himself; and so early that he finished early, and went over to the O'Brien cottage. As he neared the porch on the crooked walk from the gate he heard sounds of revelry within. He stopped and looked through the honeysuckle vines in the open door.

Panchita was amusing her younger brothers and sisters. She wore a man's clothes—no doubt those of the late Mr. O'Brien. On her head was the smallest brother's straw hat decorated with an ink striped paper band. On her hands were flapping yellow cloth gloves, roughly cut out and sewn for the masquerade. The same material covered her shoes, giving them the semblance of tan leather. High collar and flowing necktie were not omitted.

Panchita was an actress. Dry Valley saw his affectedly youthful gait, his limp where the right shoe hurt him, his forced smile, his awkward simulation of a gallant air, all reproduced with startling fidelity. For the first time a mirror had been held up to him. The corroboration of one of the youngsters calling, "Mamma, come and see Pancha do like Mr. Johnson," was not needed.

As softly as the caricatured tans would permit, Dry Valley tiptoed back to the gate and home again.

Twenty minutes after the time appointed for the walk Panchita tripped demurely out her gate in a thin, trim white lawn and sailor hat. She strolled up the sidewalk and slowed her steps at Dry Valley's gate, her manner expressing wonder at his unusual delinquency.

Then out of his door and down the walk strode, not the polychromatic victim of a lost summertime, but the sheepman rehabilitated. He wore his old gray woolen shirt, open at the throat, his brown duck trousers stuffed into his overrun boots, and his white felt sombrero on the back of his head. Twenty years or fifty he might look, Dry Valley cared not. His light blue eyes met Panchita's dark ones with a cold flash in them. He came as far as the gate. He pointed with his long arm to her house.

"Go home," said Dry Valley. "Go home to your mother. I wonder lightnin' don't strike a fool like me. Go home and play in the sand. What business have you got cavortin' around with grown men? I reckon I was locoed to be makin' a he poll-parrot out of myself for a kid like you. Go home and don't let me see you no more. Why I done it, will somebody tell me? Go home and let me try and forget it."

Panchita obeyed and walked slowly toward her home, saying nothing. For some distance she kept her head turned and her large eyes fixed intrepidly upon Dry Valley's. At her gate she stood for a moment looking back at him, then ran suddenly and swiftly into the house.

Old Antonia was building a fire in the kitchen stove. Dry Valley stopped at the door and laughed harshly.

"I'm a pretty looking old rhinoceros to be gettin' stuck on a kid, ain't I, 'Tonia?" said he.

"Not verree good thing," agreed Antonia sagely, "for too much old man to likee muchacha."

"You bet it ain't," said Dry Valley grimly. "It's dum foolishness, and, besides it hurts."

He brought at one armful the regalia of his aberration, the blue tennis suit, shoes, hat, gloves and all, and threw them in a pile at Antonia's feet.

"Give them to your old man," said he, "to hunt antelope in."

Just as the first star presided palely over the twilight Dry Valley got his biggest strawberry book and sat on the back steps to catch the last of the reading light. He thought he saw the figure of some one in his strawberry patch. He laid aside the book, got his whip and hurried forth to see.

It was Panchita. She had slipped through the picket fence and was halfway across the patch. She stopped when she saw him and looked at him without wavering.

A sudden rage—a humiliating flush of unreasoning wrath—came over Dry Valley. For this child he had made himself a motley to the view. He had tried to bribe Time to turn backward for himself. He had—been made a fool of. At last he had seen his folly. There was a gulf between him and youth over which he could not build a bridge even with yellow gloves to protect his hands. And the sight of his torment coming to pester him with her elfin pranks—coming to plunder his strawberry vines like a mischievous schoolboy—roused all his anger.

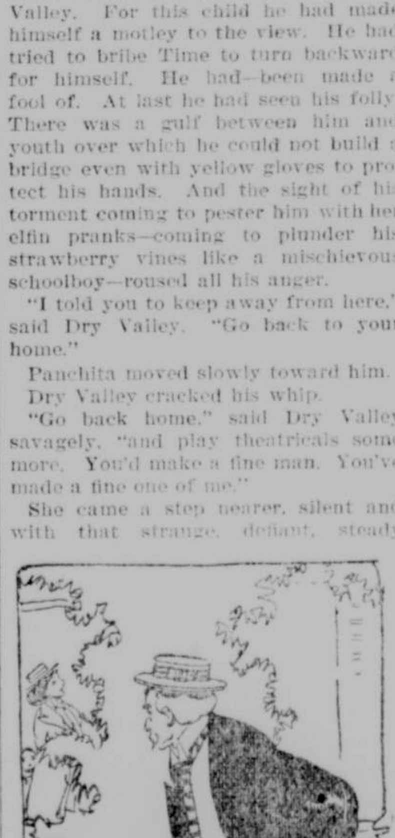
"I told you to keep away from here," said Dry Valley. "Go back to your home."

Panchita moved slowly toward him.

Dry Valley cracked his whip.

"Go back home," said Dry Valley savagely, "and play theatricals some more. You'd make a fine man. You've made a fine one of me."

She came a step nearer, silent and with that strange, defiant, steady shine in her eyes that had always puzzled him. Now it stirred his wrath.



HE LOOKED THROUGH THE VINES.

His whiplash whistled through the air. He saw a red streak suddenly come out through her white dress above her knee where it had struck.

Without flinching and with the same unchanging dark glow in her eyes Panchita came steadily toward him through the strawberry vines. Dry Valley's trembling hand released his whip handle. When within a yard of him Panchita stretched out her arms.

"God, kid!" stammered Dry Valley. "Do you mean"—

But the seasons are versatile, and it may have been springtime after all instead of Indian summer that struck Dry Valley Johnson.

VICTORIOUS CHRIST HEADS PROCESSION

Leads Multitude of Captives From Death's Prison.

At Boston Pastor Russell Pictures the Release of Death's Prisoners and Shows From Scripture That in the Triumphal Procession Four Grades Will Participate.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Boston, Mass., May 19.—Pastor Russell spoke here today in the Boston Theatre. In one of his two discourses he used the following text: "When He ascended up on high, He led a multitude of captives."—Ephesians iv, 8.

This grand expression respecting the glorious outcome of the Savior's work is quoted by the Apostle Paul from the Psalms (lxviii, 18). The figure thus thrust before our mental eye is that of a great Conqueror whose victory is being heralded. With the Romans we know that it was a custom that generals returning from wars were granted what were termed "Triumphs"—or triumphal processions.

Let us permit our mental eye to feast upon the scene of our text. Jesus, in fulfilment of the Divine Program, had left the heavenly condition and descended to earth, taking a bondman's form or nature in order "that He, by the grace of God, might taste death for every man;" that He might rescue Adam and his race from the death condition—under Divine sentence and under the power of Satan.

Therefore, the Redeemer counted not His life precious to Him, but freely delivered Himself up, and died, "the Just for the unjust," that He might bring mankind back into harmony with God. His humiliation ended in death, but His triumph began when God raised Him from the dead by His own power, and set Him at the right hand of His own Majesty—"far above angels, principalities and powers and every name that is named."

Leading Forth the Captives.

With most conquerors, in olden times, the captives were made slaves. Not so, however, will be the result of Jesus' victory. First of all in the procession are the saints—"the Church of the First-born." Then will come a company, more numerous, but less heroic—"a great multitude," uncrowned, but with "palm branches," not antitypical Priests, but antitypical Levites, associates and servants of the Royal Priesthood, the Bride.

Then will follow (Hebrews xi, 38-40) other faithful ones of the past, the Ancient Worthies. The Prophet speaks also of the "rebellious house." The classes previously specified were not rebellious, but gladly and willingly forsook all to do the will of the Father and to attain the liberty of sons of God, as the first-fruits of the triumph of the Lamb.

But during the thousand years of Christ's reign He will lead forth the "rebellious house"—the world of mankind—not all of them, we may be sure, for some, the Scriptures positively declare, will die the Second Death, because, after realizing their deliverance, they will love sin and will therefore be destroyed as enemies of God.

"He Gave Gifts Unto Men."

In this prophetic reference to our Lord's ascension it is declared, not only that He would lead forth a multitude of captives, granting them freedom, liberty, blessings, but also that He would confer gifts.

The Apostle proceeds to explain the matter and tells us what gifts are meant. He says, "And He gave some Apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." It behooves us to notice that the Apostle does not intimate that Jesus gave to some Methodism, to others Presbyterianism, and to others Roman Catholicism, etc. No, when we held such thoughts it was because we failed to see, first, that there is but the "one Church of the Living God, whose names are written in heaven," and second, that that one Church is not any of the various sects and parties, but includes the saintly in all of these, "For the Lord knoweth them that are His."

Noting carefully the Apostle's argument we perceive that the Master did not give these gifts for the conversion of the world. He does specify, however, what they were for, namely, "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the Body of Christ"—the Church, the Bride. Is it supposable that the Apostle erred in this statement and that the fact is the reverse—that these gifts were provided for the conversion of the world, and that the Apostle thoroughly misunderstand the matter? No! We are to be taught by the Apostles, and may be sure that there is no mistake.

The Lord from time to time has raised up evangelists, pastors and teachers for this glorious service of preparing the "chaste virgin," the Church, to be the Bride in glory, but the Apostolic office, as represented in The Twelve, specially provided by the Father, has continued and needs no replenishment. We still have their instructions as fully as the early Church, "that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work."

Saloons and Crime.

The number of prisoners in the West Virginia penitentiary on March 1, 1912, exclusive of federal prisoners, was 1,173. About 480 prisoners received each year, according to a statement of Warden M. L. Brown. Mr. Brown also states that a large majority of these prisoners come from six license counties. The part liquor has in keeping this institution full, is clearly set forth in the following statement from the warden.

In my judgment, at least 75 per cent. of all prisoners sent to this institution owe their downfall either directly of indirectly, to the use of intoxicating liquors. The more intelligent prisoners place the percentage even higher than this. I think that is a conservative estimate.

Number of prisoners committed to the West Virginia penitentiary from the several counties of the several counties of the state, for the period beginning September 30, 1908, and endinng September 30, 1910, together with the population according to the last census, and classified as "wet" and "dry".

From 33 "Dry" counties with population of 534,518, 179 prisoners.

From 23 "Wet" counties with population of 686,601, 677 prisoners.

The proportion of immates in the penitentiary from prohibition counties is three and one-third for every thousand of population, and from license counties, the proportion is ten to every thousand of population.—The American Issue.

Big Premiums Offered By The Maryland Horticultural Society. For Maryland Week Show, November 18-23, 1912, Baltimore, Md.

The preliminary schedule of premiums for the annual fruit, floral and vegetable show, held in connection with the Annual Meeting of the State Horticultural Society, has been issued. The meeting and show will be held in the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, a little earlier this year than heretofore, the date being November 18-23.

The premiums in all classes have been greatly increased and the show this year promises to be even greater than last. All growers of fruit should be sure to spray to produce quality, as a special rule made by Executive Board pronibits exhibiting fruit that is cloudy or infected by fungus or insects perts.

Growers of fruit and vegetables should decide now the class in which they expect to enter, and give special attention to those crops.

The class of home-made horticultural products has been reclassified and the premiums increased. The aim of the Society is to make this exhibit especially educational and attractive to woman.

This show is the greatest advertisement of Maryland Horticultural resources and all growers should plan to compete for the prizes. Copies of the premium list and further information can be secured by addressing T. B. Symons, Secretary, College Park, Md.

Blossom Blight Appearing.

Blossom blight is appearing to a serious extent in many plum and peach orchards and on wild goose plum and other American varieties over 90 per. of the fruit clusters are dead, including the leaves adjoining them, and in many cases this will soon work back into the wood and cause a twig blight.

This trouble is induced by the brown rot fungus which later causes the loss of so much peach and plum fruit in wet seasons. The fungus lives over winter in the mummified fruits, and from those partially buried in the ground; at the same time the trees are blooming, small brown, mushroom-like bodies are sent up, which scatter their spores through the air to the blossoms, causing them to blight if the weather is warm and moist, especially if they have been slightly injured by frost. In fact the disease is often mistaken for frost injury when it first appears. Possibly, also, the severe injury to the wood of fruit trees the past winter may have made them blight easier.

Fortunately, this disease is not of frequent occurrence on the blossoms, as it is difficult to spray at such a time as to prevent the injury. A spray with 4-4 50 bordeaux mixture, just as the buds begin to swell, will protect against infection from spores on the tree, but unless the rotton fruits are collected and not allowed to become covered with destroyed earth, there is no protection from the cloud of spores they give off just when the blossoms are open and when spraying of any kind would seriovuly reduce the set of fruit.

In Memoriam.

Delphine Bateman, nee English, was born in Bradford county, Pa., May 20th, 1849, and died at her home near Swanton April 15th, 1912, aged 62 years, 10 months and 26 days. She was a daughter of James H. and Sarah M. English. In the year 1867 she was married to Levi Bateman, and to this union were born three children, two daughters and one son: Sarah Myrtle, deceased, Hugh, now of Swanton and Carrie May, deceased, and also an adopted son living with Hugh at the home. Ten years ago she came from Penfield, Pa., to Bond, Md., with her son where they lived until about two years ago when they moved to Oakland and afterwards to a farm near Swanton where they lived until her death. She has been a great sufferer for years and especially the last year of her life. She was a faithful christian, being a member of the Presbyterian church at Penfield for fifteen years. After coming to Bond she joined the Methodist church and lived a consistent christian until her death. She was laid to rest in the North Glade cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Cuppett in the North Glade M. E. church.

Dear mother, it is hard to give thee up.
  To have thee in our home no more;
But as we drink grief's brimming cup
  Into the chalice balm shall pour.

And in the years that yet remain,
  For us to serve beneath the sun,
Our faith and hope will banish pain,
  Till joy the strife with grief has won.

For thou awaitest on the farther shore,
  To gladly welcome dear ones here below,
And we shall hold thee to our heart once more,
  When through the portal of the tomb we go.

A FRIEND.

Attention, Knights of Pythias.

The members of Garrett Lodge, Knights of Pythias No. 113, of Oakland, will dedicate their new Castle Hall on Thursday, May 30th, (Decoration Day,) with elaborate ceremonies.

All members of the order are invited to join in the dedication of a Pythian home of which we are all justly proud and help make the occasion one long to be remembered in the history of our beloved order.

An elaborate program of exercises will be carried out, to be announced later and we expect to have not only the grand officers of the grand domain of Maryland with us on this occasion but also expect to have some representative of the Supreme Lodge to take part in the exercises.

Let every Pythian make an effort to be present on this memorable occasion.

BUT FEW DAYS LEFT OF THE PIANO CONTEST

Hustlers for Instrument Must Put In Best Work From Now on.

IT IS TIME TO GET BUSY.

Final Count Will Be Held on Monday, June 17th, At 3 O'clock.

Now Listen! There is absolutely no truth in the statement that this is the closed season for hunting subscriptions to the Oakland Republican. The law (made by the Republican,) permits live active aggressive contestants to hunt subscriptions until the close of the contest and there is a bounty on them too. For every new subscription brought in a bounty of 600 votes in Republicans' Popular Voting Contest is paid. Some happy young lady is going to march away from The Republican office in just a short time wearing the smile that won't come off, because that young lady will have won the fine Obermyer & Sons piano.

There are only a few more days left of this contest. That means that the race still belongs to anybody who has just a little initative. The fact of the matter is that no one yet has such a start that it could not be easily overcome in a few days of consistent work. This is certainly the most glorious opportunity that the young ladies of this community have ever had. Every contestant now thoroughly understands the rules and methods of securing subscriptions and the majority of them have settled down in the earnest zealous work that elimates idle dreaming and means working for some definite point. The aimless hap-hazard soliciting has been dropped and a systematic campaign for votes is now in progress.

You cannot tell how many votes a candidate really has by the score that was published, for the reason that the majority of contestants are wisely voting but a small portion of their strength thus keeping their real standing covered up from their opponents. But the score indicates those who can come to the front when the proper time comes.

There is no question but what every one in and around Oakland has been solicited, or at least, has heard about this contest.

The better field for operation now lies in the country, as practically every one in the village is now a subscriber to the paper—or never will be.

The contest department wants to urge on every contestant the necessity for making the next few days count for all they are worth. The time is growing short and it is only the real hustler who will have much of a show after this issue. That's why it will pay to get in the game with all the energy you can command from this time until the end.

And remember that the bonus on clubs of seven will remain the same until the final count on Monday, June 17th, at 3 o'clock. The answer is plain. Get busy—and keep busy—from now on.

Remember all special bonus votes count on the piano and other prizes just the same.

The Republican has arranged a big bonus offer which will be good to and including the final day which is June 17, as follows:

For every 7 new subscriptions, 8,000 extra, a total of 12,200.

For every 7 renewal subscriptions 6,000 extra, a total of 9,500.

For every 7 back subscriptions 4,000 extra, a total of 6,800.

For every 40 merchant's coupons 1,000 extra, a total of 2,000.

The three 5-year subscriptions may be for either one or two parties.

The two 20-year subscriptions may be for either one or two parties.

LETTER FROM C. W HPDSON.

Greets His Garrett County Friends Through The Rebublican.

I have so many of you and so many asked me to write to them that I could not afford the stationery, therefore as all editors have nothing to do but sit in their sanctums and gather in the sheckels, I thought I would let the good editor of this paper pay for the paper. Besides, he needs something occasionally to fill up space.

We left Mt. Lake Park on train No. 3 and soon the Glades of Garrett were behind us. We found when we reached the Little Kanawha river that it was out of its banks from recent rains. It was here that we saw the first stern-wheel steamer that we had seen since we lived in Kentucky. It looked very familiar, though very small. When we reached Cincinnatti night was at hand. We thought that we would have a little time to walk around and see some of the town, but the train on which we came was a little behind time, so we did not have long to wait before we boarded one of the oddest little accommodation trains which scrambled out of the station backwards and took us over into Kentucky to Latonia where one of the fine trains of the L. & N. railroad was waiting for us. When we got off the accommodation to get on the other train we could have thought we were in Africa. A mob of negroes surrounded the train for no ostensible purpose that I could see except to see the wheels go round. The through trains of the L. & N. are very convenient. All the day coaches have reclining chairs and are well lighted. We were soon running across the blue grass and arrived in Louisville about nine o'clock in the evening. I think we made three stops there. It seemed we were on a see-Washington automobile and where taking in the town. The train would run for a few minutes and then stop and then go on again for a while. After we had seen Fourth Avenue and a part of Mrs. Wiggs' Cabbage patch we at last pulled out for Nashville. At Glasgow Junction we passed over a part of the Mammoth Cave and anyone of a vivid imagination might of heard the gnomes as they carved out the wonderful subterranean halls.

We had planned to make connections in Montgomery, Alabama, with a train which would have caused us to reach our destination twenty four hours sooner than we did, but one can never count on making connections in the South. When we reached Nashville we found that the train from St. Louis was two hours late so we were shunted over a siding to wait for it. All of you have probably been reading about the floods of the Mississippi. Between Nashville and Birmingham much of the country was under water. It sometimes seemed that the train was running through a lake studded with trees. We stopped in Birmingham long enough to say we had been there and then we were off for Montgomery where we arrived an hour after our train had left. We were not sorry when we remembered that we were in the first capital of the Confederate States of America. As we entered the porch we saw a bronze star in the marble pavement and inscribed on the star was the information that Jefferson Davis, the president of the Confederecy, had stood on that spot when he took the oath of office at his inauguration. I asked my wife to stand there while I took her picture. When we entered the building a genuine Johnny Reb, gray uniform and all, met us and escorted us all over the building and showed us many things of interert connected with the days of the civil war. Among them were the many battle flags which had been captured by the Union troops in battle and which the United States government a few years ago returned. This act of courtesy is much appreciated by the people of the South. I think the guides name was Yelverton and he considered it to be more an honor to have been one of StonewallJackson's men than to be president of the United States. There is also here one of the most beautiful monuments I have ever seen to the soldiers and sailors of the Confederacy.

We left Montgomery about eight o'clock over the West of Alabama railroad for Selma. There was a notice in the car I think must have been writen by an Irishman, it was such a bull. It read as follows: "All passengers are requested to keep their feet off the seats and the conductors are ordered to see that they do not do this." We spent the night in Selma and most of the next day. It is a very pretty little town which is supported by a large cotton trade. The Alabama river gives access to the gulf by water and there are three or four railroad lines passing through there. We arrived here in Thomaston an the second afternoon after we left. The country around is slightly rolling. The soil is sandy with a clay subsoil and seems to be well adapted to raising cotton and negroes. There is a plenty of both and both seem to be of a good variety. Nearly all the horses here are mules, which would be naturally expected, but there are some very fine saddle and driving horses. The people are kind and friendly and gave us a hearty welcome. One of the letters of the alphabet was lost on the way down. I have not been able to hear a medial "R" since I have been here. There seems to be no use for it except at the beginning of a word. The speech is soft and pleasant to the ear, but would of course sound strange to anyone not used to it.

Roses and other flowers are in bloom and strawberries are ripe. Peaches and figs are as large as pigeon eggs and will be ripe in May. There is a plenty of garden "sas" for all those who like it, but we do miss the mountain water. Artesian wells are used to a great extent and the water is mineral and tastes like salts. The folks here like it and say we will. Perhaps we will if we live long enough, but I would rather have a drink out of the crystal spring at Mt. Lake Park.

I guess the editor will balk if I take up any more of his space so I will quit and write more at another time.

ATTENTION, MR. FARMER!

In your efforts to improve your soil, to grow better crops, and make farming "worth while," have you been getting the worth of your money spent for fertilizer? Do you realize that when you buy a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE that you are getting more than four times as much Phosphoric acid for your money as when buying the expensive acid phosphate? Do you realize that

When buying one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE you get fully as much Phosphoric Acid, for one-half the money, as when buying one ton of Ground Bone, which repeated tests show produces no better results than the Ground Phospnate? Do you know that we guarantee that

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade cantains 1,223 pounds of B. P. L. (Bone Phosphate of Lime)? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 560 pounds of Phosphoric Acid? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 750 Pounds of Lime? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains 244.6 pounds of Phosphoric? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains [according to a recent test made by the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station] 5.37 per cent available [2 per cent citric acid test] when applied to the soil direct? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade cantains, according to the analysis, 107.4 lbs. of available phosphoric acid for the first crop's use, if applied under proper conditions, and leaves 452 pounds of phosphoric acid to become available for the use of future crops? That

One ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade contains sufficient Phosphoric Acid supply the needs of one acre of land for from five to six years after it is applied, and will become available as it is needed from year to year by the growing plant? That

One ton af our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE of a 28 per cent grade will cost, delivered at most any point in the Southern, Central, Northern or New England States, from $8.00 to $10.00 per ton of 2,000 pounds, if bought in carloads in bulk.

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade, which is being sold and used so extensively throughout the country, contains only one-half as much Phosphoric Acid, only half as much Phosphorus, and less than one-half as much lime, as one ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE?

Are you aware that nearly one-half of this acid phosphate consists of sulphuric acid, a product which is not only valueless as a fertilizer, but which is actually harmful to the soils, as it renders them more acid?

Are you aware that one ton of acid phosphate of a 14 per cent grade containing only 280 pounds of Phosphoric Acid, will cost you just about twice as much as a ton of our NATURAL FINE GROUND PHOSPHATE containing 560 pounds of Phosphoric acid?

We vouch for the truth of these statements, and if you have not figured these things out for yourself it is high time you were beginning to "sit up and take notice." We will be pleased to give you any further information you may desire if you will address

FARMERS GROUND ROCK PHOSPHATE CO.,
MT. PLEASANT, TENNESSEE.

D. J. Swartzentruber of Oakland is our agent for Garrett County, Md. He will be pleased to attend your wants. For further information call on him.

I wish to have all the orders I can get for Rock Phosphate in by May 20th for buckwheat, so please send me a postal card and state how many sacks of 150 lbs. to a sack. This will cost 66c per sack, cash, from the car at Oakland. This fertilizer has proven to do just as much good as Double Eagle or any other kind that has been tried side by side with this. 200 lbs. per acre is usually put on. Thank you for an order. D. J. KISS IN THE DARK

The Meeting In the Train and the Close of the Episode.

By ESTHER VANDEVEER.

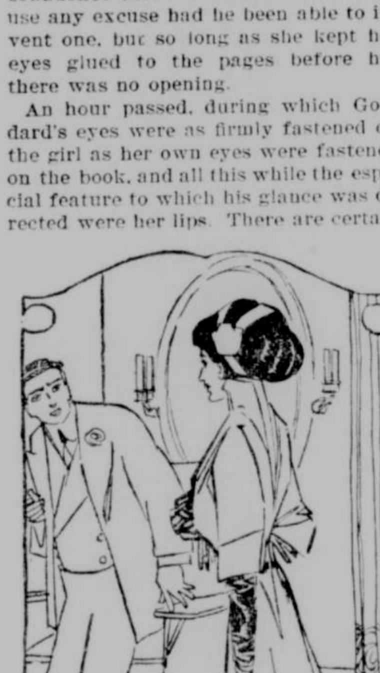
[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

George Goddard, starting for the seashore one day in July, felt so buoyant that it seemed he must go up in the air like a balloon. He flung his belongings down into a seat, then walked through the cars, out on to the platform, anywhere, everywhere. He was so happy he couldn't keep still. Then came the cry "All aboard!" He jumped on to the train and rolled out of the station, it seemed, on strewn flowers.

In a seat on the opposite side of the car sat a young lady reading a book. She was tastefully dressed. Her hair shimmered in the sun that streamed in at the window beside her. She was an altogether attractive looking person. The girl seemed to be absorbed in her book, and there was no chance to scrape an acquaintance. Had she been without reading matter he might have resorted to the old device of offering her a magazine, a book or a paper, but since she was already supplied to offer more would make the underlying motive too apparent.

The girl seemed to be unaware that there was a young man in the car who was eying her longingly. The book she was reading must have been absorbing, for she did not pause a moment to look out of the window or anywhere else for that matter—not even in the direction of the admiring Goddard. His happiness excited in him a confidence that would have led him to use any excuse had he been able to invent one, but so long as she kept her eyes glued to the pages before her there was no opening.

An hour passed, during which Goddard's eyes were as firmly fastened on the girl as her own eyes were fastened on the book, and all this while the especial feature to which his glance was directed were her lips. There are certain lips that can only be described by one word—kissable—and this girl's lips were of that kind. Surely it was dangerous for a youngster just escaped from a treadmill to sit for a whole hour looking at a pair of kissable lips. Indeed, Goddard, worked upon by his gladness of heart, the beautiful morning, the attractiveness of the girl and those two delicately curved virmilion lips, did that which the moment after it was done filled him with consternation. When the train dashed into a tunnel he made a dash for her, threw his arms around her neck, there was a momentary struggle, and he had kissed her.



SHE WAS THE GIRL WITH THE KISSABLE LIPS.

It was all over within a quarter of a minute, and luckily so, for the tunnel was a very short one; indeed, so short that no lamps had been lighted in the car. When the train shot out into daylight Goddard was looking out of the window with apparent unconcern, though his heart was beating like a kettledrum. It was some time before he dared look at the girl, but when he did she was reading her book. There was another woman who sat in the seat next back of her who was fanning herself vigorously with an appearance of annoyance. Goddard wondered if he had made a mistake. He was not sure. This set him to thinking. If he had kissed the wrong person the kiss in the dark had been just as delicious as if he had kissed the right one. Singular, wasn't it?

But Goddard was quite sure he had kissed the girl with the kissable lips. She sat two seats in advance of him and on the opposite side. In order to make sure of going the right distance he had put his hand on backs of the two seats in passing. No; he had kissed the right person, but why did the woman in the rear seat look so flustered, and why was the girl in front so undisturbed? It was a mystery that he could not solve.

The conductor called "Pebble Beach," and the train slowed up at the station at which Goddard was to stop. Collecting his hand baggage, he arose. The girl with the kissable lips arose too. She left the car in advance of him and, giving her hand baggage and checks to a cabman, entered the cab, while her admirer entered another. When he was driven up to his hotel the girl was ascending the steps.

Goddard felt uneasy. A friend of his mother's had given him a note of introduction to a Miss Margaret Deane, who was at the hotel or expected to be there soon after his arrival. Suppose the young lady he had kissed should be this Margaret Deane? And suppose she knew he had kissed her? He shuddered. Unless she were a woman of rare good sense and discretion she could make it hot for him. Should she tell the story to his friends he might better take passage for Australia or some port where he would be lost to his former existence. When he had fancied that he might have kissed the wrong woman he had been much displeased and disappointed. Now he hoped he had.

Going to his room, he changed his dress for dinner. Just before going into the dining hall he passed the girl he had kissed. She was walking through the hall. She did not notice him. He was encouraged to think that either he had kissed the other woman or that this one did not connect him with the person who had kissed her.

On the register he found the name of Margaret Deane, it having been placed there not far from his own. After dinner he called a servant, gave him his card with his note of introduction and told him to find Miss Deane and deliver them. The servant returned and said Miss Deane would meet Mr. Goddard in the drawing room. Goddard went there and waited a few minutes, when the lady entered. She was the girl with the kissable lips.

She advanced to meet Goddard without the slightest indication of ever having seen him before. The blood suddenly departed from his cheeks; but, encouraged by her manner, he regained .confidence and was enabled to stammer some commonplace remarks. Then when they came to chat more freely he observed her closely with a view to discover whether there was evidence of her knowing that he was the person who had taken the liberty the consequences of which had thrown him into so great a terror. He could not detect the slightest sign of her ever having seen him before or of antagonism or embarrassment at meeting him. Surely he must have kissed the wrong woman after all.

Mr. Goddard saw more or less of Miss Deane. His mind was on his secret, and he could not let it alone. He was impelled to discover what would have been his fate had she been kissed by him, as he had intended, knowing him to be the culprit. He made a supposititious case in which a friend of his had done the same thing and asked her had she been the girl kissed what she would have done.

"A man I had never seen and knew nothing about?" she asked.

"Yes."

"I don't know what I should have done openly; inwardly I should have despised the man who kissed me."

He shuddered.

Toward the end of his vacation Goddard recovered largely from his fright. Every day he felt more and more sure that he had kissed the woman who had sat behind Miss Deane, and he sincerely hoped that that woman had gone to the other side of the globe for a permanent residence. Had he kissed Miss Deane surely she would have given some intimation of the fact that she had passed through the experience of the person he had mentioned in the supposititious case.

But one day he received a terrible scare. Miss Deane appeared one morning on the beach, her neckwear pinned with a horseshoe scarf or stickpin the exact duplicate of one he had owned. This would not have been so terrifying had it not been that he had worn his horseshoe in his scarf on the day he came up from the city to the seashore. He had noticed soon after his arrival that he had lost it and, recalling the circumstances of his journey, had remembered that when going to the train on a street car he had been jostled in a crowd. He had assumed that at this moment he had been relieved of his pin. Now, seeing its exact counterpart on Miss Deane, he was seized with one of those alarms that are the result of a guilty conscience.

He joined the young lady and riveted his eye on the pin she wore. It looked familiar. A horseshoe is a common form of scarfpin, but this was certainly very like the one he had lost.

"Rather a neat pin that of yours," he remarked.

"Do you admire it?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, I suppose I'll have to give it to you. It's really a man's pin." She removed it from her person and handed it to him.

"Oh, really, I didn't mean to ask for it."

"I don't value it. It's one I found."

Goddard's heart began to beat faster.

"Found! May I ask where?"

"The owner lost it on the train, I fancy, the day I came up here."

Goddard's heart stood still.

"Did you find it on the floor?"

"No."

"Well, then, where did you find it?"

"Why, to tell the truth, I didn't find it at all. I took it."

Goddard's knees were beginning to give way beneath him.

"Won't you tell me," he stammered, "how you came by it?"

"Yes. Before I came up here a friend of mine told me that she would give a young man a note of introduction to me, showing me his photograph. I saw him get on to the train. In a tunnel some one kissed me. In the struggle my hand brushed against his scarfpin and I seized it."

"He ought to be tarred and feathered."

A burst of laughter from the girl, and the episode was ended.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM

Weimer says in crediting to him the defeat of the Oakland Local Option bill I do him "too much honor." Keep the change. He is entitled to, and will have earned, all the "honor" such proceedings brings to any man. In his latest effusion he points out how easy it would have been to secure the passage of the Oakland Bill in the House, yet in his former whinnie he endeavored to have it appear that the task was too great for any member to accomplish—that the bill came over to the House too late; that it was not in the hands of the Temperance committee at all, and that any effort he might have made in its favor would have been of no avail. Hypocrisy again—or ignorance, which? Weimer knows, should know, that the House Temperance committee was named by the Speaker at the behest of the Baltimore City gang and that the committee was controlled by the "wets" who were in the majority on that committee. He knows, or should know, that the House Temperance committee would report no measure providing for local option anywhere in the State, unless compelled to do so, and right here, in these circumstances, is where the good (or bad) offices of the Garrett county temperance enthusiast (?) could have been effective. Had Weimer and his colleagues, Messrs. Lawton and Long, with his Senator, gone to the Temperance committee and demanded that the Oakland bill be reported, Weimer knows the rules could have been suspended as often as was necessary to report the bill and push it along to its final passage, had he been favorably inclined to such procedure. But with the Garrett Delegation divided—with even one member (Weimer) of the Delegation opposed to the bill, however impecunious that member may have been, the Temperance committee had all the excuse, argument and precedent necessary to hold the bill and strangle it to death—and this was done. The Oakland Bill was smothered by the Temperance committee, not because of Weimer's self-opinionated influence one way or the other, but because the committee reported nothing in the way of temperance legislation which they were not actually compelled to report by positive and united action on the part of the delegation in interest.

Weimer contends that he wanted all of Garrett county to vote on the local option proposition for Oakland, and he flaunts this, and Senator Speicher's alleged refusal to accept such a proposition, in the face of the people as an evidence of his own sincerity and of the Senator's treachery. More rot—or ignorance: Weimer knows, or should know, that under the provisions of the Anti-Saloon League Local Option Bill ALL "DRY" TERRITORY WAS EXEMPTED FROM VOTING, and the question of voting for or against the saloons was to be submitted only to the "wet" sections. Isn't that so, Mr. Weimer? Isn't that the very thing which defeated the Anti-Saloon League State-wide Bill—the adoption of an amendment which left only the "dry" territory to come in under the provisions of the bill, and these could not vote at all? Is that right or wrong? Yet you boast of your sincerity in the temperance cause and your consuming desire to see local option for your home city by a means which you must have known was forbidden and prohibited by the State-wide Bill itself? Out upon such counterfeit temperance loyalty!

This controversy has reached the stage where self-respect compels me to halt. After reading Delegate Weimer's first attack upon Senator Speicher through me, in which Weimer endeavored to make out as erroneous and unworthy of belief certain facts and statements which I had given to the people of Garrett county through my news letters from Annapolis—I set out, on reading this, to prevent any injustice being done to the distinguished Senator from Garrett through me, and also to prove that what I had written for the Oakland papers concerning Delegate Weimer and his defeat of the Oakland Local Option Bill was true. In this I have succeeded. Having, in my article under date of April 16th, buried the Garrett County Statesman under an avalanche of fact and corroborative evidence sustaining everything I had said or intimated concerning him previously, and the Oakland Local Option Bill as well, now attempts to evade the whole proposition and side—step my proofs and of his questionable conduct with respect to Senator Speicher's bill. Ignoring entirely my complete exposure of his inconsistency and contemptible misrepresentations, he would dispose of the whole matter by brazenly confessing "Yes, I killed the Oakland Local Option Bill and would do it again," and then runs from the field, returning with renewed inspiration (from some source) to his wanton attack upon Hon. Harvey J. Speicher, the State Senator from his own county, hoping thereby to divert the attention of the public from the humiliating position in which I have forced him, and in which sorry plight I will now leave him. Under the circumstances as the people of Garrett county know them I will be sustained by public sentiment in my refusal to follow Mr. Weimer further in his rambles and meaderings through the sump-holes and muck-marshes among which he so much delights to roam.

Weimer said he could not get a copy of the Oakland Local Option Bill; but I showed to the public how he could have gotten a copy, or the original bill itself, had he desired to get either. He said Senator Speicher did not confer with him and the Garrett Delegation concerning the Oakland Bill after it had passed the Senate and went over to the House; but I produced a signed statement from Delegates Lawton and Long that the Senator had conferred with them on the bill and that Weimer was present and participated in the conference. He declared that the Oakland Bill reached the House too late to be acted upon before the end of the session; but I showed conclusively and positively that Weimer could have had the bill reported by the Temperance committe and pushed forward to final passage under suspension of the rules had he so desired. He said that the people of Oakland did not want the Local Option Bill passed; but I published a telegram from Oakland's representatives temperance people urging Weimer and his colleagues to "Pass the Speicher Local Option Bill." These and other excuses for his failure to act in behalf of the Oakland Bill were given to the public; but privately—to me personally, and in the hearing of at last two reputable witneses—the only excuse he offered was because Senator Speicher had not consulted him before he introduced the bill in the Senate. On this account, he said, he not only would not make any effort to have the bill reported and passed, but he would prevent its passage if it were possible for him to do so—and he did.

I said Weimer had defeated the Oakland Local Option Bill and that he alone must assume the responsibility for its defeat. I challenged Weimer to refute my specific charges. Have I proved my case, citizens of Garrett county? Have I convicted Weimer of every charge made against him? I leave it for you to decide, and I am quite willing to abide by your virdict.

Weimer stands alone in his views, statements, opinions, charges and denials in connection with all temperance legislation. Against him and on my side are Senator Speicher, Delegates Lawton and Long. Four against one—and such a one it is!

Weimer also stands alone in his personal opinions, version and assumptions involving Senator's motives, purposes and intentions with reference to the Anti-Saloon League Local Option Bill.

Who are the people going to beleive? Who, in all candor, honesty and justice, can they believe?

Certainly not Weimer, in the face of all the circumstances and the facts.

Discredited by his own neighbors and former friends, humiliated and defeated—beaten at his own game, or, more probably at the game put up to him to play by some one else, some power behind the "bund," it matters nothing now—it is to be hoped the Garrett county Statesman will by this time have learned that—

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again."

J. J. ROBINSON.

Commissioners Meeting.

OAKLAND, May 16, 1912.

The Board of County Commissioners for Garrett County, Maryland, will meet in their office in the town of Oakland, on to transact all routine business.

At 1 o'clock p. m., on the above date, Road Case No. 210 will be taken up for adoption or rejection. All parties interested are expected to be present. Said road beginning on the Aurora road at the gate of Mr. S. J. Lichty, in Election Dist. No 8 and running through the lands of Messrs. Lichty, Schrock, Fike, Martin, Gnagey, Best, Roth and Knepp and to intersect the Horse Shoe Run road at the Red House.

By order of the Board.

A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

CHAPTER 480

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendments Section 1 of Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1898, entitled "an Act for the further protection of pheasants, partridges or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbit in Garrett County."

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that Section 1 of Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1898, entitled "an Act for the further protection of pheasants, patridges or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbits in Garrett County," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that no person, corporation or company shall at any time kill or expose for sale, transport, have in possession, any pheasant, partridge or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbit, after the same has been killed, for any purpose, except for consumption of food within the State of Maryland; nor kill, expose for sale or have in possession any of the above named game, with the intention of sending or transporting or having the same sent or transported beyond the limits of said State; provided, that nothing herein shall prevent non-residents who have taken out license to hunt in said county from taking with them out of said county any of the above-named game which they may have killed in said county.

2. And be it enacted, that any person who shall have any of the aforementioned birds or game in their possession in Garrett County, except during the months in which the killing or catching of the same is allowed by law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars for each bird or game animal that they may have in their possession.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

JOHN R. SULLIVAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

CHAPTER 597

AN ACT to provide employment at hard labor for certain classes of prisoners who may be confined in the County Jail of Garrett County or other persons of Garrett County, under sentence imposed by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, or any of the Justices of the Peace of said county, having criminal jurisdiction.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland that certain additional sections, to be numbered 251, 252, 253 and 254, under sub-title "Crimes and Punishments," be and the same are hereby added to Article Twenty of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," and sections to be and remain a part of the local law for Garrett County.

Section 2. And be it enacted, that in addition to any sentence of confinement in the county jail of Garrett County which may be imposed in cases of conviction for assault, drunkenness, disorderly conduct, disturbing the public peace, vagrancy or petit larceny, where the punishment described by law shall not exceed one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary or house of correction, by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, or any justice of the peace for Garrett County having criminal jurisdiction, said court or justice may, in the discretion of said court or justice also in said sentence direct that any prisoner over sixteen years of age who may be convicted of any of the offences enumerated as above, shall be subject to perform hard labor for and during the period of his imprisonment, on the public roads of Garrett County, or on the public streets of any incorporated town, the town authorities of such town so employing such convict shall be charged with the expense which may attend such employment.

Section 3. And be it enacted, that the hard labor provided for in the preceding section shall be performed, if within the corporate limits of any incorporate town, under the supervision and direction of the town commissioners and bailiff of such town, and if on the public roads of Garrett County, then under the supervision and direction of the County commissioners or the road supervisor of any district who may be authorized by the County commissioners to work the same; and the sheriff of Garrett County, upon the demand of any bailiff, supervisor or other persons duly authorized to make such demand, is hereby authorized and required to deliver such prisoner to the party so making the demand and entitled to receive the same, whenever and at such times as he may be legally required; and the labor to be performed by such convict may include every service necessary for the purpose of draining, grading, paving or repairing such public streets or highways of Garrett County, within or without the limits of any incorporated town therein.

Section 4. And be it enacted, that the officer or other person having such prisoner in charge, shall have power and authority to compel such labor, and shall be responsible for the safe keep and return to prison of such convict to the custody of the sheriff at the end of each day's labor, which day's labor shall be within the discretion of the officer or other person so supervising at the time, but shall not exceed ten hours work or labor for any day he may be employed; and any prisoner so convicted and sentenced, who shall refuse to perform the labor required of him, shall incur the penalty of two days additional imprisonment for every day he may so refuse, and this provision shall be included in the sentence of the court or justice by whom the same may be rendered; but no prisoner shall be compelled to perform such labor whose health is not in a condition to allow the same, and the certificate of the physician to the jail or other physician in said county shall be sufficient to excuse such labor.

Section 5. And be it enacted, that if any officer or other person having such prisoner in charge for the performance of such work or labor, connive at or, by his wilful neglect, permit the escape of any such prisoner, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction of such offence in the Circuit Court for Garrett County be fined not less than twenty or more than fifty dollars, or be confined in the county jail of the county, and be subject to the same penalty of hard labor for a period equal to the unexpired term of the prisoner so escaping, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Section 6. And be it enacted, that this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 11, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

JOHN R. SULLIVAN,

CHAPTER 481

AN ACT to divide Election District Number Eight of Garrett County into two precincts:

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that Election District Number Eight of Garrett County be and the same is hereby divided into two voting precincts, to be known, respectively, as the "first" and "second" election precincts of the Eighth Election District of said Garrett County. The division line between the said precincts shall be as follows: The first precinct shall be the territory within the following outlines, to wit: All that part of said Election District Number Eight as now laid out and established, East of the summit of Backbone Mountain and East of the top of the Mountain to the line of Election District Number Seven.

The second precinct shall be the territory of said district, as now laid out and established, on the West side of said summit of Back Bone Mountain and on the West side of the Mountain to the line of Election District Number Seven.

The voting or polling place for the said first precinct shall be at the Ho e Place, the former polling place for said district, and voting or polling place for the said second precinct shall be at the Red House.

Section 2. For the purpose of registration the supervisors of election for said county shall provide the register of voters for said district, before the time of registration of voters, under the provisions of Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws, with two duplicate registry books, for the registration of the voters of said respective precincts; and the said register of the voters shall, at his session of 1912, make full registry of the voters of said respective precincts from the registration book of said district, allotting such voters to the precinct in which they respectively reside, by transcribing the names of such voters from the present registry of voters for said district, or in case of a new registration under any amendment of said Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws, then said register of voters shall register anew in said respective registries the names of all qualified voters in said respective precincts, as shall apply to him and prove the proper qualifications for registry. In case the said register shall have to make a transcript (instead of a new registration) he shall be allowed a sum not exceeding forty dollars, to be paid by the County Commissioners of said county, for such transcript.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

CHAPTER 479

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendments Section 41 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub title "County Commissioners," and to add a new section thereto, to be known as Section 41A.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That Section 41 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub-title "County Commissioners," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments, and a new section added to be known as Section 41A, so as to read as follows:

Section 41. Whenever it shall become necessary to sell any land in Garrett County, because of the non-payment of the State and County taxes due thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the County Commissioners to purchase said lands, or such part thereof as may be necessary for the amount of said taxes, and if the taxpayer, in whose name said land was assessed and sold, shall not within two years from the day of said sale pay and discharge said taxes, interest and costs, the title to said land shall become absolute in said County Commissioners, as against said delinquent taxpayer, and the County Commissioners are authorized to sell said land, at either public or private sale, and to convey the same to the purchaser thereof after reporting said sale and after the ratification thereof by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, and a good title shall be vested in the purchaser of said land, as against said delinquent taxpayer.

Section 41A. That the title to all lands in Garrett County heretofore sold by the County Treasurer to the County Commissioners under the provisions of Section 41 of this Article shall become absolute in the County Commissioners, as against the taxpayer in whose name said land was assessed and sold, after the first day of January, 1913, provided, the County Commissioners shall give one month's notice by publication in some newspaper published in Garrett County, prior to the first day of October, 1912, warning such delinquent taxpayers that unless said taxes, interest and cost accrued against said lands are paid and discharged before the first day of January, 1913, that title to said lands shall become absolute in the County Commissioners, as against the person or persons in whose name or names said lands were assessed and sold; which notice shall contain a brief description of the lands, the name of the persons in whose name the same was assessed and sold and the amount of taxes, interest and costs due thereon; and all of said lands not redeemed by payment, as aforesaid, before the first day of January, 1913, shall be held as the property of Garrett County, and the County Commissioners are authorized at any time thereafter to sell said lands or any of them, either at public or private sale, and after reporting said sale or sales to the Circuit Court for Garrett County, and after the ratification thereof by said court, to convey the same to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, and a good title shall be vested in the purchaser or purchasers of said land, as against said delinquent taxpayer or taxpayers.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session 1912.

Secretary of the Senate.

CHAPTER 445

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendment Sections Three and Seven of Article One of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Allegany County" and Article 12, "Garrett County" sub-title "Miners and Operators Co-operative Relief Fund," as the same was enacted by Chapter 153 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed in the year 1910.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that sections Three and Seven of Article One of the Code of Public Laws of Maryland, title "Allegany County" and Article Twelve, title "Garrett County" sub-title "Miners and Operators Co-operative Relief Fund" as the same was enacted by Chapter 153 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland passed in the year 1910 be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

Section 3. There is hereby created for Allegany and Garrett Counties respectively, a fund for the relief and sustenance of employees and their dependents, when such said employees have sustained injuries or disability in the discharge of their duty, and for the relief and sustenance of the dependents of such employees when death has resulted from such injuries, said fund to be made up of the proceeds of the tax hereinafter levied and the increments from the investment thereof, as well as such donations and legacies as may be made thereto.

In order to create and maintain said fund a tax is hereby levied and imposed upon each operator and employee as follows:

Upon each employee in Allegany County a tax of twenty-seven cents and upon each employe in Garrett County a tax of thirty-eight cents for each month or fraction of a month that he is employed by any operator, and upon each operator in Allegany County a tax of twenty-seven cents and in Garrett County a tax of thirty-eight cents for each month or fraction of a month in respect of each employee paying the tax aforesaid and employed by said operator in Allegany and Garrett Counties.

Such tax shall be due and payable monthly to the Treasurer of Allegany and Garrett Counties, respectively, in which the mine is operated, and payable on or before the twenty-fifth day of the month next succeeding the month for which such tax is payable, in order to secure the effectual payments of such tax each operator is authorized and required to deduct and retain from the wages of each employee employed by him, on his pay-rolls in Allegany County the sum of twenty-seven cents and in Garrett County the sum of thirty eight cents per month or fraction of a month, if said employee be employed for less than a month, and on or before the fifteenth day of the month next succeeding the month for which such deduction is made shall make a report of the number of employees so employed under oath to the Treasurer of Allegany or Garrett County where the particular mine is located, and on or before the twenty-fifth day of said succeeding month shall pay over unto the Treasurer of Allegany or Garrett County, as the case may be, the total amount so deducted and retained from the wages of the employees for the proceeding month, together with a like amount to be paid by the operator. It shall be the duty of the County Commissioners of Allegany and Garrett Counties, respectively, to enforce, by appropriate remedies, the collection and payment of the tax hereby levied; and to all taxes in default there shall be added and collected interest at the rate of six per centum per annum from the date when due.

Section 7. When the assessments imposed and collected by the Treasurer of Allegany County shall amount to thirty-five thousand dollars surplus and in Garrett County shall amount to fifteen thousand dollars surplus, over and above the pending and accrued claims on the same under this act, such Treasurer shall report the fact to the County Commissioners of their respective county, whereupon the said Board of County Commissions are hereby empowered and directed to remit temporarily the taxes hereby imposed from month to month as long as (and no longer) such surplus shall exceed thirty-five thousand dollars in Allegany County and fifteen thousand dollars in Garrett County, and when it shall be reduced to said sums or under, mentioned above, the said tax shall become again payable as provided by this Act.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer of his respective county to invest, under the orders of the County Commissioners, any surplus above the sum of two thousand dollars in his hands, in such public bonds as said Commissioners may direct and to credit such fund with the interest derived therefrom; and upon the retirement from office or any disqualification to act of such Treasurer the entire fund, including such bonds and the books and papers pertaining to such funds, shall be delivered by such Treasurer to his successor in office, who shall receipt for the same.

Section 2. Be it enacted, That all rights and liabilities incurred under the sections hereby repealed and re-enacted shall not be impaired or effected, but shall continue and remain in full force and effect and any suit begun or hereinafter to be brought upon such rights or liabilities shall not be abated by reason of this enactment.

Section 3. Be it enacted that this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing in a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session, 1912.

ALBERT J. ALMONEY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

CHAPTER 72

AN ACT to repeal Section Thirty-two of Article Twelve of the Code of Public Local Laws, title "Garrett County" sub title "County Commissioners" as re-enacted with amendments by the acts of the General Assembly of 1892, Chapter 506, and to re enact the same with amendments.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland that section Thirty-two of Article Twelve of the Code of Public Local Laws, title "Garrett County" sub title "County Commissioners" as re-enacted with amendments by the General Assembly of 1892, Chapter 506, is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments so as to read as follows:

32. They shall meet on the first Monday of every month in each year, except during the months of March, April and September when they shall meet as follows:

They shall meet on the third Monday in March, the second Monday in April and the second Monday in September, and may call special meetings whenever they think proper.

Section 2. And be it enacted that this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 4, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session, 1912.

ALBERT J. ALMONEY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

CHAPTER 85

AN ACT to pay to the School Commissioners of Garrett County a sum of money out of the State School tax.

Whereas, In view of the pressure of the present apportionment, especially upon Garrett County, of the State School tax, and the inability, without larger increase of county taxation, to keep her schools open for seven and one-half months, and in view of the fact that mountain ridges so divide the population of Garrett County, the largest county in the State in area, as to render school facilities for all of the children more expensive than in more central parts of the State; and,

Whereas, It has been unanimously recommended by the State Board of Education that such sum of money shall be paid out of the State School Fund to the Board of School Commissioners of Garrett County; therefore,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Comptroller of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized and required to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer in favor of Garrett County School Board for the sum of four thousand dollars per annum for two years out of the proceeds of the State school tax before making apportionment thereof; provided, however, that no portion of said four thousand dollars per annum shall be used for any other purpose than for salaries and ordinary running expenses of said schools.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session, 1912.

$25,000 IN LOTS AND SMALL FARMS SOLD

Sale of Bradley Farm in Small Farms and Town Lots Results with Success.

The well advertised sale of the Bradley farm at Oakland, which was held on Tuesday of this week drew hundreds of people to this beautiful spot.

The Dixie Realty Co., of South Boston, Va., had charge of the sale and had two high class, experienced auctioneers who cried the same lot simultaneously. This is the first sale this well known company has made in this vicinity and is pronounced by all to be a wonderful success.

A good band, composed of Oakland and Keyser musicians, performed most creditably all during the sale and together with the spirited bidding enlivened the occasion.

The sale was entirely by auction and every property went to the highest bidder. The buyers soon became acquainted with the features of the sale as handled by the Dixie Realty Co., and evidenced by their purchases that they felt sure of honorable and fair dealing, and the courteous treatment of the managers of the sale gave every one a feeling of at home.

Two of the gratifying features of the sale was, first, that all the offerings were purchased by home people; second, that all the purchasers are well pleased, many having sold their purchases for a good profit before the deed was made, thus demonstrating their confidence in the values of one of the grandest sections of the State of Maryland.

The subdivision of this farm will result in great good to Oakland, as the property sold begins on the north side of the town and extends around its corporate limits westward for some distance.

The gentlemen composing the Dixie Realty Co. have won the confidence and respect of Garrett citizens and we hope they will continue the good work they have started in this community.

The sale approximated $25,000.

KRAUSE WAS SHOT BY HIS FRIEND, WHO IS NOW SORRY

Washington Barnard, of Bloomington, Blazed Away, Mistaking His Man.

Frank Krause, aged 38 years, of Bloomington, Md., is in the Western Marylahd Hospital at Cumberland to which place he was taken early Sunday morning, with a bullet in his right shoulder, the wound having been inflicted by his friend, Washington Barnard, of Bloomington, on Saturday shortly before midnight.

The shooting appears to have been the result of mistaken identity, and was not because of any ill-feeling. Krause was on his way home to the boarding house kept by the father of the man who shot him, and who resided next door. Hearing some voices in Barnard's house Krause stopped and knocked at the door. He states that after a short time the door was thrown open and Barnard raised his revolver and fired. Barnard it is said, asked who was at the door, and not receiving a reply he drew a revolver and opened the door. He said the man at the door raised his hand and thinking he was going to shoot or assault him, Barnard blazed away with his revolver.

Both men were very sorry about the affair, and so far Barnard has not been placed under arrest. Dr. H. M. Kemp dressed the wound on Krause's shoulder.

VETERANS IN BLUE WILL HONOR THEIR DEAD.

Decoration Day to be Fittingly Observed by the "Boys of '61."

The thinned-out army of veterans of the Civil War and the growing army of descendants of veterans will observe to-day with the solemnity that has marked Decoration Day here since its institution many years ago. Flowers will be placed upon the graves of those who died for their country and upon those who have since passed away. Tributes wil be paid by orators to their heroism and courage, the principal speaker in Oakland having been selected in the person of the Dr. A. B. Riker, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church, who delivered on Sunday last a sermon to the soldiers.

Crook Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, will hold memorial services at ten o'clock at the cemetery, to which point the members of the organization will be escorted from Sturgiss Drug Store by the Oakland band and other organized bodies, including the Knight of Pythias, the Red Men and Junior Order.

At the cemetery following the decoration of the graves of those who have answered the last roll-call the general order of Past Commander-in-Chief John A. Logan will be read, after which Dr. Riker will deliver an oration and then the Gettysburg Address of President Lincoln will be read by a member of the Post, with which the services at the cemetry will be brought to an end.

In the afternoon the new Knights of Pythias building will be dedicated. An elaborate program has been arranged for the occasion which will be carried out in full by members of the organization.

BITTINGER.

While driving from this place to Jennings on last Saturday evening, a portion of the harness gave way and the horse being driven by Asa Bittinger, ran away, overturning the buggy and slightly injuring Mr. Bittinger and his companion Austin Bittinger, but fortunately two young ladies who were in the party escaped unhurt.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stark, of Chaffee, W. Va., visited Mr. Stark's parents here the first part of this week.

Mrs. Samuel Slabach and daughter, Mrs. Hattie Bitner, of Mt. Lake Park, spent last week with relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. Elias Orendorf are attending the annual conference of the Amish church, over in Somerset county this week.

An infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Wilt was buried at this place last Tuesday afternoon.

Master Lester and Irvin Bittinger walked from their home near Deer Park, to this village on last Saturday, and are spending a few days with old playmates.

Patterson Engle made a business trip to Grantsville last Saturday, to attend to the filing of an application for an increase of pension due him under the late pension act.

Messrs. John Kneicht, D. D. Otto and Simon Orendorf, of Elk Lick, Pa., were attending to some business matters here recently.

WEST VIRGINIA WINS IN BOUNDARY LINE CASE

Supreme Court Sustains Commission In Fixing State Line.

The last chapter of the famous boundary controversy between Maryland and West Virginia was written Monday when the United States Supreme Court sustained the majority of the boundary commission and definitely fixed the line which is to divide the two States. The court's opinion was another victory for West Virginia.

More than a year ago the court rendered a decree in the case, and while it was supposed at the time to be equally favorable to the two States the later perusal of the court's opinion indicated that West Virginia had got the better of the long fight. When the decree was entered the court appointed a commission of three to make the decision effective.

This commission, composed of W. McCulloh Brown, representing Maryland; J. K. Monroe, representing West Virginia, and Samuel S. Gannett, representing the United States Geological Survey, spent a year surveying the disputed territory and in fixing the boundary in accordance with the findings of the court originally. The commission's report was filed with the court and demurred to by Mr. Brown on the part of Maryland.

The exception taken by the Marylander resulted in a reopening of the case. The Geological Survey expert had sided with the West Virginians. The Supreme Court upheld the majority of the commission and ordered that the line be fixed in accordance with their views.

In its brief review of the case the court announced that the disputed part of the boundary would run from Deakins, on the old State line, along the south bank of the North Branch of the Potomac river, to the Pennsylvania line.

The court also stated that the expenses of the commission amounted to $17,154. Under the rulings each State is to bear half the total cost of the surveys and other work in connection with the exception of the final decree.

The Maryland-West Virginia boundary dispute dated from the erection of the latter State. The change in the course of the Potomac river caused the old line to be obscured, and several thousand acres of land was involved in the controversy

Our town was all excitement on Thursday morning, when it was learned that Governor Goldsborough and his newly appointed road commissioners would be in town for a short time. Quite a number of republicans gathered together to talk with his excellency, who reached town about 11 o'clock. In addition to the commissioners, Messrs. N. U. Bond, W. A. Smith and Senator Harvey J. Speicher accompanied him. The governor shook hands all around and gave a very short and pleasing address and promised that the new road commissioners would take up the matter of repairing the old national pike which we would be only too glad to see done. He also said that the funds in the state treasury were very low, and he would recommend a little cheaper road building than previously been done. We will be glad to have it done, no matter how cheap the work.

We were mistaken last week in reporting C. A. Bender having bought the automobile at Mrs. C. D. Hershberger's sale. It was bought in for Mrs. Hershberger. Mr. Bender has since purchased a fine six-passenger Overland car. Mr. J. J. Bender has also bought one of the same make.

Mr. John O. Getty went to Winchester, Va., to visit his brother-in-law, Dr. G. C. Keller.

Mrs. Marshall Beachy and Miss Gertie Hone have gone to Friendsville to spend some time.

Misses Angelo and Wilda Getty, two of Grantsville's popular young ladies, spent Saturday and Sunday with Lucretia and Almira Boucher.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Miller went to Oakland Sunday in Mr. Diefienbach's automobile. Mrs. Miller intends spending a few days with her mother, Mrs. George Bishoff.

Mrs. Jacob Bender went to Frostburg last Saturday shopping.

Quite a number of people from here attended the funeral of Mrs. Chas. Yommer, which took place in Salisbury, Pa., on Sunday evening.

EX-GOV. CROTHERS DIED EARLY SATURDAY MORNING

Had Been Ill Several Weeks with Bright's Disease

Ex-Governor Austin L. Crothers died at his home in Elkton at 12:10 o'clock Saturday morning.

At 10:30 o'clock Friday night, Governor Crothers was seized with convulsions, following which he relapsed into unconsciousness and remained in that condition up to the hour of his death. His physicians, Dr. William D. Cawlay and Dr. Howard Bratton, were called and notified the members of the family, all of whom were at the bedside when the end came.

Early in the day it was announced that the condition of Mr. Crothers was critical and his physicians announced that the end was only a few hours off. During the last forty-eight hours Mr. Crothers had been losing ground steadily and uraemic poison had caused his temperature to rise. He was unable to take any kind of stimulant.

MOTOR CYCLE GETS BEYOND CONTROL.

Rider in the Person of Mr. Bowie Johnson, Painfully Injured.

Mr. Bowie Johnson received a few days ago a new motor cycle and on Saturday afternoon after he had ridden it about town for an hour or two thinking he had mastered the mode of handling the machine, in company with Dr. B. Frank Selby and Mr. S. H. Jackson, mounted upon their machines, started out the State road. At the top of King's hill, two or three miles from town, Mr. Johnson lost control of the machine he was riding and it plunged forward down the steep hill at a speed estimated at forty miles an hour. Seeing that he was about to plunge into the retaining wall on a culvert near the bottom of the declivity Mr. Johnson jumped from the machine and striking upou his shoulder and face broke his collar bone and received other more or less painful injuries.

He was soon brought back to town where his injuries were dressed by Dr. Broadwater and he is now resting as comfortably as it is possible for one who has had like experience. Mr. Johnson's escape from even more serious injury is remarkable and he is to be congratulated.

His motor machine was very slightly damaged.

THE DEATH RECORD

DR. J. H. SHIRCLIFF

Dr. J. H. Shircliff, of Gorman, Md., died Monday morning at 6:30 o'clock at the home of his sister, Mrs. Annie E. Stemple, Gorman, Md., after an illness of four weeks, suffering from typhoid fever. Dr. Shircliff never married. He was 32 years old, and had dental offices at Kitzmiller, Md., and Gormania, W. Va. He was a member of the Red Men and the Modern Woodmen. The funeral took place on Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock with services at St. John's Catholic church, Gormania. The remains were taken to Little Orleans for interment on the afternoon train.

MRS. HARRIET AUGUSTINE.

Mrs. Harriet Augustine, wife of Jeremiah Augustine, of Keyser's Ridge, died at her home on Thursday, May 16th, aged 73 years, 11 months and 7 days. Death was due to heart failure and dropsy, having been ill for some time. Mrs. Augustine was well known at Keyser's Ridge and was held in high esteem in the community. She is survived by her husband and four children—one son, W. H. Augustine, of Keyser's Ridge; three daughters, Mrs. Chas. Hoffmeyer, of Akron, Ohio; Mrs. Harry Holliday, of Cove, Md., and Miss Anna at home. She was the mother of Frank Augustine, the young man whose untimely death was so greatly deplored a few months ago. Interment was made at Addison, Pa., from the Methodist church, of which she was a consistent member. Rev. Lancaster, pastor of that church, officiated. The funeral took place at 10 o'clock Saturday morning.

Leg Broken.

Mr. Robert Morehead, of Bloomington, was badly injured last Monday afternoon when the horse he was riding became frightened at a passing automobile on the Deer Park road near Oakland, and giving a plunge it fell, catching Mr. Morehead's leg beneath its body and badly fracturing it. The injured man was brought to Oakland, where he was attended by Dr. Henry McComas and later he was sent to his home in Bloomington.

THE HANDBOOK OF HYMEN.

What Education Did For Two Snowbound Prospectors.

By O. HENRY.

'Tis the opinion of myself, Sanderson Pratt, who sets this down, that the educational system of the United States should be in the hands of the weather bureau. I can give you good reasons for it, and you can't tell me why our college professors shouldn't be transferred to the meteorological department. They have been learned to read, and they could very easily glance at the morning papers and then wire in to the main office what kind of weather to expect. But there's the other side of the proposition. I am going on to tell you how the weather furnished me and Idaho Green with a elegant education.

We was up in the Bitter Root mountains over the Montana line prospecting for gold. A chin whiskered man in Walla Walla, carrying a line of hope as excess baggage, had grubstaked us, and there we was in the foothills pecking away with enough grub on hand to last an army through a peace conference.

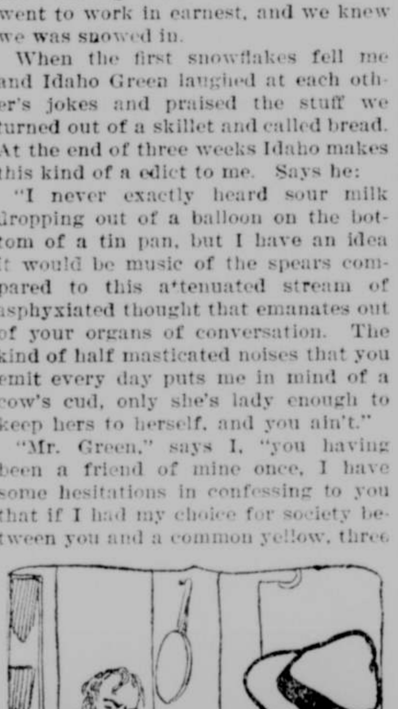
Along one day comes a mail rider over the mountains from Carlos and stops to eat three cans of greengages and leave us a newspaper of modern date. This paper prints a system of premonitions of the weather, and the card it dealt Bitter Root mountains from the bottom of the deck was "warmer and fair, with light westerly breezes."

That evening it began to snow, with the wind strong in the east. Me and Idaho moved camp into an old empty cabin higher up the mountain, thinking it was only a November flurry. But after falling three foot on a level it went to work in earnest, and we knew we was snowed in.

When the first snowflakes fell me and Idaho Green laughed at each other's jokes and praised the stuff we turned out of a skillet and called bread. At the end of three weeks Idaho makes this kind of a edict to me. Says he:

"I never exactly heard sour milk dropping out of a balloon on the bottom of a tin pan, but I have an idea it would be music of the spears compared to this attenuated stream of asphyxiated thought that emanates out of your organs of conversation. The kind of half masticated noises that you emit every day puts me in mind of a cow's cud, only she's lady enough to keep hers to herself, and you ain't."

"Mr. Green," says I, "you having been a friend of mine once, I have some hesitations in confessing to you that if I had my choice for society between you and a common yellow, three legged cur pup one of the inmates of this here cabin would be wagging a tail just at present."



"I READ THAT BOOK FOR FOUR HOURS."

This way we goes on for two or three days, and then we quits speaking to one another.

One morning Idaho was poking around with a stick on top of a little shelf that was too high to reach. Two books fell down to the floor. I started toward 'em, but caught Idaho's eye. He speaks for the first time in a week.

"Don't burn your fingers," says he. "In spite of the fact that you're only fit to be the companion of a sleeping mud turtle, I'll give you a square deal. And that's more than your parents did when they turned you loose in the world with the sociability of a rattlesnake and the bedside manner of a frozen turnip. I'll play you a game of seven-up, the winner to pick up his choice of the books, the loser to take the other."

We played, and Idaho won. He picked up his book, and I took mine. Then each of us got on his side of the house and went to reading.

I never was as glad to see a ten ounce nugget as I was that book. And Idaho looked at his like a kid looks at a stick of candy.

Mine was a little book about five by six inches called "Herkimer's Handbook of Indispensable Information." I may be wrong, but I think that was the greatest book that ever was written. I've got it today, and I can stump you or any man fifty times in five minutes with the information in it.

I sat and read that book for four hours. All the wonders of education was compressed in it. I forgot the snow, and I forgot that me and old Idaho was on the outs.

"Idaho," says I, "what kind of a book is yours?"

Idaho must have forgot, too, for he answered moderate, without any slander or malignity.

"Why," says he, "this here seems to be a volume by Homer K. M."

"Homer K. M. what?" I asks.

"Why, just Homer K. M.," says he.

"You're a liar," says I, a little riled that Idaho should try to put me up a tree. "No man is going around signing books with his initials. If it's Homer K. M. Spoopendyke, or Homer K. M. McSweeney, or Homer K. M. Jones, why don't you say so like a man instead of biting off the end of it like a calf chewing off the tail of a shirt on a clothesline?"

"I put it to you straight, Sandy," says Idaho, quiet. "It's a poem book," says he, "by Homer K. M. I couldn't get color out of it at first, but there's a vein if you follow it up. I wouldn't have missed this book for a pair of red blankets."

"You're welcome to it," says I.

"What you've got," says Idaho, "is statistics, the lowest grade of information that exists. They'll poison your mind. Give me old K. M.'s system of surmises. He seems to be a kind of a wine agent. His regular toast is 'nothing doing,' and he seems to have a grouch, but he keeps it so well lubricated with booze that his worst kicks sound like an invitation to split a quart. But it's poetry," says Idaho, "and I have sensations of scorn for that truck of yours that tries to convey sense in feet and inches."

So that's the way me and Idaho had it. Day and night all the excitement we got was studying our books. That snowstorm sure fixed us with a fine lot of attainments apiece.

That spring me and Idaho struck pay ore. It was a habit of ours to sell out quick and keep moving. We unloaded on our grubstaker for $8,000 apiece, and then we drifted down to this little town of Rosa, on the Salmon river, to rest up and get some human grub and have our whiskers harvested.

Rosa was no mining camp. It laid in the valley, and was as free of uproar and pestilence as one of them rural towns in the country. There was a three mile trolley line champing its bit in the environs, and me and Idaho spent a week riding on one of the cars, dropping off of nights at the Sunset View hotel. Being now well read as well as traveled, we was soon pro re nata with the best society in Rosa and was invited out to the most dressed up and high toned entertainments. It was at a piano recital and quail eating contest in the city hall, for the benefit of the fire company, that me and Idaho first met Mrs. De Ormond Sampson, the queen of Rosa society.

Mrs. Sampson was a widow and owned the only two story house in town. It was painted yellow, and whichever way you looked from you could see it as plain as egg on the chin of an O'Grady on a Friday. Twenty-two men in Rosa besides me and Idaho was trying to stake a claim on that yellow house.

There was a dance after the song books and quail bones had been raked out of the hall. Twenty-three of the bunch galloped over to Mrs. Sampson and asked for a dance. I sidestepped the twostep and asked permission to escort her home. That's where I made a hit.

On the way home says she:

"Ain't the stars lovely and bright tonight, Mr. Pratt?"

"For the chance they've got," says I, "they're humping themselves in a mighty creditable way. That big one you see is 66,000,000,000 of miles distant. It took thirty-six years for its light to reach us. With an eighteen foot telescope you can see 43,000,000 of 'em, including them of the thirteenth magnitude, which, if one was to go out now, you would keep on seeing it for 2,700 years."

"My!" says Mrs. Sampson. "I never knew that before. How warm it is! I'm as damp as I can be from dancing so much."

"That's easy to account for," says I, "when you happen to know that you've got 2,000,000 sweat glands working all at once. If every one of your perspiratory ducts, which are a quarter of an inch long, was placed end to end they would reach a distance of seven miles."

"Lawsy!" says Mrs. Sampson. "It sounds like an irrigation ditch you was describing, Mr. Pratt. How do you get all this knowledge of information?"

"From observation, Mrs. Sampson," I tells her. "I keep my eyes open when I go about the world."

"Mr. Pratt," says she, "I always did admire a man of education. There are so few scholars among the sapheaded plug uglies of this town that it is a real pleasure to converse with a gentleman of culture. I'd be gratified to have you call at my house whenever you feel so inclined."

And that was the way I got the good will of the lady in the yellow house.

I never imagined that Idaho was trying to work on Mrs. Sampson with old K. M.'s rules of courtship till one afternoon when I was on my way over to take her a basket of wild hog plums. I met the lady coming down the lane that led to her house. Her eyes was snapping, and her hat made a dangerous dip over one eye.

"Mr. Pratt," she opens up, "this Mr. Green is a friend of yours, I believe."

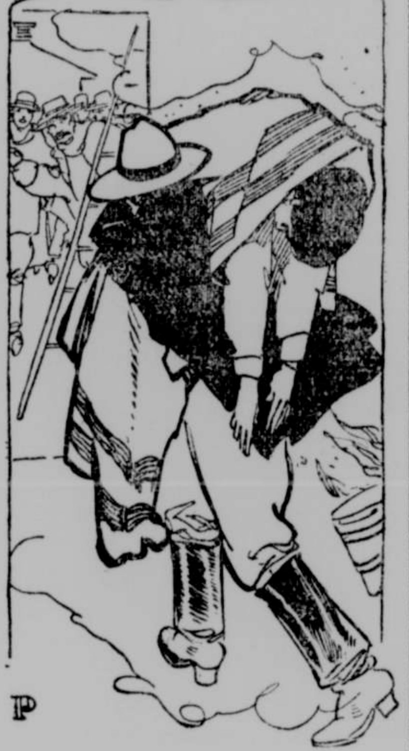
"For nine years," says I.

"Cut him out," says she. "He's no gentleman!"

"Why, ma'am," says I, "he's a plain incumbent of the mountains, with asperities and the usual failings of a spendthrift and a liar, but I never on the most momentous occasion had the heart to deny that he was a gentleman. It may be that in haberdashery and the sense of arrogance and display Idaho offends the eye, but inside, ma'am, I've found him impervious to the lower grades of crime and obesity. After nine years of Idaho's society, Mrs. Sampson," I winds up, "I should hate to impute him, and I should hate to see him imputed."

"It's right plausible of you, Mr. Pratt," says Mrs. Sampson, "to take up the curmudgeons in your friend's behalf, but it don't alter the fact that he has made proposals to me sufficiently obnoxious to ruffle the ignominy of any lady."

"Why, now, now, now!" says I. "Old Idaho do that! I could believe it of myself sooner. I never knew but one thing to deride in him, and a blizzard was responsible for that. Once while we was snowbound in the mountains he became a prey to a kind of spurious and uneven poetry, which may have corrupted his demeanor."



"I GOT HER ON MY SHOULDER."

"It has," says Mrs. Sampson. "Ever since I knew him he has been reciting to me a lot of irreligious rhymes by some person he calls Ruby Ott and who is no better than she should be, if you judge by her poetry."

"Then Idaho has struck a new book," says I, "for the one he had was by a man who writes under the nom de plume of K. M."

"He'd better have stuck to it," says Mrs. Sampson, "whatever it was. And today he caps the vortex. I get a bunch of flowers from him, and on 'em is pinned a note. Now, Mr. Pratt, you know a lady when you see her, and you know how I stand in Rosa society. Do you think for a moment that I'd skip out to the woods with a man along with a jug of wine and a loaf of bread and go singing and cavorting up and down under the trees with him? I take a little claret with my meals, but I'm not in the habit of packing a jug of it into the brush and raising Cain in any such style as that. And of course he'd bring his book of verses along too. He said so. Let him go on his scandalous picnics alone or let him take his Ruby Ott with him! I reckon she wouldn't kick unless it was on account of there being too much bread along. And what do you think of your gentleman friend now, Mr Pratt?"

"Well, 'm," says I, "it may be that Idaho's invitation was a kind of poetry and meant no harm. Maybe it belonged to the class of rhymes they call figurative. They offend law and order, but they get sent through the mails on the grounds that they mean something that they don't say. I'd be glad on Idaho's account if you'd overlook it," says I, "and let us extricate our minds from the low regions of poetry to the higher planes of fact and fancy. On a beautiful afternoon like this, Mrs. Sampson," I goes on, "we should let our thoughts dwell accordingly. Though it is warm here, we should remember that at the equator the line of perpetual frost is at an altitude of 15,000 feet."

"Oh, Mr. Pratt," says Mrs. Sampson, "it's such a comfort to hear you say them beautiful facts after getting such a jar from that minx of a Ruby's poetry!"

"Let us sit on this log at the roadside," says I, "and forget the inhumanity and ribaldry of the poets. It is in the glorious columns of ascertained facts and legalized measures that beauty is to be found. In this very log we sit upon, Mrs. Sampson," says I, "is statistics more wonderful than any poem. The rings show it was sixty years old. At the depth of 2,000 feet it would become coal in 3,000 years. The deepest coal mine in the world is at Killingworth, near Newcastle. A box four feet long, three feet wide and two feet eight inches deep will hold one ton of coal. If an artery is cut, compress it above the wound. A man's leg contains thirty bones. The Tower of London was burned in 1841."

"Go on, Mr. Pratt," says Mrs. Sampson. "Them ideas is so original and soothing. I think statistics are just as lovely as they can be."

But it wasn't till two weeks later that I got all that was coming to me out of Herkimer.

One night I was waked up by folks hollering "Fire!" all around. I jumped up and dressed and went out of the hotel to enjoy the scene. When I seen it was Mrs. Sampson's house I gave forth a kind of yell, and I was there in two minutes.

The whole lower story of the yellow house was in flames, and every masculine, feminine and canine in Rosa was there, screeching and barking and getting in the way of the firemen. I saw Idaho trying to get away from six firemen who were holding him. They was telling him the whole place was on fire downstairs and no man could go in it and come out again.

"Where's Mrs. Sampson?" I asks.

"She hasn't been seen," says one of the firemen. "She sleeps upstairs. We've tried to get in, but we can't, and our company hasn't got any ladders yet."

I runs around to the light of the big blaze and pulls the handbook out of my inside pocket. I kind of laughed when I felt it in my hands—I reckon I was some daffy with the sensation of excitement.

"Herky, old boy," I says to it as I flipped over the pages, "you ain't ever lied to me yet, and you ain't ever throwed me down at a scratch yet. Tell me what, old boy, tell me what!" says I.

I turned to "What to do in case of accidents," on page 117. I run my finger down the page and struck it. Good old Herkimer—he never overlooked anything! It said:

Suffocation From Inhaling Smoke or Gas.—There is nothing better than flaxseed. Place a few seed in the outer corner of the eye.

I shoved the handbook back in my pocket and grabbed a boy that was running by.

"Here," says I, giving him some money, "run to the drug store and bring a dollar's worth of flaxseed. Hurry and you'll get another one for yourself. Now," I sings out to the crowd, "we'll have Mrs. Sampson!" And I throws away my coat and hat.

Four of the firemen and citizens grabs hold of me. It's sure death, they say, to go in the house, for the floors was beginning to fall through.

"How in blazes," I sings out, kind of laughing yet, but not feeling like it, "do you expect me to put flaxseed in a eye without the eye?"

I jabbed each elbow in a fireman's face, kicked the bark off of one citizen's shin and tripped the other one with a side hold. And then I busted into the house. If I die first I'll write you a letter and tell you if it's any worse down there than the inside of that yellow house was, but don't believe it yet. I was a heap more cooked than the hurry up orders of broiled chicken that you get in restaurants. The fire and smoke had me down on the floor twice and was about to shame Herkimer, but the firemen helped me with their little stream of water, and I got to Mrs. Sampson's room. She'd lost conscientiousness from the smoke, so I wrapped her in the bedclothes and got her on my shoulder. Well, the floors wasn't as bad as they said or I never could have done it—not by no means.

I carried her out fifty yards from the house and laid her on the grass. Then, of course, every one of them other twenty-two plaintiffs to the lady's hand crowded around with tin dippers of water ready to save her. And up runs the boy with the flaxseed.

I unwrapped the covers from Mrs. Sampson's head. She opened her eyes and says:

"Is that you, Mr. Pratt?"

"S-s-sh," says I. "Don't talk till you've had the remedy."

I runs my arm around her neck and raises her head, gentle, and breaks the bag of flaxseed with the other hand, and as easy as I could I bends over and slips three or four of the seeds in the outer corner of her eye.

Up gallops the village doc by this time and snorts around and grabs at Mrs. Sampson's pulse and wants to know what I mean by any such sand blasted nonsense.

"Well, old Jalap and Jerusalem oak seed," says I, "I'm no regular practitioner, but I'll show you my authority, anyway."

They fetched my coat, and I gets out the handbook.

"Look on page 117," says I, "at the remedy for suffocation by smoke or gas. Flaxseed in the outer corner of the eye, it says. I don't know whether it works as a smoke consumer or whether it hikes the compound gastro hippopotamus nerve into action, but Herkimer says it, and he was called to the case first. If you want to make it a consultation there's no objection."

Old doc takes the book and looks at it by means of his specs and a fireman's lantern.

"Well, Mr. Pratt," says he, "you evidently got on the wrong line in reading your diagnosis. The recipe for suffocation says, 'Get the patient into fresh air as quickly as possible and place in a reclining position.' The flaxseed remedy is for 'Dust and Cinders In the Eye,' on the line above. But, after all"—

"See here," interrupts Mrs. Sampson. "I reckon I've got something to say in this consultation. That flaxseed done me more good than anything I ever tried." And then she raises up her head and lays it back on my arm again and says, "Put some in the other eye, Sandy, dear."

And so if you was to stop off at Rosa tomorrow or any other day you'd see a fine new yellow house with Mrs. Pratt, that was Mrs. Sampson, embellishing and adorning it. And if you was to step inside you'd see on the marble top center table in the parlor "Herkimer's Handbook of Indispensable Information," all rebound in red morocco and ready to be consulted on any subject pertaining to human happiness and wisdom.

THE TRAIN BABY.

Her Presence Saved the Passengers From Death.

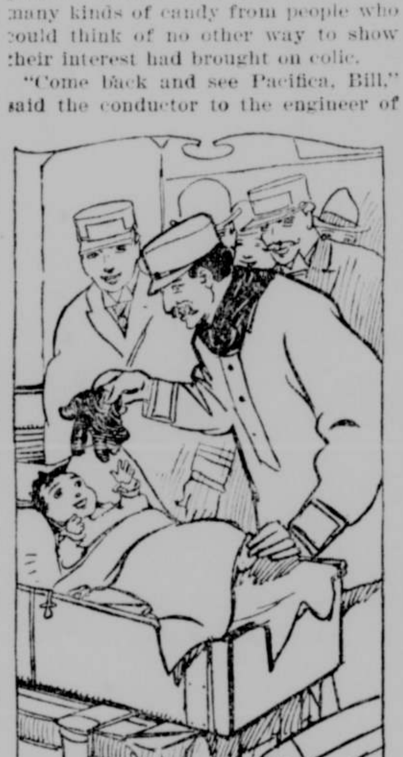
By WILLIAM ALFRED COREY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

The shrill cries of the motherless child arose above the roar of the train and the labored coughing of the two big mogul engines as the Overland limited slowly climbed the steep grades between Salida and Marshall pass. Do what she would, the woman the train crew had installed as nurse could not pacify the poor little waif. It had been supplied with everything a baby could be imagined to need or want.

Indeed, the nurse had a suspicion that this overattention and overfeeding were what ailed the infant in the present crisis. Too much and too many kinds of candy from people who could think of no other way to show their interest had brought on colic.

"Come back and see Pacifica, Bill," said the conductor to the engineer of the through train when she finally came to a stop on the cold but sun crowned height of the pass. "Pacifica's in a bad way. Maybe you can quiet the kid. Nobody else can."



"HI, THERE, YE LITTLE FURREIGNER!"

The trainmen had named the baby "Pacifica" and adopted her as their own when they wired the authorities in Los Angeles of the mother's death and made arrangements for the infant's care. "The little czarina," "Babyoffsky" and various other names had been suggested. But Cy Werner the fireman, whom the engineer described as "a sort of bookish, sentimental cuss," had insisted on "Pacifica" as the most appropriate name, and the rest had acquiesced. So "Pacifica" the little stranger was throughout the rest of the long journey.

"All right, Mr. Barnes," said the big engineer; "I'll be there directly."

And "directly," when he had finished "oiling 'er up" and deposited the long nosed can in its place in the cab, he started back along the train to where the little uncrowned queen lay yelling at full lung power, which was excellent, and kicking and fighting like a true revolutionist.

The engineer's hypnotic presence worked quick and marvelous results. "Hi, there, ye little furreigner, wot's the matter?" he called out, dangling a glove above the improvised crib with one hand and catching a diminutive pink toe between the fingers of the other. "Wot's the matter? Don't Ameriky suit ye nother?"

Then he opened his eyes wide and said "Boo!" as he bent down low and looked into the blue depths of the big orbs.

"O-o-ogle, oogle, goo, coo!" said the baby as her cries suddenly ceased and a wide smile of delight spread itself over her face.

"I think so myself," said the engineer, tickling Pacifica's fat chin with a stout finger.

"Goo-goo-google gee!" again remarked the baby, suddenly grasping the engineer's long mustaches with both hands and hanging on as though suspended in midair.

"Ouch, ye little terrorist!" winced the engineer, while the ring of bystanders roared.

But the infantile crisis was passed, and with a "that's the way to do it" air the man of the throttle and drive wheels went back to his seat in the cab, the conductor called "All aboard!" and the train resumed its journey toward the sunset slope.

They were snowed in for a day before reaching Ogden, and Pacifica was almost the sole diversion wherewith the storm bound community beguiled the slow hours. A stranger in a far strange land, she had more friends than she could well manage, though all were willing to be managed. The only baby on the train, her welfare was apparently the one concern of all.

Elegant, fur wrapped ladies brought dainties from the Pullman car buffet to please the child of poverty and misfortune. Dignified men of wealth and affairs inquired anxiously as to the little one's comfort and wanted to know if there was anything they could do. A newly married couple on their honeymoon were effusively solicitous. A titled somebody from somewhere calmly adjusted his monocle and smiled grimly as he studied the bit of democratic humanity. All did what they could. And many who could do nothing else paid the eloquent tribute of silent tears. A baby, a poor helpless waif from a foreign land, had done what has baffled the logic of centuries—it had broken the granite barriers of social caste and captured the citadel of the common human heart.

The snow blockade was raised, and the train moved on. And Pacifica ruled her moving autocracy with her scepter of love as they passed Ogden, crossed the sagebrush deserts of Nevada and climbed the Sierras. She wanted for nothing that her loyal subjects could supply. As each successive crew took charge of the train the train baby was duly and cheerfully accepted as a part thereof. These blunt, rough men of the iron rails were as gentle and tender with the orphaned child whom chance had thrown in their way as though she had been of their own flesh and blood. If she was fretful at a siding or desert watering tank she would be taken out of her car and passed about among the trainmen, train dispatcher, conductor, engineer, fireman, brakemen, porters, baggagemen and hotel runners, all taking awkwark turns at holding her or otherwise contributing to her entertainment. Pacifica owned the train and the whole works.

The Sierras were crossed, Sacramento was reached and passed, and the train headed south toward the San Joaquin and Los Angeles.

A few miles south of Sacramento a storm, suddenly blowing in from the ocean, was encountered, which increased in violence as they neared Bakersfield and the Tehachepi mountains.

At Bakersfield the wind was blowing a fifty mile clip, and the rain was coming down like a cloudburst.

"Ticklish business up there, Rogers!" yelled the conductor to the engineer as he waved his hand toward the storm swept heights of the Tehachepi. Rogers had no need to be told of the danger of landslides in this the first severe storm of the season.

It was 11 o'clock that night when the engineer stopped for water a short distance below tunnel No. 5. The night was very black, and the storm beat and roared about the train like an army of demons. The trainmen, incased in their long raincoats, flashed their lanterns about, examining boxings, testing air brakes and otherwise making ready for the next run, when suddenly Pacifica's baby wail from her car just back of the mail car arose above the noise of the storm.

It reached the ears of the engineer walking back by the tender, and straightway, instead of the screaming wind and pelting rain, he heard the voice of his own child calling to him from a new made grave in Los Angeles, and instead of the two glistening rails stretching away from the headlight into the gloom he saw the pleading eyes and outstretched arms of his dead boy. And the heart of the brave man came up in his throat, and he felt coming over him the weakness that for days had incapacitated him after his loss.

"Oh, my God!" he muttered to himself as the plaintive cry again smote his ears. "That sounded like little Bob."

And then Engineer Rogers did an unprecedented thing. Telling his fireman he would return in a minute, he started back through the storm to where Pacifica lay crying and refusing to be comforted.

Dripping with storm water, he edged his way through the circle of attendants and bent over the train baby's crib.

The crying instantly ceased. Whether it was the play of the car lights on his wet raincoat or the hypnotism of love in his presence there was no telling. But the plaint stopped and was not resumed until he had toyed with her for a moment and turned to go.

Then the wailing began again, nor did it cease until the engineer turned and again smiled down into the big blue eyes.

The moments followed each other unnoted, and the Southern Pacific Overland limited was being held while her engineer played with an orphaned emigrant child. Again and again he turned to go, and again and again the baby arms were held out in irresistible appeal.

Suddenly the roar of the storm outside was interrupted by a deeper and more significant roar, mingled with rending, crashing sounds, followed by a concussion which shook the whole mountain side.

A landslide! Not a trainman but recognized these ominous sounds. Instantly a handcar was manned and went forward to reconnoiter.

A mile up the track they found the mouth of tunnel No. 5 completely barricaded by a vast mass of huge bowlders and earth and tree trunks, swept from their anchorage on the heights above.

Rogers held his watch in the light of a lantern. "According to schedule," he said calmly to the grim faced men about, "my fireman and I ought to be lying under that pile of rocks and earth, and you fellows and 200 passengers ought to be furnishing fuel for your own cremating down yonder at the foot of the grade. But I disobeyed orders to play with a sick baby, and death missed us by five minutes."

And twenty-four hours later, when the belated Overland crossed the divide, emerged from the storm into the sun flooded valleys to the south and reached its destination, Pacifica, the train's good angel, carried a purse of $500 and thanks in all the languages to the sad hearted Russian father who with a large contingent from the foreign quarter, waited at the Arcade station.

THURSDAY, MAY 30, 1912.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Report of Anti-Saloon League of Maryland on the Attitude of the Senator and Delegates from Garret County.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Senator Harvey J. Speicher, Republican, whose term expires this time, betrayed his constituents. He attempted to make out that he had never made any promise to support the local option bill, but the League received assurance from representatives of his party that he had given satisfactory pledges to his own people and the League endorsed him as having made a satisfactory response and he was elected with that endorsement and is now estopped from denying the statements which he ratified by his silence.

On the Thursday before the close of the session in the presence of two witnesses the Superintendent of the League confronted Senator Speicher with the fact that the liquor men had been after him that day, which he admitted in the presence of the same witnesses. The Superintendent has challenged him to a joint discussion in his home county and will undertake to prove to his people that the liquor interest "got" him, and further, that by his action, in view of the assurance which he gave, he has proved himself to be unworthy to represent the people of his county. His temperance record in the previous session aggravates his offense in this. He claims to have been willing to support the original bill, but the bill which he helped to kill by voting for dilatory tactics and by his vote to further amend it, was a meritorious bill, still state-wide in its scope, which would have given Garrett county identically what would have been provided by the state-wide measure, and as the measure was finally defeated by only one vote, he is responsible for robbing the people of his county of the chance to clean the saloons out of the entire county.

Senator Speicher, for the sole purpose, we believe, of attempting to fool the people of his county, introduced a bill designed to allow the town of Oakland to vote, as that town is now exempted from the operation of the county law which is substantially identical with the proposed state bill. At this writing the League is unable to tell just what became of this little measure because of the riotous confusion incident to the closing of a session of the legislature, but in the judgment of the League this bill was a liquor trick pure and simple, because, according to the League's information there is no registration in the town of Oakland alone, but the town is part of a district which contains all the voters for several miles around and it might be possible on a "wet" and "dry" vote to run in a hundred or more "wet" voters who did not belong in the town on account of the inability to directly establish their residence by the registration books.

If Senator Speicher had been honest in his desire to give relief to the people of his county in the from of local legislation he would have introduced a measure to strike out the exemption of Oakland from the splendid county measure which is now in force throughout all the rest of Garrett county. This would then have safeguarded the Oakland situation and would have permitted a vote in the entire county and would have provided sufficient enforcement regulations.

Messrs. E. A. Weimer, John A. Long and Samuel Lawton, Republicans, voted right on every roll call involving the original bill. Mr. Weimer not only voted in favor of the state-wide bill on every roll call but also voted to pass the amended House bill which was at that time the only local option legislation that had any chance of passing and would have given Garrett county complete relief. Messrs. John A. Long and Samuel Lawton voted against all amendments to the state-wide bill up to the time the House amendment passed, and voted against the passage of the amended bill, being the only supporters of the original bill who did so.

The above is from the American Issue of April 13, 1912, and speaks for itself.

Yours truly,
E. A. WEIMER.

Senator Speicher Answers Mr. Weimer.

ACCIDENT, MD., May 20, 1912.

To the Editor of The Republican:

DEAR SIR:—I have no desire to engage in any newspaper controversy with any one, particularly with one who, in the minds of a great many people, has proven himself to be unfair and handled the truth, I think, somewhat recklessly as well as indifferently. This distinguished gentleman has evaded every question at issue between himself and Mr. Robinson, and in view of the fact that he continues to direct his attack upon me in the newspaper instead of confining himself to the question at issue, I do not see how I can longer remain silent and at the same time preserve my self respect. In his reply to Mr. Robinson he goes to some trouble and considerable effort to quarrel with me. The issues raised in his discussion with Mr. Robinson do not warrant a question of my record upon local option or any other measure in the legislature during the recent session, but they do take his own record upon certain and specific matters already made clear to our people. In his first article in The Republican this man undertook to mislead the people, as was proven by a statement from Delegates Long and Lawton, his worthy colleagues, and to the contents of this statement, which controverts his own statement, he has made no effort to deny. This being true, and the fact that he so lightly regards his own assertions, does it not follow that all of his subsequent utterances, including those in his article in last week's Republican, are mere fabrications?

Having served the people of this county in the General Assembly of Maryland, if Mr. Weimer wants to write something for the press that will be of the greatest interest to the people he might contribute a series of articles in which he could inform a worthy constituency what Delegate Weimer has accomplished—what he has actually done for the people of Garrett county and the State of Maryland, as a member of the House of Delegates during the 1912 session of the General Assembly.

However, since he persists in assailing me and my record at the expense of his own which has been considerably battered in his controversy with Mr. Robinson, short though the conflict has been, I wish to say a few words concerning temperance legislation which seems to be the line of attack selected by this recent visitor to Annapolis. I hope the people who are more interested in temperance legislation than any other will take the trouble to procure copies of the senate journals and look up my record on all temperance legislation since I have been a member of the Maryland senate. I want them to look this up and see for themselves, and not be misguided and misled by one who failed to accomplish anything whatever along the line of legislation, and who, in his first attempt to criticize me unjustly was caught in his own trap; and who, after being caught, is ready to take up any other line of argument as a cheap defense in order that he may further his attack upon me; this, too, with no other motive or purpose than to draw the attention of the public from the unfortunate position in which he has been placed.

I desire, first, to refer the readers of this attack to the explanation of my vote which I gave in the senate before voting on the state-wide local option bill and which was pnblished at that time in all the county papers. In this address before the senate in explaining my vote, I endeavored to make myself clearly understood by everyone who heard me and to everyone who read my published remarks on that occasion. But should there happen to be any single point, no matter how trivial, or if there is anything in connection with that explanation which is not clearly understood by anyone, I will gladly and willingly give any further information or explanation on this subject on receipt of a letter requesting any explanation upon any point involved, and I feel that I will be able to satisfy any fair minded citizen who will take the trouble to write me about it that I acted consistently, honestly and in all good faith throughout this whole matter, particularly after politics had been injected into this local option bill to which reference has been made.

Referring to that public and detailed explanation of my vote and my position on this bill at that time, I will show that the fight for this state-wide bill was won, and that this able legislator voted FOR the amendment which practically killed the bill, and this fact was generally known.

As to the reference made to the conversation with a member of the Anti-Saloon League in Oakland, I desire to state the absolute truth as to exactly what took place. This occurred in Oakland before my election and took place in the Garrett National Bank with Mr. Scott T. Jones, who insisted upon me answering Mr. Anderson's letters and pledging myself to support the proposed Anti-Saloon League bill. This I refused to do. Later on, to satisfy Mr. Sincell, the editor of The Republican, Mr. Bolden, Mr. Chappell and myself jointly signed the "pledge" to which reference has been made, and with so much eclat and sarcasm, as though this were a piece of documentary evidence of my treachery and misconduct, while the fact is, in a speech on the floor of the senate I publicly stated that I had ignored all of Mr. Anderson's letters and that I had never signed a pledge to support the proposed Anti-Saloon League bill, and that Mr. Anderson never received a letter from me. This statement I publicly made. In addition to this I made the statement on the floor of the senate (and this can be verified by every senator who was present at the time) that I had signed such a statement at the earnest solicitation of the editor of The Republican at Oakland and have never attempted to ignore or deny it.

Though not pledged to support Mr. Anderson's Anti-Saloon League local option bill I did more than Mr. Weimer in trying to get the bill passed without any amendments. He knows that while the first amendment was under consideration in the house I went to members from Garrett county and urged them to vote down the amendment and to put the bill through "straight." Two of the delegates from Garrett carried out this policy. One did not.

Here we find this great and mighty temperance advocate, Mr. Weimer, working and voting for the amendment, the adoption of which was the death knell of this legislation. The difference between Weimer's vote and mine is, he aided in administering to it the fatal blow by voting for the first amendment and thus allowing politics to be injected into it. It is worthy of note also that the bill did pass the senate and met its fate in the house. Notwithstanding all Mr. Weimer has said he would endeavor to leave the inference that the bill was killed in the senate. Did Weimer vote for or against the bill as it came from the senate? I defy him or any other man to show that I ever voted against this or any other temperance bill during my whole legislative career.

Now, as to the Oakland bill: Weimer says I had no business to introduce such a measure without first consulting him and in this probably I made a mistake, as you know Mr. Weimer is the author of so much important legislation for Garrett county—perhaps. I should have consulted him instead of the people of Oakland. Maybe he is "the people," and maybe he isn't. He thinks I should have known that the town would go "wet" had my bill passed. If this be true, then why should he not have known it as well as I? If he did know it then why did he say he didn't know how it would go if put to a vote, but that no matter how it might go he said the fight would be so bitter and cause so much strife that it would be worse than to have the whisky there. Weimer made these statements and it has been proven that he made them.

The whole truth of the matter is, Weimer has denied the people of his own town that which he considers is a good thing for Grantsville and Friendsville. The opinion is prevalent among a number of people who have given consideration to this matter, fair minded people, that Weimer does not want temperance in his own town; and it seems he wants to give it to the other fellows, but finds some excuse for preventing their own people from having a chance to get it for fear they might take it.

Further I want to say that the men who are engaged in the liquor business did not ask for this bill, but some of the temperance people of the town of Oakland did, which was proven conclusively by the telegram sent by one of the leading temperance men—one of the better class of temperance advocates—urging the delegation, including Weimer, to "Pass Speicher's Local Option Bill." As for my home town, I wish Mr. Weimer to distinctly understand that it is a "dry" town, and that I helped to make it "dry," which is more than he can say as a resident of Oakland. Weimer says he made a proposition to me early in the session to repeal the law exempting Oakland from the provisions of the county local option law and that I assured him that I would not let such a bill go through the senate. This again shows how recklessly he handles the truth. His proposition was to repeal ALL liquor laws for Garrett county and put it up to the people of the whole county to vote "wet" or "dry," which proposition I readily consented to, and Weimer had the bill prepared to be introduced. Delegate Long objected to opening up the territory in his adjoining districts which were already "dry." Then he had a new bill prepared which he introduced allowing the county to vote Oakland "dry," and was the kind of bill Weimer wanted. This bill was never reported by the committee and Weimer lost another opportunity to get in some good licks for the cause of local option and temperance. Weimer at one time had agreed with Mr. Long that if I would consent to pass a bill for Oakland, giving Oakland alone the right to vote, he (Weimer) would be willing to support such a bill. Mr. Long came to see me and I consented, but when he reported to Weimer he turned a complete flip-flop and "reconsidered the previous question," as it were.

I now wish to give my friends, as well as the friends of Mr. Weimer, some remarkable expressions of this gentleman who would regulate the nation and all its people; remarks made by him before leaving Annapolis for home after three months' "self-sacrificing" for the public good in the legislative halls of this state. Here are some of the things he said, and I charge you to mark them well:

1st. "This is the only job I ever had in my life in which I felt I that I was not giving my employer anything in return for the salary I have received."

2nd. "I am ashamed to go back home to my people."

3rd. "If there's anything I want to forget it is that I ever was a member of the Maryland Legislature."

In case the distinguished Mr. Weimer may have forgotten these choice bits of sentiment by a retiring legislator, and should try to deny that he made such assertions, I will be glad to furnish him with the names of those who were present and who were shocked to hear such expressions from a man who was supposed to have performed his duties conscientiously.

So far as I am personally concerned I shall always look back with genuine pride to the time when I was honored by the people of my county and by their votes elected to the Maryland senate. I have never felt like a man without a country or without a home, nor have I ever been "ashamed to go back to my home."

Weimer's deep regret, expressed in the closing passages of his letter, would sound very well if he were a total stranger to this community—if he were not known here. His "regrets" are that in order to cover his apparent insincerity in matters of temperance legislation he has felt obliged to evade all questions direct toward himself by Mr. Robinson with reference to his official conduct; not only that, but instead of setting himself right before his people he takes evasive position of trying to detract public attention away from himself by making an attack upon me and my record in a way which no fair minded gentleman would attempt to do.

It is a great satisfaction in a man's life to realize that he has the confidence and respect of his honest and fair-minded fellow-citizens and associates, and as all of my official acts while a member of the Senate are official and a public record and to this I confidently invite the closest scrutiny.

Mr. Edgar W. Young, an attorney of Baltimore city, will be one of the speakers at the Memorial services at Deer Park today. Mr. Young is a good speaker, and one of the rising young lawyers of Baltimore. He is a son of John W. Young, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Allegany county at Cumberland. Mr. William Miller of Deer Park, will act as chairman.

The most astonishing report that the current campaign, remarkable in so many respects, has developed is that which accredits Hon. David E. Dick, formerly of Lonaconing, now of Baltimore, with leaving his (republican) party and mounting the democratic stump for Champ Clark. His friends here do not admit that it is a sign of an early call by the millenium, but if Clark should not be nominated Dick will again be found licking the democratic party. It is reported that his brother—R. A. L. Dick, now of New York, is promoting the candidacy of ex-Gov. LaFollette for the republican presidential nomination.

Miss Anna Manges returned home from Kingwood Sunday afternoon where she had been engaged in training home talent for the production of the play entitled "Breezy Point," which was given to a good sized audience on Thursday and Saturday evenings, under the auspices of the Civic Club of Kingwood. The Club of that town has made remarkable progress with the beautifying of the municipality, the major portion of their efforts being expended on the cemetry, which has been given entirely into their charge, for the improvement of which money aggregating two thousand dollars have been raised and spent by the Club. The play put on by Miss Manges was exceptionally well rendered, every participant in its production taking their parts and acting them true to life.

NEW MEN IN MARYLAND STATE ROAD COMMISSION

Andrew Ramsay And Walter B. Miller Republican Members.

Governor Phillips Lee Goldsborough of Maryland, accompanied by Chairman O. E. Weller and Messrs. W. B. Miller, Andrew Ramsey and E. E. Goslin, of the State Roads Commission, arrived in Oakland last Thursday night and on Friday morning started from here for an inspection of the roads now under State control.

The party left Oakland at eight o'clock in the automobiles of Senator Speicher, Dr. Webster Ravenscroft and Mr. N. U. Bond, arriving at Frostburg in time for dinner.

When the State Roads Commission met Thursday morning in its offices in the Union Trust Building it was composed as follows:

Governor Goldsborough.

Mr. Andrew Ramsay, of Allegany county, who succeeds Mr. Samuel M. Shoemaker.

Mr. Walter B. Miller, of Wicomico county, who succeeds Mr. Francis N. Hutton.

Senator E. E. Goslin, of Caroline county, who succeeds Mr. Edward B. Lloyd.

Chairman O. E. Weller, who was appointed several months ago by the Governor in place of Mr. John M. Tucker.

Drs. Ira Remsen and William Bullock Clark, of the Geological Survey Commission.

Of the new appointees, Messrs. Ramsay and Miller are Republicans, while Senator Goslin is a Democrat. Mr. Weller also is a Republican.

Drs. Remsen and Clark, neither of whom receive salaries as Commissioners, are Democrats. They have been members of the commission since its origin and they will not be disturbed, the law requiring that two members of the survey may be members of the commission.

Dr. Remsen, however, will sever his connection with the commission when he retires as president of Johns Hopkins University, and it is reported that his successor as president of the university will be named by the Governor as his successor on the roads commission.

Ever since the road fight in the last Legislature it has been currently reported that Senator Goslin would be named. The Senator was steadfast in his fight against stripping the Governor of his power to appoint the Commissioners. In a statement accompanying the appointments Wednesday the Governor said that he wanted the minority party to have representation among the salaried members of the commission, so as to prevent the argument being made that the commission was playing politics.

In his statement the Governor referred to the finincial condition of the commission, expressed his ideas on road work and gave a brief sketch of the new appointees.

The Governor says that as a result of the old commission overspending its annual appropriations the expected sums for road improvements are not available. The Governor states that it will be the policy of the new commission to build roads more expeditiously and that as soon as the finances of the commission are straightened out the work will be rushed. The last Legislature appropriated $3,175,000 for road construction.

The Governor's statement follows:

"Although experts have been working on the books and accounts of the State Roads Commision for nearly six months, it is not yet possible to determine with accuracy the financial status of its affairs. It is, however, apparent that the situation is much more unfavorable than has been anticipated, and that, owing to the heavy deficit at the beginning of the year, the large amount of uncompleted contracts let last year without funds in sight with which to take care of them, the unestimated extras, and excesses on these contracts, the overdrafts of a number of the counties, etc., there will be much less money available for the construction of new roads than is generally understood.

"While I believe that this unfortunate condition can be offset to a considerable extent by future economies in various ways and by adopting a different and more conservative policy than has been followed in the past, it presents a problem which will require a high order of administrative and business capacity.

"To meet this situation I have, since the Legislature adjourned, delayed making my new appointments to the commission in order to secure men of proved business experience, of executive ability and of high character—men who are big enough for this work.

"The people of the State have too much at stake to push this great undertaking ahead recklessly and without regard to what the bill will cost. The time is here to put on the brakes, and we must make haste slowly.

"I promised the people that road building would be conducted under my administration with the sole aim of securing for the taxpayers the best possible results for the money expended, and I expect to see that this is done. I am hopeful that it will be possible for me to make an intelligent statement of the affairs of the commission in the near future, so that it may be understood just where we stand.

"In the meantime we shall make a physical examination of the roads, the local conditions will be carefully studied, and after determining just how much money will be available in the State in the next two years a broad and business-like plan of operations will be adopted and carried out.

"I am satisfied that in going into this matter throughly before taking on new construction I am acting for the best interests of the people and that results will show it.

"There is a policy for which I stand, and it is my purpose to its execution, viz:

"First—That more miles of road shall be built throughout the State.

"Second—That they shall be built at less cost per mile than in the past.

"Third—That they shall be more quickly built.

"I have asked to serve on the commission, as successors to Messrs, Shoemaker, Lloyd and Hutton, Messrs. Andrew Ramsay, of Allegany county; Walter B. Miller, of Wicomico county, and Edward E. Goslin, of Caroline county—all men of tried business capacity.

"Mr. Ramsay is a Republican and a man of large business affairs having built up and now conducting an extensive brick and tile manufacturing business at Mount Savage, Md. He is accustomed to handling large business interests and most successfully, as evidenced by what he has accomplished in the conduct of the affairs of the Andrew Ramsay Company, of which corporation he is president and principal stockholder.

"Mr. Ramsay is an enthusiast on the subject of road constructions and has consented to accept this trust, not because of the salary the office carries, but because of the intense personal interest in this splendid internal improvement which the people of Maryland want builded within her borders.

"Mr. Walter B. Miller, of Salisbury, Md., is well known as one of the most enterprising and prosperous business men of Eastern Maryland, a man of high business attainments and keen commercial insight, who has built up an extensive business—the manufacture of kindling wood—having mills at Salisbury, Snow Hill and at other points in Maryland and Virginia, and from which he supplies the New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Eastern markets.

"He, like Mr. Ramsay, is a man of independent means, and the salary of the office to which he has been appointed was in no sense a reason which induced him to accept it. On the contrary, he takes up the duties of this responsible office with an eye single to the determination to give to the people of the State the benefit of his business training, experience and excellent judgment, which those of us who know him well admit he possesses in a high degree. He has given much thought and study to the subject of road building, quickly recognizing that modern roads not only greatly enhance real estate values but add to the comfort and happiness, as well as lighten the labors, of those living in rural communities. Mr. Miller is a Republican.

"Senator Goslin, of Caroline county, has been in public life for a number of years and, as is known, is a Democrat, and now the secretary of the Good Roads Commission. In his public career he has always stood for progressive measures, steadfastly striving to serve the people whose servant he is.

"I offered him a position on this commission for two reasons:

"First—Because he is a Democrat, and I desired that there should be minority representation thereon, believing that the people wanted and would approve such action. And again, it has been urged against me that I desired to play politics with the building of the roads. Thus it was that I determined that the Democratic party should be represented on the commission, for with Senator Goslin thereon the people of Maryland may be assured that if the commission should so far forget the obligations of the trust given into its hands and start out to play politics with the tax payers' money, very quickly would the people know it.

"Second—Because Senator Goslin has had long experience in and possesses valuable knowledge of practical road building, and I am convinced his services will be of inestimable value to the people of Maryland and his colleagues who will direct the work. It cannot be doubted that Senator Goslin did splendid and unselfish service for the cause of good roads in the last General Assembly of Maryland, and without his help and that of several other members of his party who supported him, road construction in Maryland would not today be moving on, and therefore, it may frankly be said that membership on this commission is an honor deserved and merited in return for duty well performed.

"All three of these gentlemen have given me assurance that their time will be fully given to the office they have assumed; that it will not be enough for them to attend board meetings and occasionally make hurried inspection of roads but that they will carefully look into all matters touching a complete and conscientious performance of their work; that they will personally inspect and supervise all roads in course of construction, endeavoring by close attention to economically, but with such economy as will not sacrifice efficiency, discharge the trust placed in their keeping.

"The chairman of the commission, Mr. O. E. Weller, of Baltimore county, heretofore appointed, a Republican, is devoting the best efforts of his life to the work placed in his charge, and it is a matter of high satisfaction that his appointment seems to have met universal commendation, as it should, for it is believed by those who know him, that he is an ideal man for its position, and my confident judgment is that the accomplishment of future work will furnish convincing proof of the wisdom of his selection.

"I expect to see, and believe I am justified in promising the people of Maryland, a commission that will work in absolute harmony without dissensions or cliques, a commission that will do team work of the highest order."

Your best guarantee on anything you sell is your reputation but beyond that your standing guarantee, "If it is not right we will refund your money," is the strongest guarantee that can be made—it covers everything. That's why we say to you and ask you to say to your customers:

"When you see PAROID on your building, if you are not satisfied tell us and we will send you a check for the cost of the roofing and the cost of laying it." If a broader guarantee than this could be made we would make it.

Yours very truly

MORERI II,
20279.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by judges of horses to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and owners now will not have to be peddled to get [illegible]. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but not responsible for accidents.

A MIRACLE FROM THE SEA.

How a Ray of Sunlight Gave Inspiration to a Genius.

By EMMA ARCHER OSBORNE.

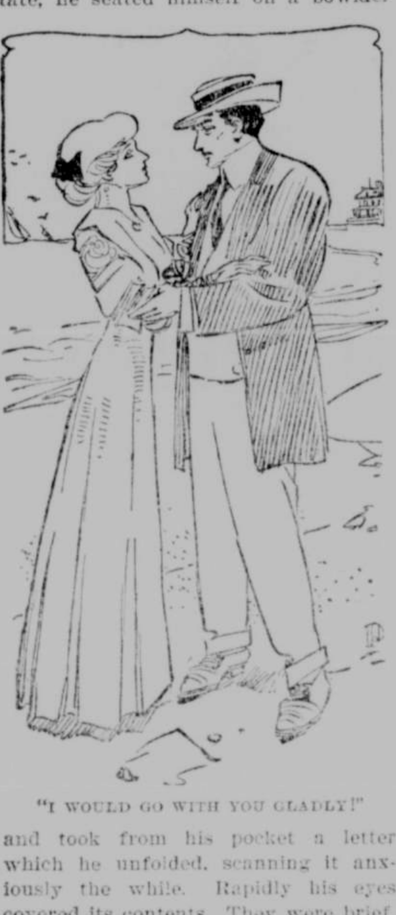
[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

On a summer day, one calculated to make the average mortal glad if he were near the sea, the beach at Cragshead was deserted, save for a solitary man who, in waiting attitude, paced the yellow strip of sand with long, springy steps.

He was tall and strongly built—a man of twenty-eight or thereabouts—and with broad shoulders. His feet and hands were large, and the latter bore evidences of common toil.

To his left lay Cragshead, an estate of great acreage and beauty, but as he strode on he never so much as turned his head toward it.

Near the Inlet, the adjoining estate, he seated himself on a bowlder and took from his pocket a letter which he unfolded, scanning it anxiously the while. Rapidly his eyes covered its contents. They were brief, and he had read them so often it was not necessary to follow word for word. The letter ran.



"I WOULD GO WITH YOU GLADLY!"

> Dear Phil—Do, please, put your pride in your pocket and come to the dear old beach once more. Come today, for I must see you. Yours, ISABELLE.

"I wonder what it is now," he mused impatiently, and he slowly tore the letter into fragments and cast bit by bit to the caprice of the breeze.

Then he raised himself and looked out upon the sea.

"I'll win out yet!" he cried ironically. "I'll fetch them over! But not for all the Benton millions would I give up my work—good, hard work. Oh, the satisfaction of living one's own way! The wholesome joy of earning one's own bread! The freedom from being eternally branded 'a rich man's son!'"

"Phil! Phil!"

A girl in a white dress came running down a pathway in the rocks. She ran with such speed that the suspicion of love attached to her little white shoes. There was no interval of waiting on the part of the man. The brawny figure of Benton hurried to meet her, and their greeting was affectionate, for he took her in his arms and kissed her. She looked at him like one who trusted in him and loved him.

"I'm so glad you have come," she cried happily, "even though it is the eleventh hour. Tomorrow it would have been too late."

"Too late! What do you mean?" he asked, drawing back sharply. The look in his eyes had been tender. At her words it grew alert and tense.

"What do I mean?" she repeated. "Why, is it possible you have not heard? Haven't they told you? They said they had."

"I have not heard anything. I have not seen any of them since the—since father died. Tell me, Isabelle, what new foolishness is brewing."

"Take me away with you now—today, Phil," she begged. "They are determined that I shall marry Donald. Mother has her heart set on it and threatens all manner of things when I rebel. Donald is positively persecuting in his attentions, and I loathe him—even though he is your brother. I cannot help it. Think of the injustice of the will. He gloats over it."

She spoke rapidly, excitedly, glancing now and then in the direction from whence she had come as if in fear of being interrupted before she had finished her plea.

"So that's the latest deviltry?" he blurted, and held her hands so tightly that he hurt them. "They're going to throw me down again, are they?" His voice grew hard as the look in his face.

He sprang to his feet and stood glowering at Craigshead.

"They have taken my birthright from me; they have maligned my good name; they have scoffed at and scorned me, humbled and belittled me ineffably, and because I choose to follow my own inclinations in the matter of occupation. But I swear they shall not take you from me!"

The girl's face brightened as she stood beside him.

"Then I shall go with you—today!" she exclaimed, clinging to him. "In spite of all I can say or do, mother is giving a dinner tomorrow to announce my engagement to Donald. In a month we leave for Europe, and it is arranged that I shall marry him early this autumn. Oh, it is unendurable! It seems as if I shall die if I do not escape it all!"

"I will not take you away," he snapped, yet tenderly catching at and restraining locks of her yellow hair that the breeze was playing with. "I never stole anything in my life, and I positively refuse to steal my wife. Donald already has everything that rightfully belongs to me, but he shall not have you, my Isabelle—I say he shall not have you!"

His voice was tremulous with anger, though his eyes dwelt fondly on her tear stained face.

"I would go with you voluntarily—gladly!"

"No, no! It would amount to the same thing, dearest," he replied in a determined voice. "There shall be no elopement for us. And when we marry it shall be with your mother's consent. Besides," he added, with sudden dejection, "I cannot now provide a suitable home for you. I couldn't ask you to live on my present income."

"That doesn't matter," she broke out graciously. "There's my income. We couldn't use half of it."

She caught his reproving look and flushed. "You are so delightfully independent, Phil!" And she smiled a wan little smile, which was quickly followed by a look of distress.

They conversed long and earnestly, and when they parted he admonished her to "be brave and to trust in him." A mighty portion of his strength of character seemed to have been cast upon her, for with each and every step that took her farther and farther from him her will and her trust increased. It was with blazing eyes and with clinched little fists that she re-entered the halls of the Inlet, muttering to herself: "I shall not yield to them. Let them do their worst!"

A month had passed. The man was again on the sands of Cragshead, but he was alone. A big ship was slipping swiftly down the channel toward the open sea. If the vision of the gazer on the beach could have reached far enough he would have seen a forlorn little figure on the ship with straining eyes turned in his direction.

"Oh, to know what to do!" he sighed, turning at last from his vigil.

He paced the sands with heart and brain afire in an effort to conceive an avenue to wealth. Six weeks before he had laughed at poverty. It was different now since the homemaking instinct had been keenly aroused within him.

For generations the Benton men had engaged in professional careers or as capitalists. From the time Philip Benton could use his hands and brain he had displayed a penchant for the baser metals. When a baby he reached for the chandeliers, for the buckles on harness, for the wheels of his carriage. When a child he took to hammers and nails, bits of glass and the like. He dissected watches and clocks while his brother Donald rode his pony. He constructed embryonic machinery while Donald played tennis. He sought out the motive power of engines and steamships while Donald visited art galleries and indulged in polo, and on entering his university had disappointed the family by selecting a course in engineering and metallurgy instead of adopting the law and the classics.

By every means devisable pressure was brought to bear to induce Benton to abandon his distasteful vocation, but to no avail. Instead, he applied himself the more diligently to the hot, noisy, greasy machine shop, keeping apart from his kin altogether. It was but little wondered at therefore when, at his father's death, the name of this pariah was not included in the list of heirs and beneficiaries.

In bitterness Benton had listened to the reading of his father's will, and in bitter defiance he had held his peace. There was general surprise that he did not enter legal protest, but he was no money worshiper, and he found solace within himself and his purpose—and Isabelle. Isabelle Fielding had been his greatest comfort and inspiration.

"One Benton, alone and unaided, laid the foundation of all their wealth, and I guess I can at least take care of myself," he had remarked derisively.

It had therefore been a matter of pocketing pride when, at Isabelle's bidding, he had again visited the beach at Cragshead. But it was withal a pleasure and doubly so to meet again the girl he loved at the dear old trysting place. Isabelle had played with him there in their childhood days, and it was there they had repeatedly told their love each for the other.

And today he had irresistibly been drawn there to watch the ship which carried her out to sea with the cruel object of snatching her from him.

Long after the vessel passed from view, even after her smoke had merged with the mists of the ocean, Benton remained, his attitude was that of dejection.

His career as a mechanic was satisfactory, as mechanical careers go, for a beginner. His university preparation and steady application had made him apt for advancement, and his inventive genius augured good. But so occupied had he been in the pursuit of invention that marriage had seemed remote. Now he smiled bitterly when he thought of tenderly nurtured Isabelle Fielding living on his meager income. True, she was rich, but he would support his wife himself. He would not have it otherwise.

Once since that first day he had met her on the beach and had cheered her, for he was alive with the fire of determination to thwart Donald Benton's ambitions. The avenue which was to lead to success, however, remained discouragingly invisible.

The boom of a cannon aroused Benton. A warship, stately and majestic, had turned from the city and was putting to sea. She was magnificent in her grandeur, and her bristling guns alone would ordinarily have aroused Benton to enthusiastic admiration, but he scarcely noticed them now.

He glanced at the sun and saw it was time to be turning toward the city. Once again he looked seaward, and a great sigh, born of his solitude, filled his breast. Impulsively he stretched his arms toward the vastness into which his heart had vanished.

"Oh, God," he cried wearily, "work a miracle for love's sake!"

He climbed the rocks and had gained the summit when there were more cannon volleys. The warship and a nearby fort were exchanging courtesies. Benton glanced disinterestedly in their direction and was about to continue his progress when something caught and held his attention—something on the ship.

It was the gun turrets that he looked at.

The rays of the descending sun shot full length along the grim dogs of war perched high above the ship's main deck. As the sun sank toward the hills beyond the radiance departed from the cannon, and still Benton's eyes followed them, even until they and the ship were far too distant to any longer be discernible.

Then, like one suddenly possessed with an inspiration, he snatched a memorandum book from his pocket, dropped down on to the rocks and commenced to sketch and to figure.

Rapidly and excitedly he worked with his pencil. He traced straight lines and dotted lines. He drew curves and circles and made queer looking, jagged marks, covering page after page of the little book. There were front views, side elevations and cross sections with figures and notes jotted irregularly here and there. He seemed to be striving for some conclusion of a plan.

The big red sun slipped from view, and the rosy afterglow turned to violet and from violet to gray. Lighthouses blinked their alternate lights, and daylight grew so dim that Benton was obliged to bend his face close to the paper to enable him to see.

He had been sitting motionless for a long time when he suddenly leaped to his feet with a wild, glad cry and dashed down on to the beach with the little book clutched tightly in his hand.

"I have it!" he shouted. "I have it!" And he threw himself face downward on the sand.

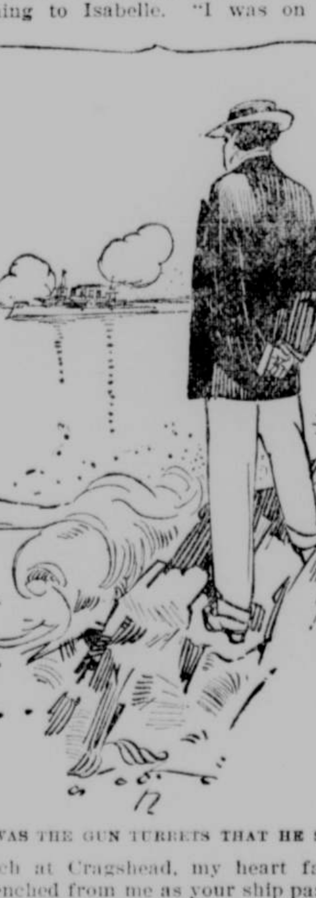
"God!" he cried in a half sob. "The miracle has emerged from out the sea—for love's sake!"

It was not altogether for the purpose of extending grants at fabulous royalties on his invention of mining machinery that Phil Benton found himself in London a few weeks later. Isabelle Fielding was there.

And never was that homely old maxim "Nothing succeeds like success" more applicable than in the case of Benton, for, since the newspapers were spreading the greatness of his achievement, Mrs. Fielding had hastened to renew acquaintance.

Benton was dining with Mrs. Fielding and Isabelle one evening.

"The mechanical principle was suggested to me by the revolving guns in the turrets of a warship," he was explaining. "It was the day you sailed," turning to Isabelle. "I was on the beach at Cragshead, my heart fairly wrenched from me as your ship passed from sight."



IT WAS THE GUN TURRETS THAT HE SAW.

"But you have had great compensation for Isabelle's absence," naively interposed Mrs. Fielding.

"Only partial," he replied seriously, "only a very small part. Indeed, there is no compensation for Isabelle's absence."

He reached over and covered one of Isabelle's hands with his own, looking the while at Mrs. Fielding with pleading eyes.

The mother heart capitulated. Besides, she had grown weary of battling for Donald, and after all, Phil Benton had won a name for himself and was rapidly winning a fortune. She answered his look with a smile and a nod toward the happy girl.

"You have my consent," she said.

THE THING'S THE PLAY

Story That a Reporter Failed to Find Funny

By O. HENRY

Copyright, 1910, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

Being acquainted with a newspaper reporter who had a couple of free passes, I got to see the performance a few nights ago at one of the popular vaudeville houses.

One of the numbers was a violin solo by a striking looking man not much past forty, but with very gray, thick hair.

"There was a story about that chap a month or two ago," said the reporter. "They gave me the assignment. It was to run a column and was to be on the extremely light and joking order. The old man seems to like the funny touch I give to local happenings. Oh, yes, I'm working on a farce comedy now. Well, I went down to the house and got all the details, but I certainly fell down on that job. I went back and turned in a comic writeup of an east side funeral instead. Why? Oh, I couldn't seem to get hold of it with my funny hooks somehow. Maybe you could make a one act tragedy out of it for a curtain raiser. I'll give you the details."

After the performance my friend the reporter recited to me the facts over the Wurzburger.

"I see no reason," said I when he had concluded, "why that shouldn't make a rattling good funny story. Those three people couldn't have acted in a more absurd and preposterous manner if they had been real actors in a real theater. I'm really afraid that all the stage is a world, anyhow, and all the players merely men and women. 'The thing's the play,' is the way I quote Mr. Shakespeare."

"Try it," said the reporter.

"I will," said I, and I did, to show him how he could have made a humorous column of it for his paper.

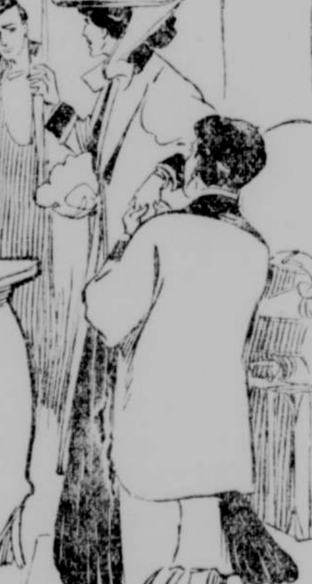
There stands a house near Abingdon square. On the ground floor there has been for twenty-five years a little store where toys and notions and stationery are sold.

One night twenty years ago there was a wedding in the rooms above the store. The Widow Mayo owned the house and store. Her daughter Helen was married to Frank Barry. John Delaney was best man. Helen was eighteen and a belle of the lower west side.

Frank Barry and John Delaney were prominent young beaux of the same side and bosom friends, whom you expected to turn upon each other every time the curtain went up. Both had made a great race for Helen's hand. When Frank won John shook his hand and congratulated him—honestly, he did.

After the ceremony Helen ran upstairs to put on her hat. She was getting married in a traveling dress.

Then there was a rattle of the fire escape, and into her room jumps the mad and infatuated John Delaney, with a damp curl drooping upon his forehead, and made violent and reprehensible love to his lost one, entreating her to flee or fly with him.



IN STALKED THE BRIDEGROOM.

It would have carried Blaney off his feet to see Helen repulse him. With blazing and scornful eyes she fairly withered him by demanding whatever he meant by speaking to respectable people that way.

In a few moments she had him going. The manliness that had possessed him departed. He bowed low and said something about "irresistible impulse" and "forever carry in his heart the memory of"—and she suggested that he catch the first fire escape going down.

"I will away," said John Delaney, "to the furthermost parts of the earth. I cannot remain near you and know that you are another's."

"For goodness sake, get out," said Helen. "Somebody might come in."

He knelt upon one knee, and she extended him one white hand that he might give it a farewell kiss.

And then, of course—how did you guess it?—the door opened and in stalked the bridegroom, jealous of slow tying bonnet strings.

The farewell kiss was imprinted upon Helen's hand, and out of the window and down the fire escape sprang John Delaney, Africa bound.

A little slow music, if you please—faint violin, just a breath in the clarinet and a touch of the cello. Imagine the scene! Frank, white hot, with the cry of a man wounded to death bursting from him; Helen, rushing and clinging to him, trying to explain. He catches her wrists and tears them from his shoulders—once, twice, thrice he sways her this way and that—the stage manager will show you how—and throws her from him to the floor a huddled, crushed, moaning thing. Never, he cries, will he look upon her face again, and rushes from the house through the staring groups of astonished guests.

And now, because it is the thing instead of the play, the audience must stroll out into the real lobby of the world and marry, die, grow gray, rich, poor, happy or sad during the intermission of twenty years which must precede the rising of the curtain again.

Mrs. Barry inherited the shop and the house. At thirty-eight she could have bested many an eighteen-year old at a beauty show on points and general results. Only a few people remembered her wedding comedy, but she made of it no secret.

One day a middle aged, money making lawyer, who bought his legal cap and ink of her, asked her across the counter to marry him.

"I'm really much obliged to you," said Helen cheerfully, "but I married another man twenty years ago. He was more a goose than a man, but I think I love him yet. I have never seen him since about half an hour after the ceremony. Was it copying ink that you wanted or just writing fluid?"

The lawyer bowed over the counter with old time grace and left a respectful kiss on the back of her hand. Helen sighed. Parting salutes, however romantic, may be overdone. Here she was at thirty-eight, beautiful and admired, and all that she seemed to have got from her lovers were reproaches and adieus.

Business languished, and she hung out a "Room to Let" card. Two large rooms on the third floor were prepared for desirable tenants.

One day came Ramonti, the violinist, and engaged the front room above.

Ramonti, with his still youthful face, his dark eyebrows, his distinguished head of gray hair and his artist's temperament—revealed in his light, gay and sympathetic manner—was a welcome tenant in the old house near Abingdon square.

Helen lived on the floor above the store. The architecture of it was singular and quaint. The hall was large and almost square. Up one side of it and then across the end of it ascended an open stairway to the floor above. This hall space she had furnished as a sitting room and office combined. There she kept her desk and wrote her business letters, and there she sat of evenings by a warm fire and a bright red light and sewed or read. Ramonti found the atmosphere so agreeable that he spent much time there, describing to Mrs. Barry the wonders of Paris, where he had studied with a particularly notorious and noisy fiddler.

Next comes lodger No. 2, a handsome, melancholy man in the early forties, with a brown, mysterious beard and strangely pleading, haunting eyes. He, too, found the society of Helen a desirable thing. With the eyes of Romeo and Othello's tongue, he charmed her with tales of distant climes and wooed her by respectful innuendo.

From the first Helen felt a marvelous and compelling thrill in the presence of this man. His voice somehow took her swiftly back to the days of her youth's romance. This feeling grew, and she gave way to it, and it led her to an instinctive belief that he had been a factor in that romance. And then with a woman's reasoning (oh, yes, they do, sometimes) she leaped over common syllogisms and theory and logic and was sure that her husband had come back to her. For she saw in his eyes love, which no woman can mistake, and a thousand tons of regret and remorse, which aroused pity, which is perilously near to love requited, which is the sine qua non in the house that Jack built.

But she made no sign. A husband who steps around the corner for twenty years and then drops in again should not expect to find his slippers laid out too conveniently near nor a match ready lighted for his cigar. There must be expiation, explanation and possibly execration. A little purgatory, and then, maybe, if he were properly humble, he might be trusted with a harp and crown. And so she made no sign that she knew or suspected.

And my friend the reporter could see nothing funny in this! Sent out on an assignment to write up a roaring, hilarious, brilliant joshing story of— But I will not knock a brother.

One evening Ramonti stopped in Helen's hall-office-reception room and told his love with the tenderness and ardor of the enraptured artist. His words were a bright flame of the divine fire that glows in the heart of a man who is a dreamer and a doer combined.

"But before you give me an answer," he went on before she could accuse him of suddenness, "I must tell you that Ramonti is the only name I have to offer you. My manager gave me that. I do not know who I am or where I came from. My first recollection is of opening my eyes in a hospital. I was a young man, and I was in the hospital for weeks. My life before that is a blank to me. They told me that I was found lying in the street with a wound on my head and was brought there in an ambulance. They thought I must have fallen and struck my head upon the stones. There was nothing to show who I was. I have never been able to remember. After I was discharged from the hospital I took up the violin. I have had success. Mrs. Barry—I do not know your name except that—I love you. The first time I saw you I realized that you were the one woman in the world for me—and"—oh, a lot of stuff like that.

Helen felt young again. First a wave of pride and a sweet little thrill of vanity went all over her, and then she looked Ramonti in the eyes, and a tremendous throb went through her heart. She hadn't expected that throb. It took her by surprise. The musician had become a big factor in her life, and she hadn't been aware of it.

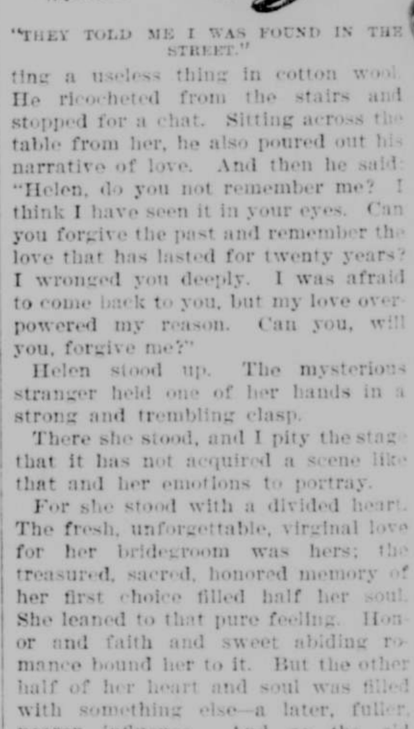
"Mr. Ramonti," she said sorrowfully (this was not on the stage, remember; it was in the old home near Abingdon square), "I'm awfully sorry, but I'm a married woman."

And then she told him the sad story of her life, as a heroine must do sooner or later, either to a theatrical manager or to a reporter.

Ramonti took her hand, bowed low and kissed it and went up to his room.

Helen sat down and looked mournfully at her hand. Well she might. Three suitors had kissed it, mounted their red roan steeds and ridden away.

In an hour entered the mysterious stranger with the haunting eyes. Helen was in the willow rocker, knitting a useless thing in cotton wool. He ricocheted from the stairs and stopped for a chat. Sitting across the table from her, he also poured out his narrative of love. And then he said: "Helen, do you not remember me? I think I have seen it in your eyes. Can you forgive the past and remember the love that has lasted for twenty years? I wronged you deeply. I was afraid to come back to you, but my love overpowered my reason. Can you, will you, forgive me?"



"THEY TOLD ME I WAS FOUND IN THE STREET."

Helen stood up. The mysterious stranger held one of her hands in a strong and trembling clasp.

There she stood, and I pity the stage that it has not acquired a scene like that and her emotions to portray.

For she stood with a divided heart. The fresh, unforgettable, virginal love for her bridegroom was hers; the treasured, sacred, honored memory of her first choice filled half her soul. She leaned to that pure feeling. Honor and faith and sweet abiding romance bound her to it. But the other half of her heart and soul was filled with something else—a later, fuller, nearer influence. And so the old fought against the new.

And while she hesitated from the room above came the soft, racking, petitionary music of a violin. The hag Music bewitches some of the noblest. The daws may peck upon one's sleeve without injury, but whoever wears his heart upon his tympanum gets it not far from the neck.

This music and the musician called her, and at her side honor and the old love held her back.

"Forgive me," he pleaded.

"Twenty years is a long time to remain away from the one you say you love," she declared, with a purgatorial touch.

"How could I tell?" he begged. "I will conceal nothing from you. That night when he left I followed him. I was mad with jealousy. On a dark street I struck him down. He did not rise. I examined him. His head had struck a stone. I did not intend to kill him. I was mad with love and jealousy. I hid near by and saw an ambulance take him away. Although you married him, Helen"—

"Who are you?" cried the woman, with wide open eyes, snatching her hand away.

"Don't you remember me, Helen—the one who has always loved you the best? I am John Delaney. If you can forgive"—

But she was gone, leaping, stumbling, hurrying, flying up the stairs toward the music and him who had forgotten, but who had known her for his in each of his two existences, and as she climbed up she sobbed, cried and sang, "Frank, Frank, Frank!"

Three mortals thus juggling with years as though they were billiard balls, and my friend the reporter couldn't see anything funny in it!

The man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

A GLASS EYE.

It Turned the Scale In a Matter of Love.

By THOMAS R. DEANE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

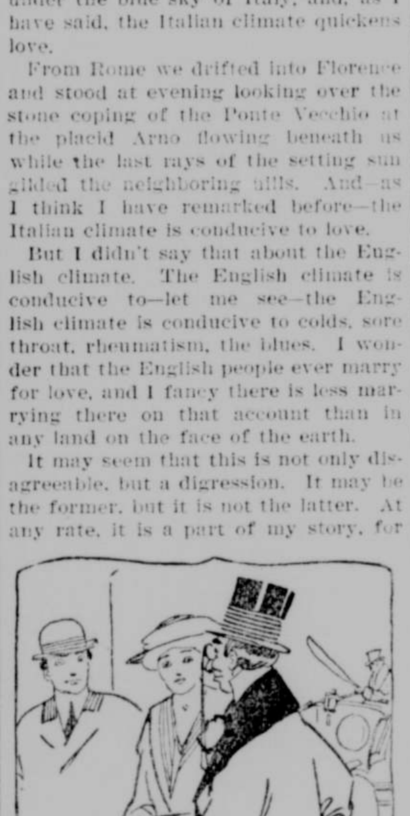
I courted Jeannette abroad. There is no better field for lovemaking than traveling about, with nothing to do but enjoy oneself, or, rather, oneselves, for as "it takes two to make a bargain," so it takes two to make love. Jeannette and I met at Sorrento, where we sat in a pavilion in the midst of an orange grove looking on the bay of Naples spread out several hundred feet below us. Spoony young men are always talking to spoony young women about fickleness, and I found a convenient illustration in the ever changing hues of the Mediterranean. Besides, there is something in the Italian climate to quicken love. It is soft and balmy, yet the skies are bright and blue.

Then in Rome we dawdled through the Forum and sat on the stone seats in the Coliseum just as youths and maidens did some eighteen centuries before, except that the Roman couples of those days were there to see gladiators kill one another or wild beasts feed on lean Christians. But we were under the blue sky of Italy, and, as I have said, the Italian climate quickens love.

From Rome we drifted into Florence and stood at evening looking over the stone coping of the Ponte Vecchio at the placid Arno flowing beneath us while the last rays of the setting sun gilded the neighboring hills. And—as I think I have remarked before—the Italian climate is conducive to love.

But I didn't say that about the English climate. The English climate is conducive to—let me see—the English climate is conducive to colds, sore throat, rheumatism, the blues. I wonder that the English people ever marry for love, and I fancy there is less marrying there on that account than in any land on the face of the earth.

It may seem that this is not only disagreeable, but a digression. It may be the former, but it is not the latter. At any rate, it is a part of my story, for Jeannette and I parted in Florence, having plighted our troth on the elevated Piazza Michelangelo overlooking the city. We were sitting beneath one of half a dozen statues of David, each being the original statue, and came together again in England.



MY GAZE WAS FASTENED ON HIS GLASS EYE.

What a change, not only in the climate, but in us—I mean in Jeannette! In Italy she had been responsive to my slightest whisper. Indeed, the slighter the whisper the better it accorded with our mellifluent surroundings. In England I, being hoarse, was obliged to speak to her with the voice of a megaphone, and she, being deafened by a cold, could scarcely hear me. Instead of leaning her head against my arm and looking up at me with a happy smile, as she had done in the Italian moonlight, speaking of poets and painters, she sat regarding me with watery eyes, saying that she wished it would stop raining.

This story goes to prove that what writers on the development of civilization say about the effect of climate on peoples is true. In Italy Jeannette and I had loved; in England the marriage question became one of practical advantage. I found that I was not as much in love as I had thought I was until Jeannette indicated that she was meditating giving me the grand bounce. This brought me to my senses.

Young Lord Crickenback, who never appeared without a very large flower in his buttonhole, a very small silk hat on his head and a monocle on his right eye, was the man who taught me that, despite my present watery surroundings, I did not wish to surrender Jeannette. Why had I not continued to keep her in Italy, or why did I not insist on the knot being tied before coming to this land, where there is no sentiment, only interest? This Lord Crickenback had nothing whatever to recommend him except that he had a title. Even with his title on the sunny shores of the Mediterranean I could have snapped my fingers at him.

Jeannette did not break with me. I think she would have done so had not the sun occasionally broken through the clouds to remind her of those happy days she had passed with me at Sorrento, at Florence and at Rome. On such days I noticed a sudden demonstration of a dormant love for me that had not entirely died within her. I wished on such sunny days that there were some places where one could go similar to the Piazza Michelangelo at Florence or the Corso in Rome. But there are no such places in London. The most enjoyable is Hyde park, but the sun doesn't shine long enough to dry the benches. And a wet bench is no place for spooning. One bright day I took her to the Tower, and we sat together in the courtyard of the old pile. I was about to whisper something tender in her ear when she shuddered.

"What is it?" I asked concernedly.

"That plate in the ground. It says that on this spot Lady Jane Grey, Catharine Howard and others were executed."

We arose and walked away.

Crickenback continued to hang about Jeannette, and I saw that with her it was a case of interest versus love. I wished that I might find some method of turning the scale in my favor. I have usually been considered to have about me something of that resource for which we Americans are distinguished, but who ever heard of a man in love—really in love, I mean—being able to think dispassionately about anything concerning the winning or the losing of the girl he loves.

I met Wackford in London. He had just come over. Wackford and I have been bosom friends since we were little kids. A man in love needs some one to talk to, and I talked to Wackford. I told him the whole story. He listened to me attentively, sympathetically.

"What you want," he said when I had finished, "is some device by which you can save the young lady from herself—and for yourself, understand?"

"That's it exactly."

"Very well. You show me this Crookedback, or whatever his name is, and I'll see what I can do for you."

The very next afternoon I drove with Wackford in Rotten row, and we saw Crickenback. You can meet anybody that belongs to the upper classes in Rotten row.

"Why, the fellow wears a glass eye!" said Wackford.

"How do you know?"

"Can't I tell the difference between a glass and a real eye? Of course I can. There—see the sun shining on it! Do you suppose he has told her about it?"

"Don't know. I never heard her speak of it."

The next time I was with Jeannette I asked her, "Did Lord Crickenback ever speak of any misfortune, any mutilation?"

"No. Why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothing; at least nothing that it's my business to tell you."

"I insist upon knowing."

I demurred for awhile, then told her what Wackford had said about his lordship's glass eye.

"I don't believe it," she said.

"You'd better ask him," I replied.

"Ask him? Do you suppose I would do that?"

Every time I saw Crickenback after that my gaze was fastened willy nilly on his glass eye. I wondered if it had the same effect on Jeannette. I asked Wackford when he was going to give me the device he had referred to, and he replied:

"Don't know. Did you tell her about his glass eye?"

I admitted that I had, and Wackford turned the subject.

Whatever was the cause, Lord Crickenback from this time seemed to be losing ground with Jeannette. As he lost I gained. Then I perked up and played indifferent. This was followed by a coldness between Jeannette and me in which she seemed saddened, and eventually came a reconciliation. I determined to strike while the iron was hot and made it a condition of my forgiveness for her defection from me to Crickenback that we should be married at once.

We were married in London, Wackford being my best man. I insisted on a wedding trip to Italy, but since it was not now the season for visiting the far south we contented ourselves with Lake Como. While out in a boat one evening, pulled by an Italian oarsman who could not understand English, I asked my wife to make a clean breast of her part of the coming of Lord Crickenback between us.

"I was not in love with him," she said, "but a title to a woman is very tempting. I thought how nice it would be to be called Lady Crickenback and to be introduced to the real English nobility."

"And why didn't you do it?" I asked.

"Because I loved you, of course."

"How did you happen to come to a decision that you would rather have be and love than a title and no love?"

"You insist in knowing?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well, it was the glass eye."

"You don't mean it!"

"Yes. For my life whenever I saw him after you told me he had a glass eye I couldn't keep from looking at it whenever he was with me. At last it grew so repulsive that I had to send him away."

When he returned to London Wackford called on us.

"By the bye, Wack," I said, "by giving me the fact of Crickenback's wearing a glass eye you fixed me up with Jeannette."

"He has two now."

"What do you mean by that? Is he stone blind?"

"No; he has left off his monocle and has taken on a pair."

I looked at Jeannette, and Jeannette looked at me; then we smiled.

"You wanted me to suggest something," said Wackford, "to break the Crickenback spell, and I gave you the glass eye, which is synonymous with eyeglass. You owe me one."

BUT FEW DAYS LEFT OF THE PIANO CONTEST

Hustlers for Instrument Must Put In Best Work From Now on.

IT IS TIME TO GET BUSY.

Final Count Will Be Held on Monday, June 17th, At 3 O'clock.

Now Listen! There is absolutely no truth in the statement that this is the closed season for hunting subscriptions to the Oakland Republican. The law (made by the Republican,) permits live active aggressive contestants to hunt subscriptions until the close of the contest and there is a bounty on them too. For every new subscription brought in a bounty of 600 votes in Republicans' Popular Voting Contest is paid. Some happy young lady is going to march away from The Republican office in just a short time wearing the smile that won't come off, because that young lady will have won the fine Obermyer & Sons piano.

There are only a few more days left of this contest. That means that the race still belongs to anybody who has just a little initative. The fact of the matter is that no one yet has such a start that it could not be easily overcome in a few days of consistent work. This is certainly the most glorious opportunity that the young ladies of this community have ever had. Every contestant now thoroughly understands the rules and methods of securing subscriptions and the majority of them have settled down in the earnest zealous work that elimates idle dreaming and means working for some definite point. The aimless hap-hazard soliciting has been dropped and a systematic campaign for votes is now in progress.

You cannot tell how many votes a candidate really has by the score that was published, for the reason that the majority of contestants are wisely voting but a small portion of their strength thus keeping their real standing covered up from their opponents. But the score indicates those who can come to the front when the proper time comes.

There is no question but what every one in and around Oakland has been solicited, or at least, has heard about this contest.

The better field for operation now lies in the country, as practically every one in the village is now a subscriber to the paper—or never will be.

The contest department wants to urge on every contestant the necessity for making the next few days count for all they are worth. The time is growing short and it is only the real hustler who will have much of a show after this issue. That's why it will pay to get in the game with all the energy you can command from this time until the end.

And remember that the bonus on clubs of seven will remain the same until the final count on Monday, June 17th, at 3 o'clock. The answer is plain. Get busy—and keep busy—from now on.

Remember all special bonus votes count on the piano and other prizes just the same.

The Republican has arranged a big bonus offer which will be good to and including the final day which is June 17, as follows:

For every 7 new subscriptions, 8,000 extra, a total of 12,200.

For every 7 renewal subscriptions 6,000 extra, a total of 9,500.

For every 7 back subscriptions 4,000 extra, a total of 6,800.

For every 40 merchant's coupons 1,000 extra, a total of 2,000.

EXTRA SPECIAL.

For every three 5-year subscriptions 25,000 bonus, making a total of 40,000.

For every two 20-year subscriptions 75,000 extra, making a total of 135,000.

The three 5-year subscriptions may be for either one or two parties.

The two 20-year subscriptions may be for either one or two parties.

The following shows the official standing of contestants after the first and second counts:

HIGH SCHOOL ORATION.

Delivered by Walter Wyatt Dawson of the Oakland School.

The value of money expanded for the social, economic and for the general well being of any people is inestimable. Without money it would be an extreme inconvenience to be obliged to barter one commodity for another.

What is money? We may says that money is the profit accruing from labor; and, money is that which passes freely from hand to hand throughout the community in the final discharge of debts and full payment for commodities, being accepted equally without reference to the character or credit of the person who receives it to consume it or enjoy it or apply it to any other than in turn to tender it to others in discharging debts or payments for commodities.

The value of money rightly used for the social and moral upbuilding of a nation cannot be measured. Money thus wisely used becomes one of the most important means by which to make our nation more progressive. The money that is expended for the public schools, colleges and religious institutions has proved to be one of best investments to establish a more profitable and progressive nation. It is the unanimous opinion of thoughtful persons that the various social, political and religious activities of society are directly and indirectly promoted and elevated by the work and influence of the schools of our country. Hence more and better equipped school buildings as well as more and better prepared, efficient and conscientious instructors are vitally essential. And, why should we not be glad and thankful for the privileges we have to expend our money for such noble and useful purposes.

Then, the value of money for agricultural purposes is very great too. We are spending large sums of money yearly for the improvement of the soil, for irrigation and for public roads and highways. The expenditure of money for these purposes is very valuable to the progress of the nation, because we are depending upon the farms for our livelihood and it would be an impossibility to do without them. We are paying out large sums of money yearly for the destruction of the insects that destroy millions of dollars worth of products and in this way we are helping to make farming more scientific and are receiving a greater return for the money that is expended towards the improvement of agriculture.

Thus, in these few ways mentioned we find that money is valuable towards the upbuilding of our nation; but, on the other hand we are paying out money for things that tend to retard the progress and lessen the usefulness of our nation. Should we not take measures to prohibit these things that are not for the good of the nation, but for its destruction?

The Creator has endowed the individuals of our civilization with ability, energy and strength. The conservation of human resources contemplates the discovery, development and economic use of these gifts. Human resources are being wasted in many ways. Some of the more important wastes are due to war and militarism; inadequate educations; improper occupation and ignorance of the care of public health and sanitation.

The military establishments of the world have destroyed, in the past, 15,000,000,000 lives and have expended over forty billion dollars. Today the civilized nations are supporting over five million men in active military service. Of these the United States has about 150,000 including both army and navy.

The wasted labor power of these 150,000 men, the loss of the directive ability spent in their supervision, and imminence of shortened lives through conflict are not the full measure of the cost of this folly.

The food, clothing, munitions of war and pensions for war purposes are costing the United States $390,000,000 yearly.

There is also another way in which money is spent, that is intemperance, one the great curses of the world.

Among the most important phrases of the liquor problem is that of the relation of the saloon to our system of public schools. Our schools should be such as to bring forth in the product of the boy or girl the foundation elements of a high type of citizenship. This means such a training as shall give both taste and capacity for the purest forms of the enjoyment of what the world has to offer. It means, of course, such a training as shall give discernment and ability to exercise to the greatest advantage the franchise. It means finally such a training as shall give power to do something and to do it well. In order that the best results may be accomplished, every effort is made to surround the pupils with the best influences and to give them the best facilities possible, for pursuing their studies and acquiring aptitude in the particular lines of training followed.

This direful curse retards the production of wealth. It decreases producting capacity and throws upon the public the burden of poverty, inefficiency, vice and its punishment.

The liquor traffic makes the plea of being a great manufacturing and business enterprise and thus a benefactor to the country, while in reality it is the arch-enemy of economic, social and moral interests. It does not promote but hinders civic welfare. When a laborer spends his money for drink he receives no adequate returns. Therefore, it robs of their hard-earned wages the very ones upon whom the welfare of the nation rests—the common people.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, let me say that since the value of money expended for the social, moral and economic well being of a nation is exceedingly great, let us not use it for that which tends to weaken, corrupt and finally destroy society and nation. Let us have honest cultured and courageous men at the head of our social, educational, economic and religous institutions. May—

God give us men. The time demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and willing hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possesses opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and in private thinging!
For while the rabble and their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds
Mingle in selfish strife; lo! Freedom weeps!
Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps!

Completion of New B. & O. Tunnel at Tunnelton.

With the running of the Chicago New York express No. 8, through the new double track Kingwood tunnel at Tunnelton, W. Va., Monday morning, one of the most extensive improvements undertaken on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad since Daniel Willard became president of the road was completed. The new tunnel with the single track tunnel in operation previously practically marks the completion of a system of three tracks on both the east bound and west bound grades over the two ridges of the Allegheny Mountains between Cumberland, Md., and Grafton, W. Va. The new tunnel is 4211 feet long, thirty-one feet wide, by twenty-four and a half feet high and cost about a million and a half dollars. The side walls are lined with concrete and the arch or roof is lined with vitrified brick.

The tunnel is thoroughly ventilated in order to provide for the comforts of travel. Work of excavating the approaches of the tunnel was started on September 26th, 1910, and its completion today marks one of the most expeditious engineering feats of American railroading.

Maryland Farming.

With 670,000 acres in corn, yielding 24½ million bushels, worth nearly fifteen and a half million dollars, Maryland did well last year as a corn producer. The increase was 2 million bushels over 1910.

There were 605,000 acres in wheat, worth over nine million dollars—a slight decrease below 1910.

Nearly 407,000 bushels of rye was Maryland's production from the 28,000 acres utilized for that staple last year. The value of the rye crop approximated $349,000.

Among the 16 States producing buckwheat Maryland ranks sixth, last year 12,000 acres were sown, which produced over 240,000 bushels of a value of $161,000, as against 7,000 less in 1910.

Maryland farmers had 39,000 acres in potatoes in 1911, the yield amounted to 1,755,000 bushels, of a value of $1,597,000. The value of the crop of last year per acre was not as high as in 1910, but the acreage was larger by over 2,700.

Over 199,000 tons of hay worth $4,458,000 was produced from 276,000 acres last year the value per ton being below 1910, although the entire product was estimated to be worth $134,000 more because of the increase in acreage.

The figures for cattle are known up to May 1, 1912. The State now has over 168,000 milch cows, valued at $6,216,000, a slight decrease in both value and number as compared with 1911. Of other cattle the State has 119,000 head valued at $2,547,000, which are about the figure for last year.

One of the most interesting statements given out which the foregoing reports by the Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. James Wilson, is that concerning Maryland as a wool producing State. "There are now," he says, "238,000 head of sheep in the state, as compared to 227,000 head last year. The value of the wool was estimated at $1,012,000 on May 1."

It is quite certain that Allegany and Garrett counties do not play a very large part in this industry—a section, too, particularly well adapted to it, and where hundreds of rich grass-growing acres are continually idle that might be made most highly profitable.

Other information follows:

A fraction over 69 per cent. of the native white farmers of Maryland own their farm properties. Of the foreign-born farmers 80.9 per cent. own their property.

"Of the eight North Atlantic States Maryland ranks fourth in this respect. About 62 per cent. of negro farmers own their property. There are in Maryland 40,669 farms operated by native white farmers, only 1,882 farms being operated by foreign born farmers. Negroes cultivate 6,372 farms."

Cyrus Stark, of McHenry, was in this neighborhood purchasing cows a day or two this week.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The present indications, judging by the inquiries for cottages and boarding, are encouraging for a good season.

Mrs. A. R. Spencer, lessee of the Chautauque hotel, is here and will be ready to entertain guests in a few days.

The lessee of the Maryland Inn arrived Tuesday with a large force of help and will at once put that popular house in order.

Mrs. Fannie L. Sperry, of Harpers Ferry, is here visiting her daughter, Miss Louise, and her many old friends. She will return to her home next week.

Mrs. P. B. Gough, who had been very ill, is now about well.

Mrs. Virginia Pierce who has been here for several weeks returned to her home in Parkersburg, W. Va., Monday.

Many of our people attended the great sale of the Bradley farm Tuesday.

Mr. Carl Willett will soon leave our postoffice to take a like position in Oakland. Carl is very popular here and doubtless will be in Oakland.

Three of our veterans, Messrs. T. H. Cuppett, James Anderson and Jas. A. Hayden, attended Memorial service in the Oakland M. E. church last Sunday morning, and were pleased with Dr. A. B. Riker's most able sermon and the excellent music furnished by the choir on that occasion.

Mrs. L. B. C. List, accompanied by a large force of servants, arrived Tuesday and will at once put the Loch Lynn Hotel in order for the season.

A number of our boarding houses are already filling up with boarders, much sooner than usual.

The residences of Dr. Logan Carr and Mr. L. P. Carr have been connected by telephone.

Mrs. McQuay was here Tuesday having her cottage and grounds put in order and will be here for the season in a short time.

Rev. Dr. Howard, of Fairmont, has leased the Hopkins cottage and will be here with his family about July 1st.

Messrs. H. E. Felty and G. H. Pritchard shipped a car load of scrap iron from this station yesterday.

The electric light plant will be started up next Saturday.

The Fouch cottage has been rented for the summer to a Fairmont family.

Mr. P. T. Garthright is making quite a handsome residence out of the Bowman store room.

Mr. Adam Long has moved into the Hocking building.

Dr. Samuel Lee, of Waycross, Ga., is visiting his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Lee.

Dr. Hugh Carr, of Fairmont, motored to the Park Sunday, returning Tuesday.

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendments Section 1 of Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1908, entitled "an Act for the further protection of pheasants, partridges or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbit in Garrett County."

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that Section 1 of Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1908, entitled "an Act for the further protection of pheasants, patridges or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbits in Garrett County," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that no person, corporation or company shall at any time kill or expose for sale, transport, have in possession, any pheasant, partridge or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbit, after the same has been killed, for any purpose, except for consumption of food within the State of Maryland; nor kill, expose for sale or have in possession any of the above named game, with the intention of sending or transporting or having the same sent or transported beyond the limits of said State; provided, that nothing herein shall prevent non-residents who have taken out license to hunt in said county from taking with them out of said county any of the above-named game which they may have killed in said county.

2. And be it enacted, that any person who shall have any of the aforementioned birds or game in their possession in Garrett County, except during the months in which the killing or catching of the same is allowed by law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars for each bird or game animal that they may have in their possession.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

CHAPTER 597

AN ACT to provide employment at hard labor for certain classes of prisoners who may be confined in the County Jail of Garrett County, under sentence imposed by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, or any of the Justices of the Peace for said county having criminal jurisdiction.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the following additional sections be added to Article [illegible] of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," [illegible] to be a part of the local law for Garrett County.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That in addition to any sentence of imprisonment which may be imposed upon any person convicted of [illegible] disorderly conduct, disturbing the public peace, vagrancy or petit larceny, where the punishment described by law shall not exceed one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary or house of correction, by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, or any Justice of the peace for Garrett County having criminal jurisdiction, said court or justice may, in the discretion of said court or justice also in said sentence direct that any prisoner over sixteen years of age who may be convicted of any of the offences enumerated as above, shall be subject to perform hard labor for and during the period of his imprisonment, on the public roads of Garrett County, or on the public streets of any incorporated town, the town authorities of such town so employing such convict shall be charged with the expense which may attend such employment.

Section 3. And be it enacted, that the hard labor provided for in the preceding section shall be performed, if within the corporate limits of any incorporate town, under the supervision and direction of the town commissioners and bailiff of such town, and if on the public roads of Garrett County, then under the supervision and direction of the County commissioners or the road supervisor of any district who may be authorized by the County Commissioners to work the same; and the sheriff of Garrett County, upon the demand of any bailiff, supervisor or other persons duly authorized to make such demand, is hereby authorized and required to deliver such prisoner to the party so making the demand and entitled to receive the same, whenever and at such times as he may be legally required; and the labor to be performed by such convict may include every service necessary for the purpose of draining, grading, paving or repairing such public streets or highways of Garrett County, within or without the limits of any incorporated town therein.

Section 4. And be it enacted, that the officer or other person having such prisoner in charge, shall have power and authority to compel such labor, and shall be responsible for the safe keep and return to prison of such convict to the custody of the sheriff at the end of each day's labor, which day's labor shall be within the discretion of the officer or other person so supervising at the time, but shall not exceed ten hours work or labor for any day he may be employed; and any prisoner so convicted and sentenced, who shall refuse to perform the labor required of him, shall incur the penalty of two days additional imprisonment for every day he may so refuse, and this provision shall be included in the sentence of the court or justice by whom the same may be rendered; but no prisoner shall be compelled to perform such labor whose health is not in a condition to allow the same, and the certificate of the physician to the jail or other physician in said county shall be sufficient to excuse such labor.

Section 5. And be it enacted, that if any officer or other person having such prisoner in charge for the performance of such work or labor, connive at or, by his wilful neglect, permit the escape of any such prisoner, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction of such offence in the Circuit Court for Garrett County be fined not less than twenty or more than fifty dollars, or be confined in the county jail of the county, and be subject to the same penalty of hard labor for a period equal to the unexpired term of the prisoner so escaping, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Section 6. And be it enacted, that this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 11, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

Secretary of the Senate.

CHAPTER 481

AN ACT to divide Election District Number Eight of Garrett County into two precincts.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that Election District Number Eight of Garrett County be and the same is hereby divided into two voting precincts, to be known, respectively, as the "first" and "second" election precincts of the Eighth Election District of said Garrett County. The division line between the said precincts shall be as follows: The first precinct shall be the territory within the following outlines, to wit: All that part of said Election District Number Eight as now laid out and established, East of the summit of Backbone Mountain and East of the top of the Mountain to the line of Election District Number Seven.

The second precinct shall be the territory of said district, as now laid out and established, on the West side of said summit of Back Bone Mountain and on the West side of the Mountain to the line of Election District Number Seven.

The voting or polling place for the said first precinct shall be at the Hoye Place, the former polling place for said district, and voting or polling place for the said second precinct shall be at the Red House.

Section 2. For the purpose of registration the supervisors of election for said county shall provide the register of voters for said district, before the time of registration of voters, under the provisions of Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws, with two duplicate registry books, for the registration of the voters of said respective precincts; and the said register of the voters shall, at his session of 1912, make full registry of the voters of said respective precincts from the registration book of said district, allotting such voters to the precinct in which they respectively reside, by transcribing the names of such voters from the present registry of voters for said district, or in case of a new registration under any amendment of said Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws, then said register of voters shall register anew in said respective registries the names of all qualified voters in said respective precincts, as shall apply to him and prove the proper qualifications for registry. In case the said register shall have to make a transcript (instead of a new registration) he shall be allowed a sum not exceeding forty dollars, to be paid by the County Commissioners of said county, for such transcript.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

JOHN R. SULLIVAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

CHAPTER 479

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendments Section 41 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub-title "County Commissioners," and to add a new section thereto, to be known as Section 41A.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That Section 41 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County, sub-title "County Commissioners," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments, and a new section added to be known as Section 41A, so as to read as follows:

Section 41. Whenever it shall become necessary to sell any land in Garrett County, because of the non-payment of the State and County taxes due thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the County Commissioners to purchase said lands, or such part thereof as may be necessary to the amount of said taxes, and if the taxpayer, in whose name said land was assessed and sold, shall not within two years from the day of said sale pay and discharge said taxes, interest and costs, the title to said land shall become absolute in said County Commissioners, as against said delinquent taxpayer, and the County Commissioners are authorized to sell said land, at either public or private sale, and to convey the same to the purchaser thereof after reporting said sale and after the ratification thereof by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, and a good title shall be vested in the purchaser of said land, as against said delinquent taxpayer.

Section 41A. That the title to all lands in Garrett County heretofore sold by the County Treasurer to the County Commissioners under the provisions of Section 41 of this Article shall become absolute in the County Commissioners, as against the taxpayer in whose name said land was assessed and sold, after the first day of January, 1913, provided, the County Commissioners shall give one month's notice by publication in some newspaper published in Garrett County, prior to the first day of October, 1912, warning such delinquent taxpayers that un- [illegible] purchaser or purchasers of said land, as against said delinquent taxpayer or tax-payers.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session 1912.

CHAPTER 445

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendment Sections Three and Seven of Article One of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Allegany County" and Article 12, "Garrett County" sub-title "Miners and Operators Co-operative Relief Fund," as the same was enacted by Chapter 153 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed in the year 1910.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that sections Three and Seven of Article One of the Code of Public Laws of Maryland, title "Allegany County" and Article Twelve, title "Garrett County" sub-title "Miners and Operators Co-operative Relief Fund" as the same was enacted by Chapter 153 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland passed in the year 1910 be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

Section 3. There is hereby created for Allegany and Garrett Counties respectively, a fund for the relief and sustenance of employees and their dependents, when such employees have sustained injuries or disability in the discharge of their duty, and for the relief and sustenance of the dependents of such employees when death has resulted from such injuries, said fund to be made up of the proceeds of the tax hereinafter levied and the increments from the investment thereof, as well as such donations and legacies as may be made thereto.

In order to create and maintain said fund a tax is hereby levied and imposed upon each operator and employee as follows:

Upon each employee in Allegany County a tax of twenty-seven cents and upon each employee in Garrett County a tax of thirty-eight cents for each month or fraction of a month that he is employed by any operator, and upon each operator in Allegany County a tax of twenty-seven cents and in Garrett County a tax of thirty-eight cents for each month or fraction of a month in respect of each employee paying the tax aforesaid and employed by said operator in Allegany and Garrett Counties.

Such tax shall be due and payable monthly to the Treasurer of Allegany and Garrett Counties, respectively, in which the mine is operated, and payable on or before the twenty-fifth day of the month next succeeding the month for which such tax is payable, in order to secure the effectual payments of such tax each operator is authorized and required to deduct and retain from the wages of each employee employed by him, on his pay-rolls in Allegany County the sum of twenty-seven cents and in Garrett County the sum of thirty-eight cents per month or fraction of a month, if said employee be employed for less than a month, and on or before the fifteenth day of the month next succeeding the month for which such deduction is made shall make a report of the number of employees so employed under oath to the Treasurer of Allegany or Garrett County where the particular mine is located, and on or before the twenty-fifth day of said succeeding month shall pay over unto the Treasurer of Allegany or Garrett County, as the case may be, the total amount so deducted and retained from the wages of the employees for the proceeding month, together with a like amount to be paid by the operator. It shall be the duty of the County Commissioners of Allegany and Garrett Counties, respectively, to enforce, by appropriate remedies, the collection and payment of the tax hereby levied; and to all taxes in default there shall be added and collected interest at the rate of six per centum per annum from the date when due.

Section 7. When the assessments imposed and collected by the Treasurer of Allegany County shall amount to thirty-five thousand dollars surplus and in Garrett County shall amount to fifteen thousand dollars surplus, over and above the pending and accrued claims on the same under this act, such Treasurer shall report the fact to the County Commissioners of their respective county, whereupon the said Board of County Commissions are hereby empowered and directed to remit temporarily the taxes hereby imposed from month to month as long as (and no longer) such surplus shall exceed thirty-five thousand dollars in Allegany County and fifteen thousand dollars in Garrett County, and when it shall be reduced to sums or under, mentioned above, the tax shall become again payable as provided by this Act.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer of his respective county to invest, under the orders of the County Commissioners, any surplus above the sum of two thousand dollars in his hands, in such public bonds as said Commissioners may direct and to credit such fund with the interest derived therefrom; and upon the retirement from office or any disqualification to act of such Treasurer the entire fund, including such bonds and the books and papers pertaining to such funds, shall be delivered by such Treasurer to his successor in office, who shall receipt for the same.

Section 2. Be it enacted, That all rights and liabilities incurred under the sections hereby repealed and re-enacted shall not be impaired or effected, but shall continue and remain in full force and effect and any suit begun or hereinafter to be brought upon such rights or liabilities shall not be abated by reason of this enactment.

Section 3. Be it enacted that this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 5, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session, 1912.

AN ACT to repeal Section Thirty-two of Article Twelve of the Code of Public Local Laws, title "Garrett County" sub-title "County Commissioners" as re-enacted with amendments by the acts of the General Assembly of 1892, Chapter 595, and to re-enact the same with amendments.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland that section Thirty-two of Article Twelve of the Code of Public Local Laws, title "Garrett County" sub-title "County Commissioners" as re-enacted with amendments by the General Assembly of 1892, Chapter 595, is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments so as to read as follows:

32. They shall meet on the first Monday of every month in each year, except during the months of March, April and September when they shall meet as follows:

They shall meet on the third Monday in March, the second Monday in April and the second Monday in September, and may call special meetings whenever they think proper.

Section 2. And be it enacted, that this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 1, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

ALBERT J. ALMONEY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

CHAPTER 85

AN ACT to pay to the School Commissioners of [illegible] the State School tax.

Whereas, In view of the pressure of the present apportionment, [illegible] Garrett County, of the State school tax, and the inability, without larger increase of county taxation, to keep her schools open for seven and one-half months, and in view of the fact that mountain ridges so divide the population of Garrett County, the largest county in the State, as to make essential school facilities for all of the children more expensive than in other central parts of the State; and

Whereas, It has been unanimously recommended by the State Board of Education that special aid be given from the State School Fund to the Board of Education of Garrett County; therefore

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Comptroller of the Treasury be and is hereby authorized to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer in favor of Garrett County School Board for the sum of four thousand dollars per annum for two years out of the proceeds of the State school tax, [illegible]

Section 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session, 1912.

DECORATION DAY IN OAKLAND

Decoration Day in Oakland was fittingly observed last Thursday in Oakland when the Old soldiers of the Union with one ex-Confederate, were taken to the cemetery in automobiles after a parade through the streets escorted by the Knights of Pythias lodge, the Red Men, the Mountain City Band and a number of boys and girls bedecked with the national colors and carrying garland of flowers, where they decorated the graves of their deceased comrades, and carried out the ritualistic program of the G. A. R.

Dr. A. B. Riker, of the M. E. church, was the orator of the day. His remarks were extemporaneous, but the effort of the speaker was a masterly one.

In the afternoon the new Knights of Pythias building was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies, which were conducted in the Maryland Theatre, and in which a number of the officers of the Grand Lodge of Maryland joined. Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, Jr., of Garret Lodge, made the address of welcome to the visiting members. Addressess were also made by Grand Chancellor John F. Thomas, of Baltimore; Grand Vice Chancellor B. Frank Shaffer, of Cumberland; and by Grand Keeper of Records and Seals, James M. Hendrix, of Baltimore. The response was by Mr. Stuart F. Hamill, of Oakland. Mr. A. Totten Matthews gave a history of the local lodge.

The occasion was a most enjoyable one and will long be remembered by the members of the organization in Oakland.

A Card.

My time having been entirely engrossed for the past two summers upon the State Boundary Survey, I take this means of announcing that I am ready to take up any civil engineering job that may be offered in the county, or I will make land surveys if the work is of considerable extent.

GOVERNOR GOLDSBOROUGH SAW IMMENSE PROGRESS

Insight Into State's Resources and Advance Gained During His Journey Through the Heart of Maryland

"I was truly amazed, as well as gratified, to see the many evidences of progress in Western Maryland," said Governor Goldsborough at Annapolis as he reviewed his trip in automobiles through the heart of the state on an inspection of roads already improved and those which ought to be improved.

"From Oakland, where our journey began," continued the Governor, "to Thurmont, Frederick county, where we stepped from automobiles into a Western Maryland train, and thence to Baltimore, every industry was awake and alive. While I have visited every section of Western Maryland and severa sections several times, this was my first journey devoted as much as the limited time would permit to a study of the resources of the state and to existing conditions. As much as I learned, my appetite to learn more was sharpened, and as soon as I can spare time I shall go to Western Maryland again and learn more, for there is much yet to be learned. I stand ready to do all within my power to keep the wheels of progress moving, and if possible, to make them go faster.

"Of course, Western Maryland's chief industry, in addition to coal mining in Allegany county, is agriculture. The green fields, the neat farmhouses, the substantial barns, the well-tended fences, the fat cattle, the well-groomed horses, aside from the well-dressed farmers, their wives and children, all plainly and eloquently told the story of farm prosperity. I take it that our agricultural industry has been aided beyond computation by the building of good roads. I observed that farms on these roads, which have been built for two or three years, have a new appearance. That is, they look as if they had taken on new leases on life. They contrasted with farms on unimproved roads. The latter will respond to the touch as soon as the roads are improved.

"If any further evidence of the benefits resulting from good roads were needed, it is only necessary to point to the increase in real estate values. I was informed that these have doubled in many instances in two years. When I recall the rough roads over which we traveled, the pressing need of the repair of these roads, and of the substantial benefits to follow their improvement, I cannot but help expressing deep regret that the legislature did not provide a larger proportion in order that this work might be pushed and that the people may more quickly derive the advantage. Still, with the practice of economy, with the elimination of the expensive policies of the former commission and with the introduction of new methods, we must strive for more substantial roads and for more mileage rather than for beautiful roads that are not, perhaps, more enduring. We hope by these means to be able to solve, in greater part at least, the problems which immediately confront us, trusting that by a larger stock issue and by an increase in the state's financial resources by an improved system of taxation and by finding new sources of revenues, the whole state may be made the beneficiary of good roads."

During his journey of two days the Governor was informed of specific cases of progress which best told the story of general progress in the Western counties.

At Oakland, where he and the Road Commissioners began their journey, new banks and new industries were pointed out as marking the progress of the country.

"Give us a continuous good road from Oakland to Baltimore and Washington," said Mr. N. U. Bond, of Oakland, "and the number of our summer visitors will be trebled. If we had good roads all the way to Baltimore and Washington people of those cities could come to Oakland in one day in their automobiles. The fact must not be overlooked that this is an age of automobiles. They are here to stay and will increase in general use. Tourists would come through the prettiest country on which the sun shines. There is a variety of scenery, a succession of mountains and valleys. I am thoroughly convinced that the roads ought to be improved at once, that one link should not be worn out before another is started. I believe that all the people should have the same privileges as far as possible, and that there should be no discrimation."

Mr. Bond is one of the most successful business men of Garrett county. Thousands of acres of land have been denuded of the timber by his ax, but he has blazed the way for productive farms, profitable grazing lands and orchards. He has blazed the way on Savage River for what promises to be the greatest artillery practice field in the world. The government is negotiating for 12,000 acres of the land on the river, land which is a mixture of mountains, hills, valleys and dells. From the mountain tops there are ranges as long as 10 miles for artillary practice. There are shorter ranges—in fact, ranges of any distance desired. Army officers who have inspected the site have pronounced it ideal.

From Oakland to Accident Governor Goldsborough and party traveled through a rich agricultural country. Nine of the twenty or more miles of road between the two points have been improved by the state. Other miles are under contract for improvement. The Governor's admiration for the beautiful scenery and the thrifty farms was unbounded. He was told that ten years ago the county did not produce sufficient hay to meet the demands. Now thousands upon thousands of tons of the product are shipped annually from the county. He was told that on the mountain sides, now stripped of their timber, a nutritious grass is growing, and that herds of cattle and sheep are being raised.

At Accident the Governor and his companions witnessed one of the principal causes by which the great development of Garrett county has been made possible. These causes were the Percheron and Holland stallions owned by Senator Speicher, who piloted the party through Garrett county in his automobile. Those magnificent specimens of horseflesh told of the production of a race of draft animals capable of filling the task required on the steep hills of the county. On every farm for miles along the road the Governor saw horses of the same strain. Senator Speicher has been the pioneer in his section in introducing horses that fit the country. His Percherons and Hollands are imported direct.

From Accident to Keysers Ridge, where the road from Oakland merges into the old National road the party traveled along a plateau, with beautiful valleys stretching for miles northwest and southwest, all dotted with farms like a crazy quilt.

The Youghiogheny River, whose waters rush in mad fury on their decent to the Mongahela, thence into the Ohio, and thence into the Mississippi River, was pointed out to Governor Goldsborough. He was reminded that these waters are soon to be damned at two points near Friendsville, and electric plants are to be established at an expenditure of $4,000,000. The Governor only a few weeke ago signed the bill by which the proposed improvements are made possible.

When the Governor and the Road Commissioners turn into the old National Turnpike they heaved a sigh of relief. They hoped and they believed that they had arrived at the heaven of smooth roads, for were they not on a turnpike? Their hope was shortlived. Long, long ago the turnpike was abandoned by the federal goverment. The state had no title to its bed. The county did only desultory repair work. The waters rushed down those steep hills carrying earth and light gravel, laying bare the rough stone foundation over which the automobiles panted and bumped. The Governor and commissioners then and there promised themselves and each other that there should be drains, that those loose stones should be assembled in the middle of the road, and that over them there should be a smooth surface. There were exclamations of admiration of the huge stone bridges built by the federal goverment and under the supervision of army engineers a century ago, bridges that are truly models of the engineer's skill and endowed with life as long as that of those bridges built by the Romans 2,000 years ago. Maryland will have to build no bridges along the old national road or along many roads in Washington county, which leads all counties in the durability of its stone bridges. A most valuable asset to the state are those old stone bridges.

The Governor was no stranger in Frostburg. The warm welcome by its citizens, irrespective of politics, touched him deeply. He was invited unanimously to attend the town's centennial celebration in the form of an Old Home Week from August 25 to 31. The Governor promised to accept the generous invitation if possible for him to do so, and he added, he would make it possible.

In Cumberland, as well as in Frostburg, Hagerstown, Middletown, Frederick, Thurmont and in other towns visited by him, the Governor was struck with the spirit of progress of city and town improvement. He saw a people bent on improving their surroundings, on improving their streets, their sanitary arrangements, their water supply. In fact he was deeply impressed with the spirit of civic uplift and advance. He was impressed with the comfort, contentment, and happiness of the people wherever he went. He saw the results of the work of co-operation, that is, of boards of trade and of similar bodies. He saw new homes, not built in haphazard way, in a manner to find use for odd ends of lumber and stone, but according to the best architects' plans. On the outskirts of Cumberland he saw the beginning of a new water supply for the city to cost $350,000. He saw the plenteous use of paint on buildings. He saw the liberal application of whitewash to fences and outbuildings. He saw tidy women plying the paint and whitewash brushes.

In the hills at whose base the old National pike wended its way along lines surveyed by army engineers, who blazed the way to the Western prairies, the Governor was told there were inexhaustible deposits of cement stone and of brick clay. Mr. Andrew Ramsay, one of the Road Commisioners, and who is a successful brick manufacturer at Mount Savage, told him of the wealth that lies in the now scarred hills. Mr. Ramsay is contemplating the erection of a million-dollar finishing plant near New York. Maryland clay will be extensively used.

Over the mountains (local residents call them hills), which rise like sentinels between Cumberland and Hancock, the automobiles safely carried their passengers. But how they burned gasoline! How they had to be turned and twisted in rounding curves! How the brakes were strained as the huge machines descended the slopes! How they puffed and labored as they climbed mountain sides! How teams of horses and mules ever pulled heavy wagons over those mountains is a mystery. But then the old National pike was kept in decent repair. It was not the debris of loose rocks it now is. The Governor found compensation for the ever recurring bumpety-bumps. The wildly scampering, unbridled and non-diverted rain, in its unchecked rush down the precipitous road, had not carried those loose stones with it. They are there, waiting patiently to be restored to the roadbed, to be crushed into earth by the steam roller, to be hidden under a smooth top surface.

When the Governor and his companions descended from the last of the mountain ranges before Hancock hove in sight their eyes swept over the most beautiful apple orchards in the Atlantic states. Fanlike from the mountain side were these orchards spread out, all in full foliage. The weary travelers took a flight in time and in imagination gazed upon those orchards in the autumn when laden with the luscious fruit. This apple industry, while not a new one in Washington county, is in a new stage of development and progress. The apple is succeeding the peach, whose bud is too susceptible to frosts to yield a profitable crop each successive year. The orchards below the "frost line" in the county successfully withstood the 30-degree-below-zero weather of last winther. An abundant crop is in sight. It will also be a profitable crop despite the expense incidental to the spraying of orchards. In the modern development of the apple industry orchardists are studying varieties. They are striving to find the variety that will best endure the severe winters and that will at the same time produce the "best sellers." Within a radius of 10 miles of Hancock are 200,000 apple trees. In the modern development of orchards three Marylanders have been conspicuously at the front, Mr. E. P. Cohill, of Hancock, and the Messrs. Harrison of Berlin, Worcester county.

From Hancock to Hagerstown, a distance of 26 miles, and over a road that was hilly and full of hillocks for over half the distance, the Governor saw the supreme and successful test of Maryland-made automobiles—half a dozen of them. They were the Crawford machines, made in Hagerstown by the company of which Mr. M. P. Moller, who accompanied the party, is president. In Hagerstown the Governor saw the factory where 200 machines are turned out annually, and the output cannot meet the demand. Hagerstown unlike some other cities in Maryland, appreciates a home product. One-half of the automobiles in use in Hagerstown were manufactured by the Crawford Company. In addition to managing the the automobile plant, Mr. Moller has also built a hotel, which is the pride of Hagerstown, the Dagmar.

The Governor returned to Annapolis a far wiser man, he said, more deeply impressed with the growth and progress of Western Maryland and equally impressed with its possibilities for the future.

LITTLE MERRY CHRISTMAS

How a Waif's Greeting Saved Black Carston's Life

By GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Merry Christmas!"

"Huh! What's that?"

The gruff voice took some of the enthusiasm out of the childish treble, and it faltered somewhat weakly in repetition:

"Merry Christmas, sir!"

The big bearded man stared at the diminutive speaker and for an instant the hard drawn lines on the heavy face threatened to relax, but a moment later a spasm as of pain shot across it, and the voice grumbled:

"There isn't any merry Christmas—not in this world! Whoever taught you such an idea? Huh! Merry Christmas! I haven't seen one for forty years, and"—

The little white, drawn face had an intense appeal to it, but it fell upon a hard, stony nature. The forty years of hard life had dried up the well-springs of sympathy, and the gruff miner stumbled away, leaving the boy a mute witness to one of the tragedies of life.

A few minutes later the child turned and walked in the opposite direction. There were no tears in the wondering eyes, but the mute face had the hunted sorrow of a wounded animal. Twice the little legs halted as if too weak to carry the slight body, and once the boy dropped on a fallen log and stared ahead of him.

It was unlike any Christmas the child had ever before experienced. Christmas had always been ushered in by snow, sleet, rain or cold north winds, but in this strange new land the flowers were in bloom in the dead of winter, and northern birds warbled and cooed from nearly every leafy bower. It was hard to realize that in the faraway northern city the land was wrapped in the icy embrace of the frost king. A little pang of disappointment crept into his heart, and unconsciously he sighed for the old familiar scenes.

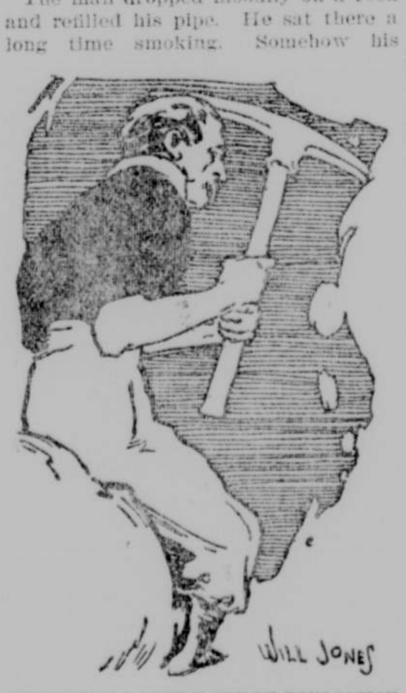
"Black" Carston stumbled down the slope of the hillside after leaving the boy, a growing anger and rage disturbing his mind. He was in no mood that morning to have the festive season of the year recalled to him. Only the night before the sluice which he had constructed had been washed away by a mountain torrent and filled with loosened stones and huge bowlders. It was only one of a long series of accidents which had followed his unlucky ventures, and at first he had accepted it philosophically.

But the piping voice of the child had made his ill luck more acute. "Merry Christmas!" He muttered the words under his breath and kicked viciously at the loose stones. When he came to the wrecked sluice he glared at it savagely and finally sneered:

"Well, what's the odds? There's no gold here anyway—not a cent's worth—and I've only got the disappointment a little earlier than I expected. I'll pull out tonight and make another try over at Copper creek."

Then, with a grin: "And that youngster wished me a merry Christmas! Huh, what a foolish kid he is!"

The man dropped moodily on a rock and refilled his pipe. He sat there a long time smoking. Somehow his thoughts drifted away from the scarred mountainside, and he forgot the work ahead of him. His disorganized camp lay around unheeded. If any emotion stirred within him it was manifested only by quicker puffs from his black pipe.



THERE WAS A LITTLE CRY OF EXULTATION.

It was Christmas day—Christmas in the great mining region where "Black" Carston had worked and toiled for years without appreciable result. The calendar had ceased to hold any meaning for him, and Christmas was an unknown holiday to him. He didn't know, and he didn't care, whether it was Christmas or Memorial day. One day was like all others to him.

But the merry greeting of the stray child from the east had impressed it upon his mind that others in the great world of work and trouble still held to the observances of holidays. He knew little of the boy's history—just a few snatches of rumor that had reached him. A poor little derelict of a great city, crushed and worn out prematurely by disease and environments, the child had been rescued by some charitable society and sent west to find new health and strength in the more congenial climate.

Why had the boy selected this morning to greet him with words that seemed to drive the iron deeper into his soul? "Merry Christmas! Huh! There was no merry Christmas in this world—not for such outcasts!"

For an hour the man was absorbed in strangely perplexing thoughts. Then he rose slowly and picked up his few belongings. He threw them into a pile and kicked them viciously as if they had been responsible for his troubles.

Up near the head of the sluice, where the mountain torrent of the night before had dislodged the bowlders and nearly wiped out his camp, he found his pickax half buried in debris. He rescued it from the dirt and gravel, and as a parting thrust at the cruel rocks which had defied him he sunk the implement deep into their sides. The pick crushed through the shell of the rocks so easily that the man almost lost his balance.

"Merry Christmas, eh!" he grunted. "Merry Christmas!"

He withdrew the pick and started to walk away. A slight oozing of water from the scar caused by his pick attracted his attention. He stared at it and then mechanically stooped to examine the gravel and splintered rock. With a little gasp of surprise he gathered another handful and spread the pieces out on his rough palm. Three times he dug up all he could hold in one palm and repeated the operation.

Suddenly a fierce light shot into his eyes, and his face assumed the eager, greedy look of a wild animal on the scent of some helpless prey. He dropped on hands and knees and dug at the sand and rock until the blood seeped from scarred fingers and dyed the rocks. He was for all the world a wild beast tearing and rending a bloodless victim to death.

Again and again he held the samples close to his eyes and each time grunted with satisfaction. He sprang out of the hole and attacked the rocks with his heavy miner's pick. The blows fell with sharp, metallic sounds; but unmindful of the noise, the miner worked feverishly and stubbornly at the excavation.

There was a little cry of exultation. The man held within his hand a sample of dull yellowish rock that sent the blood coursing rapidly through his veins. The freshet of the night had unearthed a vein of gold which promised to bring true all his visions of the past.

Deeper and deeper into the bowels of the earth he dug, following the course of the vein and grunting his satisfaction at each fresh discovery. Had he not been carried away by his greed and excitement he would have hesitated and withdrawn from his perilous position. His expert knowledge of mining would have told him that he was courting a terrible danger.

But the good fortune which had come to him after forty years of disappointment made him temporarily crazy, and he forgot everything except the gold which he was unearthing. Then a sudden blow from his pick loosened a torrent of sand, and the rocks above his head groaned and settled down.

Carston was instantly alert and realized in a flash his danger. He sprang back toward the mouth of the opening, leaving his pick and samples of gold behind. But the avalanche of rocks and dirt was too quick for him. It fell around and over him until the light of day was shut from view. A heavy bowlder rolled over on his leg and pinioned him to the soft sand.

The roar of the descending avalanche subsided, and the miner drew a deeper breath when he realized that all immediate danger was passed. An overhanging ledge had partly protected him, and he had a space of a few feet in which to breathe and move. The wall of loose stones and rocks could not be very thick, for he saw glimmers of light shining through.

But when he attempted to extricate himself from the prison he found that a worse fate had befallen him than he imagined. His right leg was crushed and held in a viselike grip by a huge bowlder that had settled down on him.

In vain he tried to move the rock and pull his leg free. But the bowlder was immovable, and the excruciating pain made him faint, sick. For hours he tore at the sand and gravel at his feet and snapped and snarled at the rock which held him a prisoner.

Then, faint and exhausted, he lay back and rested. The pain grew past endurance, and unconsciousness mercifully relieved him. When his senses returned he renewed the struggle, but with the same hopeless effort. His prison was located far up on the mountain side where no human creature would be likely to stray for weeks or months at a time.

"Black" Carston was a man of iron will and rugged constitution, and he did not yield easily to despair. During the long hours of the day he fought and struggled with almost superhuman effort. Then the pain, loss of blood and exhaustion broke his spirit. With a little sob he dropped his head back on the rocks and resigned himself to his fate.

"So this is Christmas day! Merry Christmas, eh!"

The child's morning greeting had clung to his mind, and it sprang to his lips unbidden again and again. Then his thoughts wandered, and he muttered over in his troubled dreams:

"Merry Christmas, merry Christmas! Ha, ha! Merry Christmas, youngster!"

In his agony he rolled over and wrenched the tortured limb until relief came again through sheer exhaustion. During the few lucid moments of the mind Carston tried to think connectedly and plan for some method of escape, but his strength was unequal to it.

Human nature yielded gradually to the strain. The waking, lucid moments grew fewer and of less duration. His mind wandered over the past. He babbled and talked in his sleep. At times forms seemed to surround him, and he forgot his predicament in talking to them.

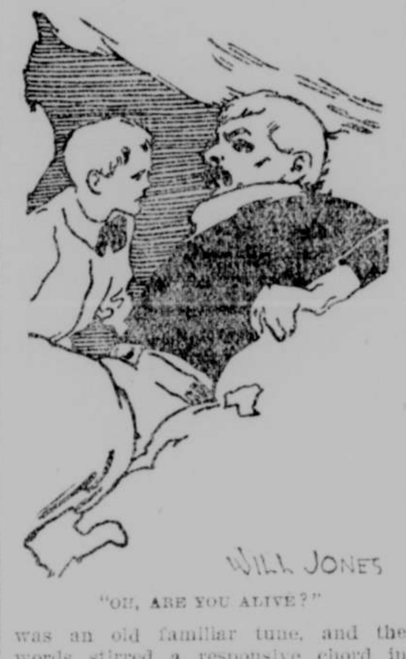
Then music seemed to lull his senses, and he heard voices which soothed his mind. They were all singing the refrain that had so offended his ears that morning. Clear above all the others a childish voice sang. He was in church, but the voice was that of a child or of an angel, Carston could not say which.

"I wish you a merry Christmas! I wish you a merry Christmas! I wish you a merry, merry, merry, merry, merry Christmas!"

Almost unconsciously the man's lips framed the words and repeated "a merry, merry Christmas!" It was far from a merry Christmas to him lying there imprisoned in the rocks, with one leg crushed, but he was past physical pain now, and it was only the mind which took cognizance of the world about.

Then the high, piping voice changed. It seemed to come from a greater distance, vague, shadowy and almost inaudible. Carston strained his ears. It was an old familiar tune, and the words stirred a responsive chord in him:

"Good news on Christmas morning!
Good news, oh, children, dear!
Christ was born in Bethlehem
And is living now and here."



"OH, ARE YOU ALIVE?"

The voice and song trailed off until lost entirely to the ear. When silence fell around the man vaguely wondered if this were death. He had often thought of death. He had seen it in so many different forms that the fear of it had seldom disturbed him. Now he dreaded it—no; wished for it, for the pain was past endurance, and there was no release from his prison.

He seemed to wait and listen eagerly for the song again, but all was silence around. A great dreary blank drifted across his mind, and he was unconscious of pain or suffering. How long this stupor lasted he could not say, but when consciousness returned again an agonizing pain shot through his leg and body. He groaned and tried to change his position.

Then close to his lips a little sobbing voice cried out: "Oh, are you alive? I thought I was too late. Wait a minute and I will get the leg free."

It was dark all around, but Carston, looking up, saw stars shining overhead. They came through a big hole in the wall of rocks. His leg was so numb that feeling was nearly gone, but he was conscious of little hands digging and tearing at the dirt beneath the crushed limb. Then suddenly a great weight was lifted from it and the little sobbing voice said:

"Now pull with me."

How the little hands worked the dirt and rocks loose from the bowlder and how the two of them strained and pulled to extricate the man's body from the death trap Carston could never clearly understand, but after an hour of agony he felt himself lying on the surface of the earth with a little, slim, slender creature by his side, gasping and panting from exertion. Tiny drops of moisture trickled on Carston's face, but they were blood from lacerated hands and not tears. The little sobs were dry and tearless.

Carston swooned again in spite of his heroic will to fight back the weakness. In the interval the stars shone down upon him in their cold, hard brilliance, and the soft, cool air filled his panting lungs with healing strength.

They carried the man to the nearest mining camp and gave him such medical attendance as he needed. After a week of fever and delirium Carston's strong constitution brought him through successfully. His first thought was of the child who had rescued him.

"Bring that merry Christmas youngster to me!" he almost shouted. "Where is he? Don't keep me waiting."

Rugged old Carston, black by name and character, flung his arms around the slender neck and, with a great sob in his voice, cried: "Merry, merry Christmas! A merry Christmas, youngster, and God bless you!"

But even then he did not know that his faint "Merry Christmas!" uttered in his feverish dreams when imprisoned in the rocks had first attracted the little singer's attention and was responsible for his rescue. That was long ago, and Carston now celebrates the Christmas season with religious zeal and ceremony, and there is always a little "Merry Christmas" to help him, for nothing could satisfy him but to nickname his rescuer "Merry Christmas."

MYSTIC BABYLON AND HER DAUGHTERS

Weighed In the Balances and Found Wanting.

Pastor Russell Explains the Double Significance of the Word "Babylon." Protestant Denominations Born Under the Intoxicating Influence of False Theories—Misuse of "Golden Cup."

PASTOR RUSSELL

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 2.—Pastor Russell addressed a large audience again in the Academy of Music. His topic was, "The Fall of Mystic Babylon." His text: "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin—weighed in the balances and found wanting." (Dan. v. 25, 27.) In brief he said:—

While our message for today is "meat in due season" to the Household of Faith and every way most important to be understood, it is, nevertheless, a subject difficult to treat without giving offense, without being misunderstood, without seeming harsh. Bear with me, then, while expressing what I believe to be the Divine Message, in just as kindly a manner as I know how.

There was no Mystic Babylon in the days of Jesus and the Apostles. The expressions therefore in Revelation, bearing upon Mystic Babylon, were prophetic of Systems and conditions which have since arisen in the Church. The word Babylon has a double significance—the Gate of God—also Confusion.

Babylon's Golden Cup.

Under the figure of a woman clothed in purple and scarlet the Mother System of Babylon, centuries ago, "made all nations drunk with her wine," the doctrines which she had in her "golden cup." (Rev. xvii, 1-6.) The "golden cup" represents the Bible. It was misused when the wine of false doctrine was put into it—when the Bible was claimed as authority for the erroneous teachings of the Dark Ages. The intoxicating wine which made the nations drunk, and led them to support the "woman," and to call themselves Christian nations, Papacy still holds in her hand, and still offers to all who will receive it. But the nations are gradually sobering up, and becoming less and less inclined to take more of the wine.

The thought is that a commingled wine—a stupefying potion—was put into the wine in the cup; such doctrines as that God's Kingdom had been set up, and that the Pope reigns as Christ's Vicegerent. Other poisonous elements had threatened the people with Purgatorial torture, or eternal torment.

The Protestant denominations were all born under those intoxicating influences. While they separated from the Mother system, and denounced her, yet they hold doctrinally to many of the intoxicating errors of her "cup." Consequently they, too, claim that Messiah's Kingdom is set up and is reigning. They join in giving the nations the same dope the Mother gave them, telling them they are Christian nations, though they are building great guns and dreadnoughts to blow each other off the face of the earth.

Water here symbolizes revenues from outside peoples and kingdoms. So in Revelation we read that the woman with the golden cup "sitteth upon many waters;" "and the waters which thou sawest are peoples and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." (Rev. xvii, 1, 15.)

The "Euphrates" to Be Dried Up.

In book of Revelation not merely is the name Babylon used, but the symbolical description includes the name of the Euphrates, and we read of the great River Euphrates that "The water thereof was dried up." If we are correct in interpreting these "waters" to signify revenues, what would be signified by the drying up of the River? It would imply a cessation of the revenues of Babylon—millions coming every year from rich and poor of all nations for her support. It is in full accord with this Divine prediction of what is to come that we hear cryings arising from all denominations, Catholic and Protestant, that the "waters," the revenues, are being dried up.

History tells that the great City of Babylon was captured by Cyrus and his army after a considerable siege. His soldiers digged a fresh channel for the river and turned its course aside. Thus was the River Euphrates dried up, and the army of Cyrus entered Babylon, suddenly, in the night. While these things were transpiring, the princes of Babylon, corresponding to the notables of Christendom, were holding high carnival, rejoicing in security.

It was at this moment of exuberance that in the banquet hall of Belshazzar a hand appeared and wrote: "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." "Mene"—the days of your rule are numbered and finished. "Tekel"—Thou art weighed in the balances and found wanting! "Upharsin"—thy Kingdom is divided and given to the Medes and Persians. The strong symbolisms used in respect to Mystic Babylon correspond so well with the prophetic language used respecting literal Babylon that we are warranted in understanding literal Babylon to have been a prototype of Mystic Babylon, and her fall a prefigure of the fall of Christendom. Read Isa. xiii, 1-19. Compare Jer. l and li with Revelation xvi, xvii and xviii.

A LIVELY FOURTH.

His Proposal of Marriage Was Made Under Difficulties.

By T. DEWITT BOWMAN.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

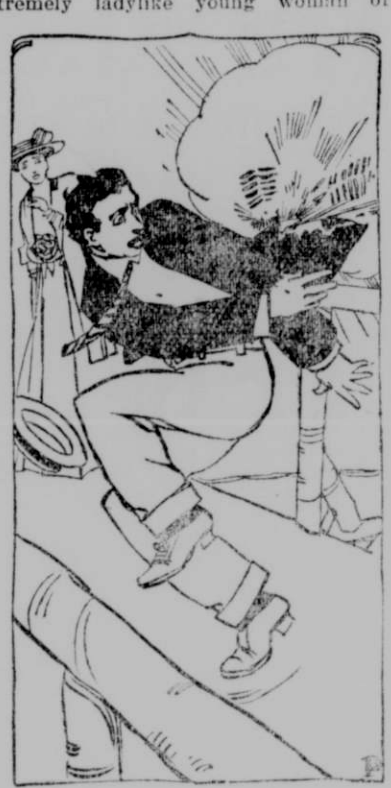
Crack!

"Oh, dear, the Fourth has opened! I hope it's time to get up." I looked at a clock. The hour hand stood at 5, the minute hand at half past 5. I turned over and was dropping into a dose when—

Snap!

That ended it. I was wide awake and must lie abed for two hours. Worse, I must listen to the firing, which came at nerve wracking intervals.

I had been invited to spend the day with the Hunters at their country place. Tom Hunter, my chum, and his two sisters, Margaret and Josephine, constituted the junior members of the family. Margaret was an extremely ladylike young woman of twenty. I was sweet on her, but her sister Joe, aged seventeen, was such a disagreeable creature that I hesitated about entering the family.



LIKE A DOG RUNNING AROUND AFTER HIS TAIL.

The explosions all took place very near my window—indeed, so near that I could see the sparks and smoke above the casement. I suspected that Joe was setting them off for the express purpose of annoying me. All doubt of this was removed when I saw a firecracker dangling at the end of a string right before my window. It sputtered just long enough to make me dread the explosion, which was the more harrowing when it came. Then I heard an idiotic te-he.

They say boys between fifteen and twenty-one should be barreled up and put away. There are some girls between those limits who should be walled in. Joe Hunter was one of them.

After two hours of discomfort I arose, dressed and went down to breakfast. The family were all very jolly. Some people could sleep peacefully on a battlefield. None of the family seemed to have been awakened by Joe's firecrackers. I had a headache. If the noise hadn't continued I should have liked to go back to bed. Joe had the assurance to ask me if I had slept well.

I thought that I would take occasion, having a whole day before me, to settle matters with Margaret Hunter, to whom I had for some time been paying attention. Indeed, it was expected that I would propose at no distant date, and as I would be welcome in the family the event was looked forward to by them with pleasing expectation. As I have said, the only thing that delayed me was my antipathy for Joe. But no such ordinary matter as a dislike for a member of a girl's family will long deter a lover, and I had made up my mind if I should meet with a convenient opportunity I would go back to the city after the Fourth with my fate settled.

Since the family expected that I was about to make my proposition it was natural that Joe should know all about it. Whether she did or did not I don't know, but one thing I do know—notwithstanding both her sister's and my efforts to "shake" her she persistently kept tagging about after us. Did we sit on the piazza, she came and occupied the hammock. Did we go out to sit under a copper beach tree whose hanging branches formed a convenient screen, she must come and poke her nose in under pretense of having lost something there. Margaret in order to get rid of her took me up into a cupola, and the fiend came up, saying that it was the only place from which she could see the paper balloons that were being sent up. There was not a balloon in sight, but she stayed in the cupola waiting for one.

There was nothing for us to do but go down. Joe went down with us and was not away from us long enough for me to enter upon, much less finish, what I had to say to Margaret. Luncheon came and nothing accomplished. After the meal I stole away to get a nap under a tree some distance from the house. I was falling into a doze when a cracker exploded within a foot of my ear. I looked around, but, of course, could see no one. I tried to doze off again, but another cracker came, then another and another. I knew very well who was throwing them. It was Joe. But it was impossible to get a sight of her. I got up, went to my room and got a brief nap. Why she consented to let me sleep I don't know. Perhaps she was busy annoying some one else.

About 5 o'clock I met Margaret on the piazza and proposed a walk. We both looked about furtively to see if Joe was within sight or hearing. There was no trace of her. We started, following a secluded path through dense shrubbery. We passed on to a rustic bridge leading over a creek. I paused and leaned against the rail. Margaret did the same, both of us facing the roadway. Feeling safe from interruption, I began my declaration.

"Margaret," I began, "it is time that I should tell you of that feeling which has gradually been rising in my breast ever since I have known you. I have had ample opportunity to observe your beautiful character, your kindly disposition and your native purity. I know that it is presumption in one so unworthy as myself to aspire to be anything more than a friend. I feel"—

"Crack!"

The sound was so near me that it shook every nerve in my body. I could not only hear it; I could feel it. But I couldn't see it, for it was directly behind me. Indeed, the explosion occurred at the end of my coattail.

It was followed by another and another in rapid succession. I turned, but the explosions turned with me.

Some one had tied a bunch of firecrackers to my coattail.

I could neither see nor reach them, for as I turned they turned with me. I endeavored to take hold of them, but only turned faster and faster like a dog running around after his tail. Then I backed up against Margaret that she might relieve me of them, but she gave a little shriek and retreated.

"Take them off!" I cried.

"I don't dare. They'll set my dress afire."

True, dressed as she was in thin white muslin, a spark from the pesky things might ignite it and cause a tragedy. An opportunity to stop the horrid snapping occurred to me. There was water under the bridge. I ran down there, feeling like one pursued by cracking rifles, and, squatting in the creek, had the satisfaction after a few muffled snaps beneath the surface of being relieved of the annoyance.

My white trousers were wet nearly to the knees. My coattail was dripping. I was in no condition to continue a declaration of love. By an unexpressed consent we turned and walked rapidly to the house. We had not taken a dozen steps when we heard what I had heard before when rising that very morning—an idiotic "te-hee!"

Then I knew that we had been preceded by Joe; that she had taken position under the bridge and had tied the crackers to my coattail.

On reaching the house Margaret showed me a rear entrance where I could go up to my room without being seen. There I took off my trousers, wrung them out, sat on them in lieu of ironing and when they were dry enough to put on went down and joined the others on the lawn. Joe was there and when I approached looked at my trousers with well feigned surprise and asked if I had been bathing with my clothes on. I turned my back upon her without reply.

All waited till it grew dark enough to set off the fireworks, of which an abundant supply had been provided. I was determined to have matters settled between Margaret and myself, and as soon as the pyrotechnic display commenced I led her away. Some one saw us and asked where we were going. Margaret, equal to the occasion, replied:

"To the cupola. We can there see not only our own fireworks, but those all about us."

Following the suggestion, to the cupola we ascended. But I paid no attention to what was passing below. This was my last opportunity to get in my proposal, and I hastened to avail myself of it.

"Margaret," I began again, this time taking her hand, which she did not withdraw, "I was about to say to you this afternoon when interrupted that from the first moment of our meeting I have been impressed with your beautiful character and, though I know it is presumption in me to"—

Whiz!

A rocket screached not half a dozen feet above our heads.

I looked down on the lawn and by the red light saw Joe, assisted by a couple of her boy friends, aiming another rocket directly at the cupola. We had barely time to get down on the floor before the fiery thing shot with its horrid noise above us. It was followed by a discharge of roman candles, the balls of which fell either on the roof of or in the cupola. There was nothing for us to do but beat a precipitate retreat. Margaret lost her head completely and ran down the steep staircase so fast that she fell. Catching her up, her head fell upon my shoulder.

"Sweetheart! Margaret! Dearest! Speak to me!"

After all my proposition had come—not, as I had intended it, in formal words, but from the heart.

The most eventful Independence day in my life was over—eventful not only that I had been accepted by the girl I loved, but on account of the difficulties under which I had made my proposal. I have now been married some years, and, although I must admit that my sister-in-law has grown to be a sedate woman, I have never forgiven her the levity that caused me so much trouble.

She has a daughter who is as much of a madcap as her mother was when a girl.

Raising the Limit

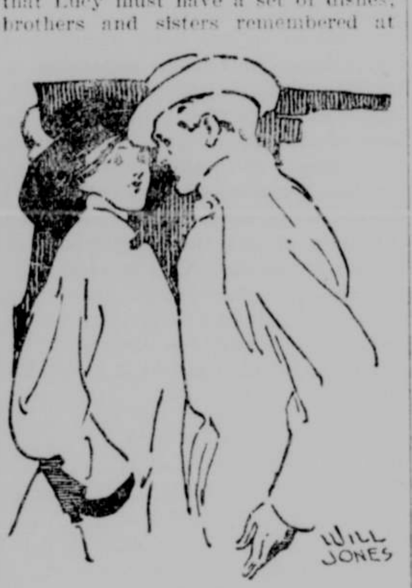
A Story of What Happened on Christmas Eve

By Jeanne Olive Loizeaux

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

It was Christmas eve in a city. The rich were preparing by the expenditure of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of dollars to enjoy the festivities, those in moderate circumstances piecing out what they did not have by working with their own hands, the poor—alas, the poor—going without the joys others were blessed with, except where the good Lord sent some benevolent person to hunt them up and bestow upon them a dinner or a few toys for the children—the children that it would seem Christmas is especially for.

The streets were crowded with belated purchasers, some buying decorations, some gifts of value, some a few simple toys. The spirit of Christmas was among them, within them. A father had forgotten that he had promised Jimmie a jackknife, a mother that Lucy must have a set of dishes; brothers and sisters remembered at the last moment some forgotten article and were hurrying hither and thither to supply the deficiency. There were lovers who had but lately plighted their troth carrying home gifts.



"WE'LL START SQUARE."

Big Jim could not escape the hurry, the laughter, the package laden throng. He hated the bedizened windows, the greetings, even the strings of turkeys and chickens in the market windows. He hated Christmas time. And, worst of all, he hated the word home. And it was being rubbed in. Why not let bygones be? For two years he had not even heard of his mother, and then she had written that Mariana had married John Foster. That was natural, of course. John had stayed by his job, and John was not dependent on cards mainly for a living.

Big Jim, with his hands in his pockets, fingered the roll of bills and the loose money, over $300. He had been lucky last night, but tonight, like as not, Shorty or some one would get it away from him. He turned down a side street and cursed beneath his breath as a little Italian with a basket on his shoulder proffered him a small plaster Christ. He thrust out his chin and passed Charley's place, for he had already reached his limit in drinks. That chin kept him from passing his set limit in anything. He was no weakling. He kept his word and was bad by choice, not through lack of will.

The very sleighbells jingled "home," and he hated to think of himself in that connection. He would have gone to his boarding house, but no one, save perhaps Shorty, who had deserted his wife, would be there—they all had wives or kids or mothers or some girl to make merry with, to be kind to, if only once a year. Then into the city clangor came the beat of a drum and a singing and strumming—the Salvation Army. In their march they stopped near him—he could catch the words of the high, coarse tenor:

"Come home! Come home!
Why don't you all come home?"

The song finished, he caught words of the harangue begun by a young girl with a clear voice.

"Yes, come home! Come back to your real selves! Quit your sin, your drinkin' an' gamblin' an' be decent, boys! It pays! It pays, girls! Go home to your mothers! Sin ain't pleasure, an' it costs dear in tears an' human misery! Come home!" He slunk away disgustedly. It seemed there was no escape.

It was too early to play poker. Well, he could go to the postoffice at least for his mail. But here, too, was Christmas—hurrying crowds, laughter. And, escaping a bevy of young girls, he ran into and nearly knocked over a shabby old woman, sweet faced, wistful eyed, with trembling mittened hands. He put her on her feet again almost tenderly, apologizing, but she peered up into his face—a kind face with good eyes in spite of all.

"I was waitin' for my girl," she began with the volubility of lonely age. "I ain't heard from her in a year, my Molly. She would be sure to come for letters Christmas time, wouldn't she, think? P'raps you know her, Mary Shane?" she asked eagerly, not minding his shake of the head. "She's pretty, is Molly, with big blue eyes an' curly yellow hair, an' little, like a doll. Do you s'pose somethin's happened her? She might—just forget to write mightn't she? They said she hadn't worked to the store for six months! Do you s'pose—she's—dead?" The cracked old voice was a mere whisper. The young man's heart softened.

"I'll tell you," he answered. "I expect she's all right—married and safe, likely, being so pretty—and good!" The mother snatched gratefully at the words. "Married an' safe, I reckon," she repeated. "An' so happy she's forgettin' to write—married an' safe! An'—good!"

"So you go home," he advised. "You will hear from her all right if you wait. You'll get sick here." He left her and at the door ran head-on into Shorty. He was glad to see even Shorty, although that worthy had "a grouch on." The two went down the street together and paused at an alley where newsboys, with an eye out for the police, were shooting craps.

"Their game's more fun than ours and quicker," growled Shorty, "and matching pennies is quicker yet and even more intelligent. I'm tired of being a fool. I've got $300 in the world in this roll. I'll match pennies, two out of three for it. Heads! What you got?"

"Two hundred dollars. I'll go you!"

They stooped to the pavement and matched. Big Jim's luck held. Silently the other handed over the roll. Jim laughed shortly.

"I'll raise the limit in this 'gentlemen's game.' Two out of three the winner—to quit this life and be decent!" Shorty nodded. "Settle down and earn a living an' get married tonight! An' go home an' behave!" Again Shorty nodded, but he amended:

"The loser to end it all. He jerked his thumb in the direction of the river. Big Jim reached his hand, and the men shook hands. Just then a policeman sauntered past, importantly eying them. The newsboys scattered. Then the two stooped again in the electric light and matched pennies on the pavement. It was Jim's luck again. Shorty laughed, a little enviously.

"You're a square sport, Jim. You'll keep your word." Then he turned on his heel toward the river.

Jim stood thinking awhile till a policeman passing bade him "move on." Then he passed slowly back toward the main street. It had grown full evening, and the crowd had thickened—the last night before Christmas. He was pushed to the edge of the walk, where people had gathered thick as bees round a fleeing queen. The drum was beating—the Salvation Army again! A few men were laughing, all trying to see. Jim shouldered his way to the front. The soldiers had surrounded an overdressed young girl and knelt about her. Her cheeks were crimson with excitement. She had not yet got to rouge. Her curling yellow hair extravagantly dressed was blowing in the wind; tears rolled down her babyish face. She was very pretty and little, like a doll.

He knew the girl. It was Babe Shannon. He caught her eye, and she crimsoned a deeper hue.

"Come to yourself! Come home!" pleaded the soldiers. "Go back to your mother! Be good! Nothing else pays!" She nodded assent to them.

"I'll—go home—but let me out of here now." They yielded reluctantly, but the young man forced himself to her and took her arm. She shook off his touch like fire.

"It's you and your like have brought me here," she flamed. "I've promised to go home, and I can't. I ask you: Can I? What chance would I have? My mother"— But he seized her arm again and walked her rapidly away from the curious crowd down a side street, where it was quieter.

"Babe," he pleaded, "I'm not much. I ain't fit, but if you'll marry me we'll begin square. You give me a chance and I'll give you one." She faced him in astonishment and unbelief.

"My name ain't Babe; it's Molly. What do you mean, talking about—getting married? A year ago—just a year ago—if you'd said that it would have saved me. Now"—

"Now—it will save both of us. I mean it, Molly. You're a thousand times too good for me. But marry me and I'll take you home and I'll stick by you. You can tell your mother you've been married a year. You ought to have been, and we'll make it true." Her eyes searched his face, and he pushed back his hat to help her, to give her a chance at his eyes—kind, steady eyes, too old for so young a man, but still clear. The girl knew she could trust them. Suddenly she put her arm up before her face and began to cry, but she nodded through her tears.

"Marry me tonight," he said, "and tomorrow I'll take you home. I'll wake everybody and get a license, and I'll take care of you. We've got $200 to begin on. Come to the postoffice first." He drew her along with him. Once inside, she waited while he made out and sent an order for $300 and mailed it to Shorty's wife. Then with a smile he turned to the girl, who made shift to smile back at him. He took her hand and, holding her close to his side, again went out upon the street. But this time he was no slouching loiterer—he had a license to procure, a justice of the peace or a preacher to find. And then at the station they would buy tickets for home; there would be time to ask her where home might be.

As they swung past the corner the squat, velvet voiced Italian from the store in his basket offered the man a small plaster image of the Christ child. Big Jim tossed the man a dollar and put the little symbol of good will to men into Molly Shane's willing hand. Her lips murmured a silent prayer—a prayer that they might be good again, that she might be good. She made silent vows of immaculate wifehood. And she knew that, being good, they would find their happiness together.

VOTING CONTEST CLOSES MONDAY, JUNE 17TH.

A Few More Days in Which to Work for the Beautiful Piano—Last Struggle for Capital Prize Now at its Hight—Other Prizes.

There are now but a few more days in which the candidates engaged in The Republican popular voting contest have to work for the several prizes offered. The voting comes to an end on Monday, June 17th, at 3 o'clock and immediately there-after the counting will be commenced to see who shall be declared the winner of the splendid Obermeyer piano and the other beautiful and useful articles offered to those who are making an endeavor to land the premiums. It is not believed by those who have given the matter careful thought that any particular person has the grand prize cinched at the present time but there are several in the race who have a good chance to land it if they only will hustle.

If you have not yet seen the fine piano offered in this contest go to G. C. Martin & Co.'s, and take a look. Many of our citizens have examined the instrument as to its quality and appearance and there is yet the first one to say that it is not a fine one. It is of a plain rich mahogany, and a prettier piano was never unloaded at Oakland. Musicians of this vicinity have tested it as to its quality of tone and volume and every one of them say it is finer than silk.

There are several young ladies who appear to have the best of the contest but none of them have a sure cinch of being the ultimate owner of the first prize. If one of these contestant who is way down the list should take it into her head that she could do so. She would have to do some work to make it, but that was what was expected when the contest opened. Several bunches of seven new subscribers or renewals in the groups of seven would put the lowest candidate in the race up among the leaders.

For those who wish to vote without any competitor seeing them, The Republican desires to state that cash with your subscription, telling where the paper is to be sent and to whom the votes shall be given can be placed in an envelope and deposited in the ballot box. The judges will open these envelope as soon as they start to count and will credit all votes. In order to secure bonus votes on merchant's coupons they must be counted at The Republican office before being voted.

Miss DeWitt was in the lead at the last court. Several others are well to the front and are putting forth every effort on the home stretch to win the coveted prize. Either of these ladies can land the prize if they will take the time to get out and solicit new subscriptions and renewals. Every bunch of seven subscribers means 9,200 votes and seven renewals will bring in 6,500 votes and the way to win is to get these new subscriptions and renewals, as they count up rapidly and they carry with them the big bonus offers which contestants should be seeking.

From now on until the close of the contest, which will be on Monday, June 17th, we will give the following bonuses. These will positively be the last bonus offers, and they will hold good nntil the close of the contest

For every seven new subscriptions we will give 8,000 extra votes, making a total of 12,200.

For every seven renewal subscriptions we will give 6,000 extra votes, making a total of 9,000.

For every seven back subscribers we will give 4,000 extra votes, making a total of 6,000.

For every 40 merchants coupons brought to this office and counted by the publisher or his assistants, a bonus of 1000 extra votes will be given, a total of 2,000 in all.

These merchants' coupons may be collected from any and all merchants who are giving coupons, and must be brought to the Republican office in bunches of forty tickets, to be counted by the publisher or one of his assistants before the coupons will be issued.

Monday, June 17th, the voting will cease and the final count will be made that evening. This is but a short time ahead and it is worth the while of the candidates to get out among the people and work like Trojans from now until the ballot box is closed at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of the day mentioned. No ballots will be received after 3 o'clock undes any circumstances, no matter who may have them or what excuse they may present for not getting them in at the proper time.

The contest is on the square and there is to be a fair field and no favorites.

All bonus votes that are to be cast must be accompanied by the number of coupons stated on the bonus or the bonus votes will not be counted nor allowed to be given to the contestants.

Merchants need not be afarid of buying an over supply of coupons since we will redeem at what you paid for them all you have left over at the close of the contest.

The following are the enterprising merchants who give coupons.

Arthur Townshend.
Bolden, Brown & Weimer.
J. E. Harned.
H. C. Sincell.
Dixon & Kelso.
Thos. Little.
Gonder's Pharmacy.
G. C. Martin & Co.
J. W. Hart.
J. M. Davis & Sons.
Samuel Lawton & Sons.
H. Creutzburg.

The following shows the official standing of contestants after the first and second counts:

	First Count	Second Count	Total
May McRobie	60,475	93,475	153,950
Bern. Dewitt	56,475	104,650	161,125
Bernice Bowers	15,000	28,000	43,000
Bessie Echard	14,900	5,500	20,400
Mar. Glotfelty	9,650	15,000	24,650
Blanche Clark	7,575	8,575	16,150
Laura Sanders	3,200	9,400	12,600
Madge Enlow	2,900	5,650	8,550
Alma Turney	1,700	2,300	4,000
Ella Cleveland	1,225	1,225	2,450
Jean DeBerry	700	1,500	2,200
Bessie Ault	650	1,600	2,250
Anna Bell	350		350
Bessie Hinebaugh	275		275
Josephine Brown'g	275		275
Margaret White	250		250
Maize Prevost	150		150
Orlie Dunham	100		100

Remember that there are many handsome prizes given by various merchants around town, a list of which may be found in the big advertisement on another page. After the piano is awarded, the next contestant has first choice of the other prizes, the next one has the second choice, and so until all are claimed.

THE LAND OF THE MAN.

The experiment in social order called democracy is now many centuries old—the government of and by the people, the entire people who are fit by age and personal worth. It is as steady a movement all along history, as, say, civilization itself, says the New York Mail. Today, in America, we are newly disolved to turn the wheel yet nearer to this true course, a pure democracy. Not that we can fully hope to swing the ship just where we want her, but we are resolved to put her several points nearer on her course, the rule of all, by all, with law.

Why should there be any lack of sympathy with such a purpose? Why may not this majestic ideal have its way in all our minds? Why should we not cast aside the small straws of partisanship, the most unworthy bickerings of personalities, and give ourselves up to another superb struggle to attain the historic idea? It is a lofty concept of human affiairs, this idea of share and share alike, all good and true citizens, in the dispensing of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Would it not seem that the ideal itself should elevate the contest to a very high plane? Would it not seem that the very best thinking that each citizen is capable of should begin?

We are certainly on the eve of it, a near experiment toward human equality It is a momentous experiment, and may well call on every citizen to use his brain and his conscience first, and his tongue last.

America has been called "the land of the dollar." Why not let us seek to make it "the land of the man!" America has been the arena for stupendous physical development, meaning wealth as the result. But that period was but an incident. It was not the end that the fathers sought. Their purpose was the well-being of man, his life, his liberty, his happiness, his free conscience, his unshackled mind, his home with security and comfort, his self-respecting personal independence, and, above all, his right to an equal share in government.

This is the new era at hand. We have built the railroad, bared the mountains, plowed the praires, open the mines, and amazed the world with our achievement along material lines. Now for the real purpose of all this—the man. He must be first, he is himself the prize. And the man has long and patiently waited for his reward. There have been so many things that needed to be done in buildiug the house. But the man is what the house is for. And now it is beginning to be his time.

THE CHICAGO CONVENTION.

All indicotions point to a strenuous time at the Republican National Convention due to the bitterness of the preconvention fight and the closeness of the contest between the Taft and Roosevelt forces. There will be 1078 delegates making 540 votes necessary for a candidate to win. The Taft forces are favorable to the selection of Senator Elihu Root for temporary chairman who was chosen for that position by the Executive Committe of the National Committee. Mr. Roosevelt is not satisfied with his selection and proposes to have nominated a candidate of his own choosing. This will bring the first test of strength of the opposing candidates. There have been intimations that as the contest is so bitter, a split wilt occur at Chicago. It is too early to predict what may happen but it is hoped that wise counsels will prevail and that a way may be still found to present a united front at the November election. Unquestionably the Republican party is facing the most serious crisis in its history and it will require wise and tactful work at Chicago to pevent a rupture that will split the party wide open.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Senator H. J. Sbeicher Replies to Mr. Weimer's Communication.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Hemmed in upon all sides, with every avenue of escape closed against him completely by the proofs and argument both in his pitiable attempt to meet the accusations of Mr. Robinson, as well as nonpulsed and discredited in his unwarranted personal attack upon my legislative record in the last session of the Maryland Legislature; with the last gasp of a drowning man grabbing at every drifting straw, sputtering and gurgling in his exasperation and humiliation, Delegate Weimer meets every expectation by endeavoring to ring in Anderson, of the Anti-Saloon League, and his opinions of me and my action with reference to the State wide Local Option Bill, quoting Anderson, but backing off himself, skulking away, wriggling, squirming out of the discussion in his feeble effort to rise while "taking the count".

The expected has happened. Unable longer to mantain his fallacious and untenable position concerning my official conduct in the last session of the Maryland Senate, Delegate Weimer drags in an article which appeared in the official organ of the Anti-Saloon League, written by Supt. Anderson himself and published April 13th, and hopes to have the people of Garrett County accept that as corroboration of all his slimy filth and noxions rot with which he attempted to cover me, but which, like a boomerang, has befouled himself. Why does this great statesman publish a letter written by another man at some other time and attach his signature instead of answering my statement made in the Mountain Democrat of May 23rd, which was published in the Garrett Journal and Republican May 30th. He has also evaded every question at issue between himself and Mr. J. J. Robinson. What else could you expect? Who will he ring in next?

H. J. SPEICHER.

Proposed Memorial To General Bradeock.

On the spot where General Braddock lies buried, a few miles out of Uniontown, Pa., alongside of the old National road, the Braddock Memorial Association has planned to erect a monument to commemorate the gallantry of the British general who fell in battle with the Indians while trying to protect the British colonists from their depredations about 150 years ago.

General Braddock was colonel of the Coldstream Guards, a British regiment, which has been kept intact under the same name ever since the days when the United States were colonies of Great Britain. And his old regiment, proud of his services and the gallantry of the one-time commander of their regiment, propose to provide the foundation for the monument. The association is in correspondence with the present officers of the famous old fighting regiment of the British army and expects to have everything arranged for the beginning of the work at an early date. A bill introduced by Col. T. S. Crago of Waynesburg, is now pending in Congress for an appropriation of $20,000 to improve and enclose grounds about the memorial monument, and it is believed it will be favorably reported to Congress by the Committee on Library, to which has already given a hearing on it.

Give the Towns a Lift.

The State Road Commission, while touring several of the Eastern Shore counties last week, made the discovery that the good road frequently ends abruptly when it touches the boundary line of the incorporated town. In some instances the town streets were in ruts and holes, while the roads leading into the towns were solidly ballasted and smooth. While some of the larger towns have a special tax levy of sufficient proportions to cover the cost of street paving, many towns as yet made no such local provision.

An amendment offered to the road loan bill of the last legislative session sought to have the state-built roads extending entirely through the towns which they approached, instead of ending at the border line. This amendment failed of enactment, but it was not an unreasonable proposition. The towns should not, however, lapse into indifference. They should tackle the paving proposition on their own account and bring their street ways up to a solidly and smoothness that will match the roadways.

And village of 500 population can have its streets paved if it will only determined to have them paved. The county commissioners should lend a willing bit of aid to a movement looking to better streets in the towns and villages.—Baltimore American.

SWANTON.

The young men of Swanton have organized a cornet band. The instruments have arrived and we have lots of noise but not much music. The boys say "wait and we'll furnish the goods." They are under the instruction of Prof. Orcar T. Harris.

For some time past the streets were badly littered with ties. Ben Swietzer and sons has been loading them for the B. & O. R. R., which has improved the looks of the town.

The I. M. P. Orm, of Swanton marched over Back-bone mountain Sunday, June 2, to Mount Zion where Rev. W. W. White delivered a very able sermon to a large congregation.

C. E. Sweitzer has sold his house and lot to John Manges.

Mr. John Smith and little daughter was in town Tuesday on business.

Mr. William Sweet is at home this week with his family taking a much needed rest.

WILL REMAIN IN MARYLAND

Supt. Anderson Has Declined Call To Another State.

Superintendent William H. Anderson of the Anti-Saloon League, has returned to Baltimore from the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was nominated and elected as one of the managers of the Church Temperance Society, and at the meeting of the Church Temperance Society Board was unanimously elected legislative superintendent of that organization, which makes him the national legislative and political representative in matters affecting the temperance question of the members of that demonination.

Mr. Anderson announced since his return that he has declined the call to another field in the following statement:

"I am at last in a position to announce not only that I shall stay in Maryland but that I have secured the concurrence in this decision of the representatives of the national league, who have heretofore needs of the larger field, my acceptance of its call.

"In view of the action of various leading denominational bodies before this call came and that of the Baltimore preachers' meetings afterward, and the personal letters and the stack of official pledges and church co-operation and the opening of new pulpits and new doors of opportunity, only a very unreasonable man would ask for a stronger assurance of continued support. I am satisffed that the Christian Temperance people of Maryland intend to finish this fight.

"Notwithstanding that the other position would have been an obvious promotion and that I was approached in behalf of an eqnally important state while at Minneapolis, I am very well pleased that the obligation to stay in Maryland has seemed so clear. I do not like to quit in the middle of a fight, even to seem to desert supporters as loyal as those of the Maryland league.

"The policy of the league will be absolutely unchanged—viz, to push straight for the passage of a Local Option bill amended as previously announced, in such form as to obviate all honest objections, regardless of the obstacles thrown in the way. The methods of the league are always subject to change to meet changing conditions. It is now so well established that league is here to stay that some methods which were necessary in the past may not be further needed.

"We confidently expect to pass the Local Option bill at the next session of the Legislature, and if we do not are pledged to start a fight immediately for state-wide prohibition."

FRIENDSVILLE.

How about the good old summer time.

Arthur Dixon, engineer for the Rock Lick Lumber Co., again got badly hurt while running his locomotive last week.

Albert Kolb and John Steele with others took in the Wild West Show at Connellsville.

F. G. Fox and Lacey Nugent were out for a day's fishing last week. We did not see the string of fish they brought along.

Charles Taylor had the pleasure of shaking hands with the governor in Grantsville a few days ago.

William Ryland, who had a stroke of paralysis lately is no better.

E. C. W. Ryland went to Cumberland on Saturday returning on Sunday.

The Band Stand will be lighted with electricity as soon as it can be done.

We understand that George Cover has bought an automobile.

Mr. Deafenbaugh, of Grantsville, was in town last week.

C. C. Frederick made several trips to Oakland on Sunday and Monday.

Harper Bartlett, of Oakland, representing the U. S. Casuality Co., was here lately.

Snyder Frantz was shaking hands with his many friends here a few days ago.

Mrs. Perry Frantz and Mrs. John Sweeney, of Oakland, have been the guests of Clinton Ringer.

H. J. Black spent Sunday with his parents in Confluence.

Mrs. Salathiel Savage is slowly recovering.

The Local Lodge Knights Pythias will hold their memorial services on the 9th of June. The Band will escort them to the cemetery, and vocal quartette will render sacred music during the services.

June is here with its flowers and bright days.

Ray McCullough, of Damascus, is visiting his relatives, Mrs. John W. McCullough and family.

Frederick Kamp is attending court at Oakland as a juror.

C. C. Frederick is making one and sometimes two trips to Oakland daily in his auto.

Since spring opened quite a number of strangers are seen on our streets every day.

Ford McCullough is having a new barn built. F. G. Fox is the builder.

The local lodge of Knights of Pythias were visited last week by the Grand Officers of the State from Baltimore. They came over from Oakland by auto accompanied by Henry Lauer, of Oakland. After the session was over refreshments were served and a general social hour spent.

Wm. Ryland, who had but a very short illness, passed away last week. He was buried on the home estate near a daughter who had preceded him some years ago. The funeral was preached at the house by Rev. Maynard of the Christian church. He leaves a wife, one son and one daughter to mourn his loss. He was 67 years and a few months old at the time of his death.

A very sad event happened Saturday evening when Urbin J. Ross passed away. He died from an organic heart lesion caused by rheumatism. He suffered for many months considerably and death to him was a glad release. He was a young man greatly beloved by all who knew him and he made friends with both young and old. What is his gain is our loss. He had a most excellent character; always kind and courteous to his mother and family as well as to the humblest stranger. He was a member of the Lutheran church and a teacher in the Sunday school; also a member of the Friendsville military band, where when in health he worked with all his might for its success The funeral services were held at his home on Monday by his pastor, Rev. O. C. Dean, who was assisted by Dr. Maynard, and Revs. Heinrick and Friend. The service was a very impressive one. The hymns sang by the choir had been selected by him several days previous to his death. Many floral tributes from friends and little children as well as a magnificent wreath of the choicest flowers presented by members of the band were laid on the casket. The remains were taken to the railroad station to be taken to Midland where his father is buried, Members of the band in uniform acted as pall bearers and escort, while a large number of persons who had gathered at the house for the services followed to the train to pay their last tribute of respect to one whom they loved so well. His age was twenty-two years, two months and fourteen days. He leaves a mother, three brothers, (two in the U. S. navy) and three sisters to mourn for him.

This will be pleasing news to Prof. Palmer's many friends in Oakland and Garrett county, as he is remembered here as one of the best school officials in the history of the county. A new $70,000 high school building is about to be erected at Verona.

Former State Senator W. McCulloh Brown, who spent the winter in Baltimore, has returned to Garrett county and is at home on his farm near Bayard. Mr. Brown was in Oakland Tuesday on business when he made this office a brief visit. For the past two summers Mr. Brown was engaged in making the survey of the disputed boundary line between Maryland and West Virginia, which was recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States adversely to Maryland, much to the disappointment of the Maryland Commissioner and those residents who reside along the line and claim Maryland as their residence.

ANOTHER ROBBERY AT KITZMILLER SUNDAY NIGHT

Dogs Employed to Trail Burglar Who Led The Officers a Chase.

Kitzmiller was Monday night treated to its second bloodhound chase within recent months, the provocation being burglary and upon each occasion the trail led to the same party.

Sunday night the store of Carl Kantowitz was entered and robbed of considerable clothing. Mr. Kantowitz is packing his goods to move his store to Thomas, W. Va., and the boxes were broken open and the clothing removed.

Following this, Monday, as the offender made good his escape leaving no clue, Mr. Kantowitz telegraphed to Fairmont, W. Va., for the Landis bloodhounds which had given good service on a previous occasion. The dogs were taken to Deer Park on B. & O. train No. 14 and a drive made across the country, arriving at Kitzmiller at 8 o'clock. Considerable excitment prevailed which brought out nearly the entire neighborhood and many from Dodson and Potomac Manor.

At that hour Mr. Kantowitz with Constable Junkins unlocked the store door and admitted the dogs. After five minutes they were let out with the scent which they at once followed to the rear of the store to an alley. Following the alley a few hundred yards from the store they encircled a house occupied by a Hungarian family. Here they apparently lost the trail and it was decided to return to the store to make a fresh start but the dogs had no sooner struck the alley than they again took up the trail with a howl which they pursued about a mile above town where they entered the home Louis Hudson.

The dogs were followed by men and boys, some carrying lanterns and the chase was not completed was not completed until 1 o'clock a. m., during which time the night was made hideous by the yells of the dogs. In the absence of further evidence no arrests were made, no justice of the peace being in Kitzmiller. No search warrant was issued.

Jewelry was stolen some months ago from a store there and was a short time ago found buried some distance from the house where Hudson lives. Hudson was put on parole for one year last November.

The interior finish is of fire-proof agasote, an English composition more durable than wood. Washstands and toilet facilities are provided for the postal clerks and the cars are well ventilated. The cars are electrically lighted and equipped with pouch racks of latest design to hold mail and facilitate assorting mail in transit.

Kenneth Reid and Stanford Marshall, Jr., started this morning on a hike of about 50 miles through the mountains of Maryland. They will be gone about week, carrying with them a tent, camp utensils and food. The train was taken from here to Swallow Falls, Md. From there the cross trip will be made to Bear Creek. From there the journey to Friendsville will be made from which point the train for Connellsville will be taken. The trip will extend about 50 miles and will include some of the wild country of Maryland.—Cumb. News.

JUNE TERM OF COURT

Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd on the Bench.

The June term of the Garrett county court convened on Monday with Chief Judge A. Hunter on the bench.

Mr. James W. White, of Oakland, was appointed foreman of the grand jury, and the following were selected to serve as grand jurors: Wm. W. Kildow, Frederick Kamp, James W. Frazee, Uriah M. Stanton, John A. Burch, Henry M. Speicher, Thomas E. Bishoff, Wm. A. Smith, Frederick Gortner, Jacob L. Echard, James Aronhalt, Jonathan W. Baker, Henry C. Fowler, Godfrey Rosenberger, Albert Steyer, Benj. F. Paugh, Stephen C. Miller, James W. Junkins, E. M. Spedden, E. C. Wallace, Albert Markley and Bert C. Feather.

Judge Boyd delivered the usual charge to the grand jury, calling that body's attention to certain statutes required by law to be brought to the attention of each grand jury, viz.: the law against carrying concealed weapons, abortion, the liquor law, etc.

Judge Boyd, in his charge, admonished the members of the grand jury to use common sense in the bringing of indictments, being careful and impartial in the weighing of evidence brought before them.

Monday evening the petit jury was discharged from service until Monday of next week, when the criminal docket will be taken up, cases in the meantime being tried before the Court sitting as a jury.

Up to the present time no cases of importance have been disposed of, the time of the court being taken up in hearing motions and determining points of law in two or three land suits.

Deer Park Decoration Day Exercises

A great gathering of people assembled at Deer Park on Memorial Day to participate in the exercises. There were two bands of music and a good selection of pieces were rendered to the satisfaction of the crowd. Mr. G. Semmes Hamill, Jr., came over from Oakland and Mr. Edgar W. Young came up from Baltimore, and both gentlemen delivered interesting addresses. Mr. Young is a son of John W. Young, Esq., Clerk of the Circuit Court for Allegany county.

The Deer Park choir sang suitable selections at the cemetery and Mr. Ray Jones delivered the oration. Mr. Jones also acted as chairman and acquitted himself well.

Messrs. Flanagan, Marley, Frantz, Shaffer and Haulenbeek, Union survivors of the war, were invited to seats on the platform, as was also a Confederate veteran, Mr. William D. Hoye. Mr. Hoye read a poem and followed with an expression of his views on the war situation, in which he declared that while the war was going on he believed the cause was just and he had never seen any reason to change his opinion. He pleased the audience, though it was not in accord with his sentiments.

Pentecostal Camp Meeting

All arrangements have been perfected for the opening of the Twenty-third Pentecostal Camp Meeting at Mountain Lake Park, Md., July 5-15. The first day will be an all day patriotic Christian feast of tabernacles. This great inter-denominational gathering will be under the direction of Bishop Joseph F. Berry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and assisted by a large corps of pastors, evangelists and other bishops, including Evangelists Hyde, Philadelphia; Malone and wife of Cleveland; Allen, of Denver; Dr. Oliver, of Wheeling; Dunham, editor Christian Standard, and Dolbow, Wilmington. Located on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Reduced rates of hotels and railroads. Write Rev. E. S. Dunham, Delaware, Ohio, publicity secretary.

Fingers Caught in Press.

Tuesday Virgil Stewart, of The Republican force came very near losing three of the four fingers of his left hand when they were caught in a press he was operating. Fortunately, however, the press was a light one and the young man escapee with painful brusies only.

Married.

HELBIG—PEDDICORD—Last night at the parochial residence, by the Rev. James E. Connell, Miss Eleanor Peddicord, daughter of Postmaster and Mrs. James E. Peddicord, became the bride of Mr. Joseph Eugene Helbig, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Helbig, of Oakland. The couple immediately after the ceremony left for the east. The announcement this morning of the wedding came as a great surprise to the friends of both the bride and groom.

Why Should You Install Modern Plumbing?

Because, in the first place, your health demands it. A good plumbing system will protect you from the dangers of sewer gas and will keep your home healthful and sanitary.

The "Standard" porcelain enameled fixtures which we can supply are an ornament to any home, as well as being thoroughly sanitary. Their smooth, enameled surface is easily cleaned and will keep its beautiful, snow-white finish during years of service.

Our workmanship is careful and thorough, whether for repairs or for installing new plumbing.

It would pay you to find out more about it.

MORERI II,

20279.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

THE RED LOTUS.

A Story of a Visit to an East Indian Temple.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

It was twilight when Harry Ayers and his guest found themselves outside the Temple of the Five Sighs. They had visited a dozen ancient Calcutta temples that afternoon, and now the dusk had suddenly fallen and turned the crooked length of the narrow street into a dim perspective, lighted here and there by a lantern swinging above a doorway.

In the foreground arose the blank walls of the stone edifice, pierced by a low door, beyond which trembled a faint red glow.

"Have you the courage for another one before dinner?" asked Ayers, pausing at the foot of the stone steps.

"Certainly," returned Longwood. "The dozen we have seen this afternoon have not left the impression of antiquity and mysticism for which I was prepared. The carvings are without doubt exquisite, the images masterpieces of horror, but the priests—bah!"

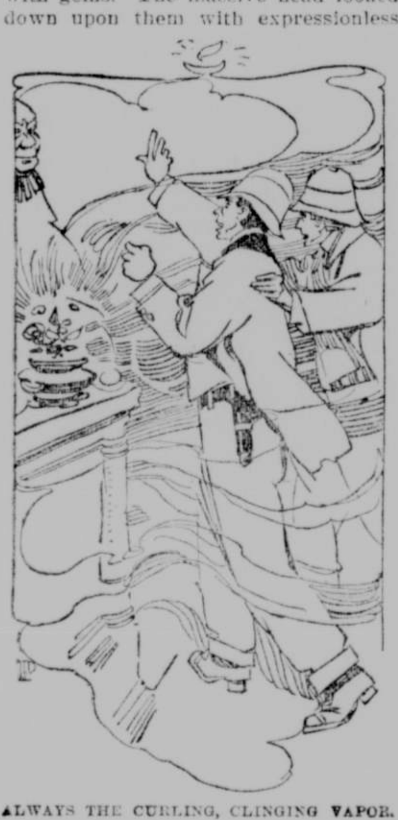
Ayers laughed. "I prophesy that you meet your Waterloo here, Dick. I have never visited this shrine, but Lester has. You know Lester of the India bank?"

Longwood nodded. "Chap with white hair—met him at your club."

"Lester claims his white hair was the result of a night spent in this temple," said Ayers over his shoulder, leading the way up the steps.

The other made no reply, and together they passed through the door and stood in the outer court of the temple. Here mendicant priests squatted about the door of the inner shrine, presenting skinny hands for alms.

Once past these birds of prey they were engulfed in a pale blue cloud of incense, and through it they dimly perceived a large image of the Buddha, gay in rich vestments and sparkling with gems. The massive head looked down upon them with expressionless eyes and calm, inscrutable face. Behind the sealed bronze lips were locked secrets of the centuries.



ALWAYS THE CURLING, CLINGING VAPOR.

A solitary shaven priest adjusted a prayer screen and arranged on a long teakwood table a row of porcelain bowls. Then he vanished, leaving the Americans alone in the sanctuary.

They drew together and moved nearer the idol. Down in the radiance cast by hanging bronze lamps their momentary depression fled, and they examined with interest the rich carvings and inlaid work within the great niche.

As they lingered the silence seemed to close in about them like a wall, and with one accord they turned toward the door, but the doorway was obscured in heavy swirling clouds of incense, and through the blur they could scarcely discern each other's pale features.

Ayers opened his mouth to speak, but the words were never uttered, for at that instant a low, sighing whisper stirred the silence until the very air seemed to vibrate with its intensity of sorrow and then died away.

The two Americans scowled at the impassive idol in the niche, as if seeking some explanation of the mysterious sound and the strange influence that seemed to rob them of all vitality—to leave them helpless and inert before the inscrutable face.

Between the feet of the squatting god was a small bowl of some strange substance in the form of the beautiful red lotus flower of the east. In turn they touched it with their fingers and admired its beauty. When it was again on the altar their gaze clung to it, and as they looked the petals seemed to expand and float on the misty vapor as on some quiet, gray bosomed lake. Again the long sigh swept over them and with it a breath of exquisite perfume from the lotus flower.

With a mighty effort Longwood tore his gaze away from the flower and made toward the place where he believed the door to be. Ayers followed with laborious panting breaths as one who battled against heavy waves. Solid walls evaded their eager search—always the curling, clinging vapor, receding, advancing in larger billows until, choking and gasping, they found themselves once more at the feet of the god, where petals of the lotus flower writhed and twisted like tongues of rosy flame.

Once more the strange whispering sigh swept over them, a sigh heavy with ominous foreboding. It died away and was repeated, and then fell the oppressive silence.

Ayers clutched his companion's arm. "If it comes once more I shall go mad," he breathed hoarsely.

"It will come once more. There is the name, you know—the Temple of the Five Sighs. There must be one more." Longwood's voice was tense with restrained emotion.

And so they listened in the silence, with the heavy perfume of the red lotus encompassing them like a rosy cloud, until they seemed to stand together isolated from the world in the midst of eddying shadows and vague murmuring sounds, with no object in view save the implacable face above them and the writhing flower at its feet.

Hours seemed to pass before the faint whispers of the last sigh stirred the shadows. When it had passed over them and died away in a shuddering moan Ayers was crying like a little child, while Longwood stared wide eyed at the diminishing flames of the lotus flower on the altar.

As if by some magic influence the air cleared of the swirling incense, objects came plainly into view, and the perfume of the lotus flower changed to the acrid smell of opium that clings to many Hindu temples. The lotus flower was gone, and its palpitating beauty had given place to the delicately tinted bowl they had at first admired.

Ayers regained his composure and faced his companion with defiant eyes. "You may believe me to be a fool, Longwood," he began, when the other interrupted him. "I know, too," he said slowly. "Let us find Lester."

Without another word they went through the low door and out upon the street, where the begging priests cringed away from their white faces and where the solitary lanterns dotted the blackness of the street. Ayers scratched a match and looked at his watch.

"Seven o'clock. It was 6:45 when we entered," he announced grimly.

Longwood made no answer.

A half hour later, still silent, they found Lester at his bungalow. He was a tall man, lithe and slender and not more than thirty years of age, yet the thick hair above his forehead was as white as snow. His keen dark eyes questioned them.

Ayers nodded. "We've been there, Lester. I owe you an apology for doubting your experience in the temple. If it was anything like ours"—He shuddered and threw himself into a chair.

"How did you guess we had been there?" asked Longwood, with a strange dread in his tone.

Lester swung open a door on the inner side of which a mirror was paneled. In its surface they saw reflected Ayers' flaxen head and pale face and Longwood's jet black hair with a single white lock on the forehead.

"I knew by that!" said Lester gravely. "And—let me see your hands!"

The two men held out their hands, palms upward.

On the thumb and forefinger of each right hand was a small blood red stain shaped like the petal of a red lotus flower.

"You can't obliterate it," continued Lester, with a note of pity in his voice. "It is the lotus mark, and every man who has laid profane hands on the sacred bowl will carry that mark to his grave, and it will be an early grave, too, unless one can cover it up. That is one way to avoid the espionage of those who avenge. The other way"— He paused, and his voice lowered.

"The other way?" asked the two men eagerly.

"Is to leave the country, to clear out forever, and yet sometimes vengeance follows unless one covers the mark!" He moved to the cupboard and took down a bottle of some liquid and poured a little on his handkerchief. He rubbed the palm of his right hand and there sprang into view a small and perfect flower of the red lotus.

"We merely touched it and went down into hades!" breathed Ayers heavily. "And you—you"—

"I held it in my hand and went still farther," said Lester coolly as he replaced the bottle and took down another one containing a milky substance. With a small sponge he covered the palm of his hand, and the red flower faded under a uniform flesh tint. "Here, hold out your hands," he added. "Water will not harm this covering. Time will wear it off, and it must be renewed. I will give you the recipe. We who use it call it our 'life preserver.' It will be yours too."

"Why do they leave the blasted thing exposed like that? Why isn't there some warning that it must not be touched?" demanded Ayers excitedly as the red stain vanished from his fingers.

Lester smiled. "The temple is not for uninvited foreign devils to enter save at their own risk. If you had been warned of its malevolent influence, would you have touched the red lotus?"

The two men nodded assent, and Longwood asked, with a curious hesitation:

"What are the force and the—the sigh? What is the explanation?"

Lester crossed the room and leaned from the window into the darkness of the garden. Presently he turned toward them, and his voice was low and strained.

"Only one man ever learned the truth about that. He was my friend. And before he could impart his knowledge to others"— He paused and again looked into the night.

"Yes?" prompted Ayers.

"He died," finished Lester quietly.

A Christmas Stocking

It Brought an Unexpected Message of Good Cheer

By LUCY K. WYNKOOP

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"De chil'en is gittin' big enough to understand about Christmas now, and I reckon we better git some toys fo' 'em. Tommy is five yea's old, and Pinkey is nearly fou'. De gen'leman what visit de house las' month gib me some money fo' takin' keer ob his horse, and we kin spend it fo' a fust class Christmas."

"And de lady what was wid him gib me money fo' washin' some lace clothes. We kin hab a fine Christmas this yea'. Missy Alice done tole me she goin' gib us a turkey."

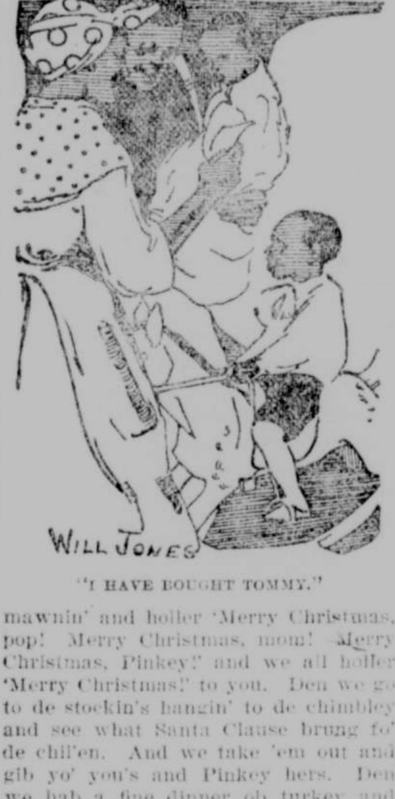
This conversation occurred between Ben and his wife, Sue, a young couple who were slaves on a plantation in Virginia. The time was a week before Christmas, and preparations were being made both by the whites and by the colored people to celebrate the day. From that moment Ben and Sue spent all the time they were allowed for themselves planning to give their children the first Christmas they had ever known or at least could appreciate. The last Christmas little Tom was ill, and his father and mother were hourly expecting him to be taken away from them by death. That he had been spared to them and was now in good health added zest to their preparations to make the coming celebration the Christmas of their lives. Ben secured a rocking horse for Tommy and smuggled it into the cabin when the children were asleep. Sue bought a doll with a fine china head for Pinkey and made the clothes for it herself. Besides the gift of the turkey, a lady living on a neighboring plantation gave them a whole mince pie for their Christmas dinner. A few little things might be expected from the church.

Every night when Ben came home from work Tommy would run out to meet him, and the father would take his child up in his arms and say:

"Christmas comin', honey."

"Wha's Kismas?" the boy would ask with shining eyes, knowing that it was something enjoyable, but ignorant of its nature.

"Christmas is de day de blessed Lord was bo'n. Fust yo' wake up in de mawnin' and holler 'Merry Christmas, pop! Merry Christmas, mom! Merry Christmas, Pinkey!' and we all holler 'Merry Christmas!' to you. Den we go to de stockin's hangin' to de chimbley and see what Santa Clause brung fo' de chil'en. And we take 'em out and gib yo' you's and Pinkey hers. Den we hab a fine dinner ob turkey and stuffin' in it and mince pie, and yo' chil'en play wid yo' toys all day. Won't dat be fine?"



"I HAVE BOUGHT TOMMY."

And the boy would share his gratification by tightening his arms about his father's neck and covering his face with kisses.

The preparations went on and the anticipations continued to rise till the day before Christmas. Then Ben surprised Sue by coming to the cabin an hour earlier than usual, and the moment she looked at him she knew that something terrible had happened. His face had taken on that sickly hue which in the colored race corresponds to pallor in the whites. He came in and threw himself face down on the bed.

"Oh, Ben," cried his wife, "what is it?"

There was no reply.

"Tell me, Ben! Do tell me what's de matter."

"Tommy's sold."

The mother dropped as if she had been shot. Ben had been told the news by his master and sent home to break it to the wife and mother. Colonel Torrance, the planter, had for some time intended to get rid of some of the children he owned. He had no idea of doing so at this Christmas season, but a trader had come along, had made an offer of $300 for Tommy, and his master had concluded to accept it.

The southern gentleman planter was usually a kind man, whose slaves were fond of him. But a slave was a chattel representing a certain sum of money, and a thrifty owner would naturally make the most of his capital. Colonel Thomas was one of this class. He disliked to separate families, but under the system of slavery it at times became to his interest to do so. And what was his interest he considered his duty to himself and his family.

Ben, hearing his wife fall, sprang up and took her limp body in his arms and laid it on the bed. Just as she came to herself the children toddled into the room and Tommy, seeing that something was the matter, began to cry. This started his sister. The two went to the mother, who, seeing her boy, arose and with a moan took him in her arms.

"Oh, what a Christmas eve!" wailed the father.

There was a rap at the door.

"Don't come in heah!" cried the mother fiercely. "Yo' shan't take ma boy! I'll kill him befo' I'll let him be taken away from his mother!"

Nevertheless, the door was opened. The face of a young girl appeared.

"What do you mean, Sue? I haven't come to take your boy. I've come to bring you the turkey for Christmas. Here it is." And she held up a four pound bird.

"Oh, Missy Alice," said the father, "we don't want no turkey. Dey ain't no Christmas fo' us. De Lawd hab struck us down. Mars' done sold Tommy to a trader, and de trader gwine take him down souf. Take de turkey away, Missy Alice. We ain't got no use fo' it."

The visitor, Alice Wharton, was a girl of twenty, whose face bespoke the kindliness of her nature. But over kindliness triumphed indignation.

"It is brutal!" she exclaimed.

The mother continued to moan. Several times Alice essayed to speak words of comfort, but her lips refused to say what was untrue. There was no comfort for her to speak. Colonel Torrence prided himself upon his strength of will to do whatever he considered it to be his duty. He had had such unpleasant episodes in his life before and had never shrunk from carrying out his plans. Alice took the hand of the father in one of hers, the mother's hand in the other, pressed them, and with the words, "God help you," turned and left the cabin.

It was, as Ben had said, a melancholy Christmas eve. Little Tommy was put to bed early, his mother lying beside him. On the morrow he would pass out of their lives.

It was near midnight when there came a rap at the door. Ben arose and opened it. A boy stood in the opening, but he was as black as the night and consequently invisible. Ben heard a voice say:

"Missy Alice tole me to tote yo' de stockin' fo' to hang up on de chimbly. She sais she done tole Santa Claus to bring somepin nice fo' Tommy."

Ben felt a stocking shoved into his hand, heard the departing footsteps, closed the door, hung up the stocking and returned to bed.

When it began to be light Tommy, who did not know that anything had occurred to interfere with Christmas, shouted:

"Merry Christmas, pop! Merry Chrismas, mom! Merry Christmas, Pinkey!"

The only reply he received from his parents was a sigh. They lay for a while, dreading to get up. It was Christmas day, but the day as well that their little boy was to be taken from them. Finally Ben, urged by the children, arose and uncovered Tommy's rocking horse and Pinkey's doll. He glanced at the stocking Miss Wharton had sent, but, seeing that it gave no more sign of contents than when he had hung it up the night before, paid no further attention to it. But Sue, with a woman's inclination for investigation in such matters, took it down, put her hand into it and pulled out a bit of paper. This she opened, and on it in large printed letters that she and Ben could read was written:

Merry Christmas! I have bought Tommy. ALICE WHARTON.

The father and mother looked at each other for a moment before the full meaning of the words penetrated their brains; then, taking the two children in their arms, all were united in a single embrace.

In a twinkling all was changed. Miss Wharton now being the owner of Tommy, his parents knew well that he would never be separated from them. The girl was beloved by the colored people, both her father's slaves and those on other plantations, for she devoted all her time to ministering to them. She had a little money of her own, and as soon as she knew of Tommy's sale went to the trader, offered him a good profit on his purchase, it was accepted, and the boy passed into her ownership.

As soon as Ben and Sue felt assured that Miss Wharton had arisen they started for her home to hear the good news from her lips and thank her for having been the means of sparing them a suffering worse than their child's death. She met them with a smile not less happy than their own. Ben tried to speak his thanks, but failed. Sue then tried, but did not get very far before she broke down in tears.

And so it was that the Christmas which came so near being a day of agony was saved to this humble family by an angel of mercy. The children enjoyed the toys and the turkey and the mince pie. But there was in their parents that which did not come of several things, for theirs was a great comfort of the soul. That which they held most dear had been taken on Christmas eve and returned on Christmas morning.

Tommy remained for several years with his mother, it being his owner's intention to give him free papers as soon as he was of an age to take care of himself. But before that time came around a great change had come over the colored people of the south. It was reserved for another to give Tommy his freedom. Abraham Lincoln one day wrote his name, and all the slaves were free.

Her Christmas Pudding

It Opened the Way to an Unexpected Pleasure

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Tied snugly in a round bag, the Christmas pudding bubbled merrily in the big pot on the gas range. Young Mrs. Bell tripped lightly to and fro about the tiny kitchen, her heart full of Yuletide cheer and gentle graciousness. It was her first Christmas as a housewife, and the little flat was spick and span with cleanliness.

Laura Bell lifted the pot lid and peered at the fragrant pudding.

"My, but that does smell Christmasy!" sighed Laura as she replaced the lid and proceeded to wash the mountainous array of dishes in the sink. "I never believed I could anticipate an enjoyable Christmas away from Lakeville and the home folks, but I begin to thing we two are going to have a lovely time, even if we are all alone in this big, strange city."

That night at dinner Timothy Bell leaned back in his chair and surveyed the remains of his excellent meal with manifest approval.

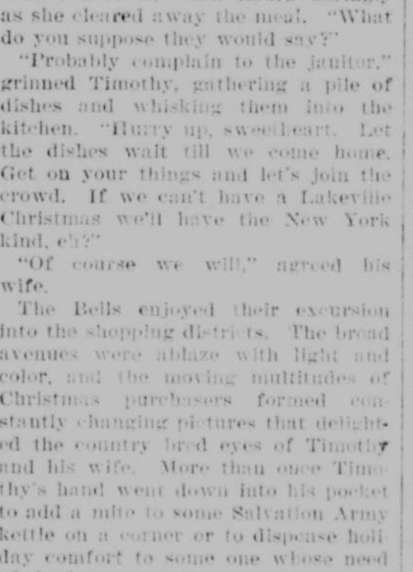
"So the pudding was a success, dear?" he inquired.

"Light as a feather, and so spicy!" said his wife proudly. "I'd show it to you, Tim, only I've tied it up again and put it out on the fire escape to keep cold. I shall boil it for an hour tomorrow, just before dinner, so it will be piping hot."

"Now this is Christmas eve. Do you want to go out tonight?"

"I'd like to go out and mingle with the crowds, although my own shopping was finished a week ago. It seemed strange to prepare my gifts so early and send them through the mail instead of running around with them the way I've always done in Lakeville. I rather miss the excitement and fun of it all. Now, Timothy, dear, don't look so solemn. Really I'd rather be here in New York with you today than away out in Minnesota with everybody else if you were not there.

"I've a mind to try it on every man, woman and child I meet in the corridors tomorrow," said Laura daringly as she cleared away the meal. "What do you suppose they would say?"



"A BLESSED OLD PUDDING."

"Probably complain to the janitor," grinned Timothy, gathering a pile of dishes and whisking them into the kitchen. "Hurry up, sweetheart. Let the dishes wait till we come home. Get on your things and let's join the crowd. If we can't have a Lakeville Christmas we'll have the New York kind, eh?"

"Of course we will," agreed his wife.

The Bells enjoyed their excursion into the shopping districts. The broad avenues were ablaze with light and color, and the moving multitudes of Christmas purchasers formed constantly changing pictures that delighted the country bred eyes of Timothy and his wife. More than once Timothy's hand went down into his pocket to add a mite to some Salvation Army kettle on a corner or to dispense holiday comfort to some one whose need of food or warmth was apparent to his observing glance. Once he and Laura convoyed a party of four ragged urchins into a little toyshop and made four children radiantly happy with simple gifts.

When they reached home again the clocks were striking 11 and Laura's eyes were sparkling with happiness, while Timothy felt a quiet satisfaction in the pleasure the evening had brought them. As they waited for the elevator a young man and a girl entered the building and stood near them.

Timothy's keen glance noted that the man was well dressed, but rather thinly clad for the season. His face was thin and pale, as if he had recently been ill, while his dark eyes wore a brooding, discouraged expression that was out of keeping with the spirit of the approaching festival. The girl, who wore a wedding ring on one slender ungloved hand, watched him with a pretty air of motherly anxiety. She was a brown little thing, with hair and eyes of a warm russet hue and a charming face that attracted Laura Bell's attention.

As they glided up in the elevator Laura found herself watching the girl with interest. There was a sad look when the young man's glance was turned away from her uplifted face, and Laura noted little tense lines about the mobile lips. The elevator stopped at the Bells' floor, and as they left the car Mrs. Bell turned with a sudden impulse and nodded in the friendliest manner at the little brown girl.

"Merry Christmas!" she called.

The door slammed as the car mounted up, but the brown girl leaned forward and called back in a low, sweet voice, "Merry Christmas to you!"

"I did it, Timothy," sang Laura as they entered their own cozy flat. "I knew some of these flat dwellers were human—even if you doubted it."

"Wrong again and glad of it—this time," admitted Timothy as he turned up the gas in the parlor. "Now, Laura, how about those dishes?"

"They must be done tonight," declared Mrs. Bell, tying a large apron about her slender form. "There won't be a thing to do tomorrow except to roast the chicken, heat up the pudding and cook some vegetables."

Laura went to the window that opened on a fire escape and raised it. Then she uttered a faint shriek of dismay and turned to her husband.

"It's gone!" she cried dramatically.

"What—the pudding?" Timothy approached the window and made a careful examination of the impromptu refrigerator. "Nothing here; not a blamed pudding of any kind," he reported. "Sure you didn't bring it inside and forget about it?"

Laura opened the pantry door and revealed its cupboard-like interior. There were the plump chicken and the delicately tinted celery and the crimson cranberry sauce and bowl of fruit, but there was no sign of that snugly bagged plum pudding that was to be the chef d'oeuvre of the Christmas feast.

The hour that followed was an exciting one for the Bells. They searched high and low, in the most impossible places, for the delectable pudding that Laura had made, but in vain. At last Timothy went down to the basement and consulted the genial janitor, who listened with interest to his tale of woe, but offered no solace.

It was after 7 o'clock on Christmas morning when Laura was awakened by a ringing of the hall bell. Throwing on a warm wrapper and thrusting her feet into furry slippers, she hastened into the narrow hall, careful not to disturb her sleeping husband.

Laura opened the door the merest crack and peered inquisitively through. What she saw caused her to throw the door open with cordial hospitality.

"Merry Christmas! Come in, do!" she said to the little brown girl who stood there, looking rather pale and frightened.

"For just a moment. There is something I must explain." She slipped inside and sank into the chair that Laura offered. "I know you will think it strange that I have come, a perfect stranger, but the janitor said you had lost a pudding."

"I have. Did you find it?" cried Laura eagerly. "It's the greatest mystery what has become of it."

The girl smiled sadly, and a flush reddened her cheek for a brief instant and was gone. "I shall have to tell you about ourselves," she said, with dignity, "so that you will understand why we have eaten half of your pudding. We're all alone, both of us, and we've had bad luck ever since we were married. In September Paul was taken down with typhoid fever and lost his position as book keeper. He's just able to get around now and look for work, and he hasn't been at all successful. Things have been going from bad to worse, and we're going to move out the first of the year. We've been running low for a long time, and for the last two days we haven't had much to eat, so there—just milk or something like that. Tonight before we went out the dumb waiter whistle sounded, and when I opened the slide there was our bottle of milk, with a plum pudding in a bag.

"I thought—honestly I did—that somebody had sent it up to us, though we're not acquainted with a soul here, and so I heated it up, and we ate half of it. It was lovely. A little while ago the janitor came and inquired if we'd seen a plum pudding, so I came right down to tell you, as Paul is asleep. I don't know what to say to you."

"Don't you dare say another word about that pudding," commanded Laura. "If you only knew how lonesome we are today you and your husband would come down and spend the day with us. We were wishing we knew somebody in the house here to ask. I'm so thankful about that pudding. Why, if I hadn't put it in the dumb waiter instead of the fire escape (I'm very absentminded when I'm busy) you would never have received it, and we might never have been acquainted. Isn't it a blessed old pudding?"

These two lonely young women hugged each other delightedly, and afterward Laura went to arouse Timothy that he might accompany her to the floor above, where the Robinsons lived, and add his persuasions to bear against the pride of Mr. Paul Robinson.

"You might find a position for him in the office, Timothy," suggested his wife hopefully.

"I think that will be easy," promised Mr. Bell.

It was a merry little gathering that did justice to Laura's Christmas dinner. The tragedy that was beneath the eating of half the pudding was quite forgotten in the joy of the present and the hopeful outlook for the future. When the day was over and the Robinsons had returned to their rooms, cheered in mind and purse by Timothy's delicately proffered generosity, Laura slipped her hand in her husband's arm and leaned her head against him, saying:

"It's been different from any Christmas I ever spent, Timothy, and I've been wondering what might have happened to them if that blessed pudding hadn't opened the way."

Messrs. Charles Sprinkle, of Cincinnati, a member of the Hard Wood Lumber Co., of that city, and Mr. Elbert Bonner of the Diamond Lumber Co., of Parkersburg, spent a few days of last week, the guests of Dr. and Mrs. Kemp. They left on Monday morning on a business trip over the W. M. R. R.

Mr. Ray Paugh, a young man employed as a miner in the Pattison coal mines, narrowly escaped being crushed to death by a fall of roof rock while at work in his place on last Friday morning. He was bruised about the face, back and left leg. He was taken to the home of a brother at Seldom Seen, where he boarded, and where he received surgical attention.

Mrs. Elizabeth Macfanlane, whose home is in Towanda, Pa., accompanied by her daughter Harriett, returned home the latter part of last week after spending a very pleasant visit with her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Macfarlane of Barnum.

Mr. Lee Morehead employed at the Buxton mine is ill with typhoid fever at the home of his parents in this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Freeland Tibbetts, of Hampshire Heights, accompanied by their daughter Isabelle, spent the week end with freinds at Blaine, returning home Sunday on No. 42, W. M. R. R.

Mr. Edward Notts, of Beryl, who was injured in the Buxton mine about five weeks ago and who for a time was critically ill with pneumonia, is able to move around the house and is steadily improving.

Mr. Gilead Miller, a veteran of the Civil War, who makes his home with his son, Mr. George Miller of this place, returned home Saturday after a very delightful visit to relatives along Georges Creek, most of his time away was spent with his nephew, Mr. John Miller, the well known business man and merchant of Lonaconing.

Saturday was payday at the Davis Coal and Coke Co., at Beryl, the Bloomington, Coal Co. and the Pattison coal mines at this place. On the whole while not as large as the previous pay, it seems to have been generally satisfactory.

"Liquor" Lee, a notorious and desperate character, who, they say, can drink more red liquor than an ordinary distillery can manufacture, who made his home in and around the towns of Blaine and Kitzmiller, has at last fallen into the clutches of the law. He was apprehended by Sheriff Ott Davis of Keyser, on last Tuesday at his roosting place near Kitzmillerville is now resting quietly behind the bars of the Mineral county jail at the county seat. He was arrested on a warrant sworn out by the wealthy merchant and coal man of Blaine, whom he assaulted last week while on a spree and inflicted injuries that at the time was thought to be fatal.

Mrs. George Cochran, of Lansing, Michigan is visiting her sister Mrs. P. C. Boucher.

Mr. D. J. Steavans had the misfortune of falling, while roofing the house of Richard Patton. We are glad to say he is not badly hurt.

We are sorry to know of some of our Amish neighbors leaving our county, as they are among our best people, both morally and from a business stand point. I don't think that the court docket ever had a case upon its pages that the contestants were Amish. There will be a colony leave this end of the county and some from the adjoining Somerset county, Pa., and locate in Alabama. Our old friend Jonas E. Gnagey will accompany the colony, and says if he likes the country he will make it his permanent home.

Mr. Columbus Broadwater of New Germany was accidentally shot last Thursday, which might have been a serious affair. It was supposed that a weasel had gotten into a lumber pile. Mr. Jim Hummel was manipulating the gun. He saw the weasel, or thought he saw it, fired his gun and brought down Mr. Broadwater. We are glad to say he was only hit with three shot. Dr. Bowen was called and rendered surgical aid. We have not heard if the weasel was killed or not, but Jim certanly can shoot some.

We are sorry to report the death of Mrs. George Blocher of near Sutton. She had not been well for some time, and died on Monday morning. The funeral occured Wednesday morning at Blocher cemetry. The deceased leaves three sisters and one brother. She is the daughter of Israel Glotfelty.

Lost End of Finger.

Tuesday morning John Rice had a portion of his finger torn off by a horse which he was attempting to hitch up in a buggy at the Maroney stables in Oakland. In arranging the harness upon the animal it stepped forward very quickly and the finger of the injured man became caught in some of the straps with the result above stated. Dr. Broadwater rendered surgical aid.

CHAPTER 480

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendments Section 1 of Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1908, entitled "an Act for the further protection of pheasants, partridges or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbit in Garrett County."

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that Section 1 of Chapter 6 of the Acts of 1908, entitled "an Act for the further protection of pheasants, patridges or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbits in Garrett County," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that no person, corporation or company shall at any time kill or expose for sale, transport, have in possession, any pheasant, partridge or quail, woodcock, wild turkey and rabbit, after the same has been killed, for any purpose, except for consumption of food within the State of Maryland; nor kill, expose for sale or have in possession any of the above named game, with the intention of sending or transporting or having the same sent or transported beyond the limits of said State; provided, that nothing herein shall prevent non-residents who have taken out license to hunt in said county from taking with them out of said county any of the above-named game which they may have killed in said county.

2. And be it enacted, that any person who shall have any of the aforementioned birds or game in their possession in Garrett County, except during the months in which the killing or catching of the same is allowed by law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars for each bird or game animal that they may have in their possession.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

Secretary of the Senate.

CHAPTER 597

AN ACT to provide employment at hard labor for certain classes of prisoners who may be confined in the County Jail of Garrett County or other persons of Garrett County, under sentence imposed by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, or any of the Justices of the Peace of said county, having criminal jurisdiction.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland that certain additional sections, to be numbered 251, 252, 253 and 254, under sub-title "Crimes and Punishments," and the same are hereby added to Article Twenty of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," and sections to be and remain a part of the local law for Garrett County.

Section 2. And be it enacted, that in addition to any sentence of confinement in the county jail of Garrett County which may be imposed in cases of conviction for assault, drunkenness, disorderly conduct, disturbing the public peace, vagrancy or petit larceny, where the punishment described by law shall not exceed one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary or house of correction, by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, or any justice of the peace for Garrett County having criminal jurisdiction, said court or justice may, in the discretion of said court or justice also in said sentence direct that any prisoner over sixteen years of age who may be convicted of any of the offences enumerated as above, shall be subject to perform hard labor for and during the period of his imprisonment, on the public roads of Garrett County, or on the public streets of any incorporated town, the town authorities of such town so employing such convict shall be charged with the expense which may attend such employment.

Section 3. And be it enacted, that the hard labor provided for in the preceding section shall be performed, if within the corporate limits of any incorporate town, under the supervision and direction of the town commissioners and bailiff of such town, and if on the public roads of Garrett County, then under the supervision and direction of the County commissioners or the road supervisor of any district who may be authorized by the County commissioners to work the same; and the sheriff of Garrett County, upon the demand of any bailiff, supervisor or other persons duly authorized to make such demand, is hereby authorized and required to deliver such prisoner to the party so making the demand and entitled to receive the same, whenever and at such times as he may be legally required; and the labor to be performed by such convict may include every service necessary for the purpose of draining, grading, paving or repairing such public streets or highways of Garrett County, within or without the limits of any incorporated town therein.

Section 4. And be it enacted, that the officer or other person having such prisoner in charge, shall have power and authority to compel such labor, and shall be responsible for the safe keep and return to prison of such convict to the custody of the sheriff at the end of each day's labor, which day's labor shall be within the discretion of the officer or other person so supervising at the time, but shall not exceed ten hours work or labor for any day he may be employed; and any prisoner so convicted and sentenced, who shall refuse to perform the labor required of him, shall incur the penalty of two days additional imprisonment for every day he may so refuse, and this provision shall be included in the sentence of the court or justice by whom the same may be rendered; but no prisoner shall be compelled to perform such labor whose health is not in a condition to allow the same, and the certificate of the physician to the jail or other physician in said county shall be sufficient to excuse such labor.

Section 5. And be it enacted, that if any officer or other person having such prisoner in charge for the performance of such work or labor, connive at or, by his wilful neglect, permit the escape of any such prisoner, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction of such offence in the Circuit Court for Garrett County be fined not less than twenty or more than fifty dollars, or be confined in the county jail of the county, and be subject to the same penalty of hard labor for a period equal to the unexpired term of the prisoner so escaping, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Section 6. And be it enacted, that this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 11, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

CHAPTER 481

AN ACT to divide Election District Number Eight of Garrett County into two precincts.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that Election District Number Eight of Garrett County be and the same is hereby divided into two voting precincts, to be known, respectively, as the "first" and "second" election precincts of the Eighth Election District of said Garrett County. The division line between the said precincts shall be as follows: The first precinct shall be the territory within the following outlines, to wit: All that part of said Election District Number Eight as now laid out and established, East of the summit of Backbone Mountain and East of the top of the Mountain to the line of Election District Number Seven.

The second precinct shall be the territory of said district, as now laid out and established, on the West side of said summit of Back Bone Mountain and on the West side of the Mountain to the line of Election District Number Seven.

The voting or polling place for the said first precinct shall be at the Hoye Place, the former polling place for said district, and voting or polling place for the said second precinct shall be at the Red House.

Section 2. For the purpose of registration the supervisors of election for said county shall provide the register of voters for said district, before the time of registration of voters, under the provisions of Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws, with two duplicate registry books, for the registration of the voters of said respective precincts; and the said register of the voters shall, at his session of 1912, make full registry of the voters of said respective precincts from the registration book of said district, allotting such voters to the precinct in which they respectively reside, by transcribing the names of such voters from the present registry of voters for said district, or in case of a new registration under any amendment of said Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws, then said register of voters shall register anew in said respective registries the names of all qualified voters in said respective precincts, as shall apply to him and prove the proper qualifications for registry. In case the said register shall have to make a transcript (instead of a new registration) he shall be allowed a sum not exceeding forty dollars, to be paid by the County Commissioners of said county, for such transcript.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1912.

JOHN R. SULLIVAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

CHAPTER 479

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendments Section 41 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub title "County Commissioners," and to add a new section thereto, to be known as Section 41A.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That Section 41 of Article 12 of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Garrett County," sub-title "County Commissioners," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments, and a new section added to be known as Section 41A, so as to read as follows:

Section 41. Whenever it shall become necessary to sell any land in Garrett County, because of the non-payment of the State and County taxes due thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the County Commissioners to purchase said lands, or such part thereof as may be necessary to the amount of said taxes, and if the taxpayer, in whose name said land was assessed and sold, shall not within two years from the day of said sale pay and discharge said taxes, interest and costs, the title to said land shall become absolute in said County Commissioners, as against said delinquent taxpayer, and the County Commissioners are authorized to sell said land, at either public or private sale, and to convey the same to the purchaser thereof after reporting said sale and after the ratification thereof by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, and a good title shall be vested in the purchaser of said land, as against said delinquent taxpayer.

Section 41A. That the title to all lands in Garrett County heretofore sold by the County Treasurer to the County Commissioners under the provisions of Section 41 of this Article shall become absolute in the County Commissioners, as against the taxpayer in whose name said land was assessed and sold, after the first day of January, 1913, provided, the County Commissioners shall give one month's notice by publication in some newspaper published in Garrett County, prior to the first day of October, 1912, warning such delinquent taxpayers that unless said taxes, interest and cost accrued against said lands are paid and discharged before the first day of January, 1913, that title to said lands shall become absolute in the County Commissioners, as against the person or persons in whose name or names said lands were assessed and sold; which notice shall contain a brief description of the lands, the name of the persons in whose name the same was assessed and sold and the amount of taxes, interest and costs due thereon; and all of said lands not redeemed by payment, as aforesaid, before the first day of January, 1913, shall be held as the property of Garrett County, and the County Commissioners are authorized at any time thereafter to sell said lands or any of them, either at public or private sale, and after reporting said sale or sales to the Circuit Court for Garrett County, and after the ratification thereof by said court, to convey the same to the purchaser or purchasers thereof, and a good title shall be vested in the purchaser or purchasers of said land, as against said delinquent taxpayer or taxpayers.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session 1912.

JOHN R. SULLIVAN,
Secretary of the Senate.

CHAPTER 445

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact with amendment Sections Three and Seven of Article One of the Code of Public Local Laws of Maryland, title "Allegany County" and Article 12, "Garrett County" sub-title "Miners and Operators Co-operative Relief Fund," as the same was enacted by Chapter 153 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed in the year 1910.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that sections Three and Seven of Article One of the Code of Public Laws of Maryland, title "Allegany County" and Article Twelve, title "Garrett County" sub-title "Miners and Operators Co-operative Relief Fund" as the same was enacted by Chapter 153 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland passed in the year 1910 be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

Section 3. There is hereby created for Allegany and Garrett Counties respectively, a fund for the relief and sustenance of employees and their dependents, when such said employees have sustained injuries or disability in the discharge of their duty, and for the relief and sustenance of the dependents of such employees when death has resulted from such injuries, said fund to be made up of the proceeds of the tax hereinafter levied and the increments from the investment thereof, as well as such donations and legacies as may be made thereto.

In order to create and maintain said fund a tax is hereby levied and imposed upon each operator and employee as follows:

Upon each employee in Allegany County a tax of twenty-seven cents and upon each employe in Garrett County a tax of thirty-eight cents for each month or fraction of a month that he is employed by any operator, and upon each operator in Allegany County a tax of twenty-seven cents and in Garrett County a tax of thirty-eight cents for each month or fraction of a month in respect of each employee paying the tax aforesaid and employed by said operator in Allegany and Garrett Counties.

Such tax shall be due and payable monthly to the Treasurer of Allegany and Garrett Counties, respectively, in which the mine is operated, and payable on or before the twenty-fifth day of the month next succeeding the month for which such tax is payable, in order to secure the effectual payments of such tax each operator is authorized and required to deduct and retain from the wages of each employee employed by him, on his pay-rolls in Allegany County the sum of twenty-seven cents and in Garrett County the sum of thirty-eight cents per month or fraction of a month, if said employee be employed for less than a month, and on or before the fifteenth day of the month next succeeding the month for which such deduction is made shall make a report of the number of employees so employed under oath to the Treasurer of Allegany or Garrett County where the particular mine is located, and on or before the twenty-fifth day of said succeeding month shall pay over unto the Treasurer of Allegany or Garrett County, as the case may be, the total amount so deducted and retained from the wages of the employees for the proceeding month, together with a like amount to be paid by the operator. It shall be the duty of the County Commissioners of Allegany and Garrett Counties, respectively, to enforce, by appropriate remedies, the collection and payment of the tax hereby levied; and to all taxes in default there shall be added and collected interest at the rate of six per centum per annum from the date when due.

Section 7. When the assessments imposed and collected by the Treasurer of Allegany County shall amount to thirty-five thousand dollars surplus and in Garrett County shall amount to fifteen thousand dollars surplus, over and above the pending and accrued claims on the same under this act, such Treasurer shall report the fact to the County Commissioners of their respective county, whereupon the said Board of County Commissions are hereby empowered and directed to remit temporarily the taxes hereby imposed from month to month as long as (and no longer) such surplus shall exceed thirty-five thousand dollars in Allegany County and fifteen thousand dollars in Garrett County, and when it shall be reduced to said sums or under, mentioned above, the said tax shall become again payable as provided by this Act.

It shall be the duty of the Treasurer of his respective county to invest, under the orders of the County Commissioners, any surplus above the sum of two thousand dollars in his hands, in such public bonds as said Commissioners may direct and to credit such fund with the interest derived therefrom; and upon the retirement from office or any disqualification to act of such Treasurer the entire fund, including such bonds and the books and papers pertaining to such funds, shall be delivered by such Treasurer to his successor in office, who shall receipt for the same.

Section 2. Be it enacted, That all rights and liabilities incurred under the sections hereby repealed and re-enacted shall not be impaired or effected, but shall continue and remain in full force and effect and any suit begun or hereinafter to be brought upon such rights or liabilities shall not be abated by reason of this enactment.

Section 3. Be it enacted that this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing in a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session, 1912.

CHAPTER 85

AN ACT to pay to the School Commissioners of Garrett County a sum of money out of the State School tax.

Whereas, In view of the pressure of the present apportionment, especially upon Garrett County, of the State School tax, and the inability, without larger increase of county taxation, to keep her schools open for seven and one-half months, and in view of the fact that mountain ridges so divide the population of Garrett County, the largest county in the State in area, as to render school facilities for all of the children more expensive than in more central parts of the State; and,

Whereas, It has been unanimously recommended by the State Board of Education that such sum of money shall be paid out of the State School Fund to the Board of School Commissioners of Garrett County; therefore,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Comptroller of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized and required to draw his warrant upon the Treasurer in favor of Garrett County School Board for the sum of four thousand dollars per annum for two years out of the proceeds of the State school tax before making apportionment thereof; provided, however, that no portion of said four thousand dollars per annum shall be used for any other purpose than for salaries and ordinary running expenses of said schools.

Section 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take affect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8, 1912.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January Session, 1912.

GRAND JURY REPORT

Made June 6 When The Body Was Discharged.

The grand jury for the June Term of the Circuit Court made its report on Thursday morning last and was discharged from further service.

The report was as follows:

To the Honorable, the Judges of the Circuit Court:

The Grand Jury for the June Term, 1912, of the Circuit Court for Garrett county beg leave to report that we have concluded our labors and have, to the best of our abilities performed the duties devolving upon us as members of this body, and we desire to report our proceedings and receive our discharge.

We have examined and had before us ninety-seven witnesses, have found twenty-seven presentments and twenty-seven indictments.

We have found presentments in al those cases in which we believed the evidence justified and have ignored trivial cases and those cases in which the evidence did not appear to warrant presentments.

Our proceedings have been very harmonious throughout our sessions which to us is a pleasure to note.

We have examined the several county buildings, in accordance with the law and your Honor's instructions and have found all the county buildings in a neat and excellent condition, with the exception that we found a leakage in the wall vault in the cellar of the Court House, which should be promptly repaired.

We have also examined the records in the several county offices and found them neatly kept and in an efficient manner.

We desire to acknowledge the courtesy so kindly extended was by the Court and the several county officials, and we especially wish to extend over thanks to the State's Attorney, Mr. Julius C. Renninger, for his uniform courtesy and his faithful attendance and assistance rendered us during our session.

We now beg to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted,
JAMES W. WHITE,
Foreman.

SCHOOL BOARD MEETING.

The Erection of Five School Houses Authorized by Commissioners.

The school commissioners of Garrett county met in regular session at their office in the court house last Friday with all members thereof present. The minutes of the last meeting, May 11th, were read and approved.

A contract for one year was made with the Dulaney-Varney Co., of Baltimore, which specifies that all school supplies, excepting books, shall be purchased of them. The prices thereof were submitted and approved.

A large delegation of citizens from various sections of the county was present. Each was anxious that the board should erect school buildings in their neighborhoods. While all of them that were asked for could not be granted at this time, there being in all about twenty, yet the following were decided upon and are advertised for bids to be submitted before June 29th:

The Wilson School, near Bayard; the Minard School, near Deer Park; the Dry Run School, near Bond; the Mt. Zion School, near Chaffee; the Bayard School, near Bayard. The details of constuction are on file at the office of the board and will be gladly shown to anyone interested. The others asked for will be considered at a later meeting, when the financial condition is better understood. As it is, for these five the funds granted by the County Commissioners, will be more than fully required.

The auditing of the books of the board was left, in accordance with the law as pointed out to the board: that is, to the state superintendent of schools, whose duty it is each year to make an audit of these funds.

Mr. William R. Offutt, the only applicant, was elected to serve as attorney to the board for a term of two years at the annual salary of $25.

A petition was presented to the board from citizens of Friendsville, asking that E. A. Browning be appointed principal of the school of that town. After Mr. N. K. Welch had been transferred to the principalship of the Grantsville school, who has been at Friendsville, the wish of the petitioners was duly granted with the proviso that Mr. Browning make every effort to establish a State High School of the Second Class at Friendsville, he is to receive $1,000 per year to conduct and to create the same. The board recorded on its minutes that every effort should be put forth to make this school wholly in accordance with requirements of the law, and thus have in the county two state high schools, and for this one of the second class to receive from the State the sum of $1,000 annually.

An adjournment was then taken by the board to meet Monday, July 1st, at which time the bids for the new buildings will be awarded and the various teachers will be employed whose duty it is for the board to contract with. It was further pointed out that the law will be followed in respect to employing assistant teachers of the schools with the recommendation of the principals.

"BREEZY POINT" AT KINGWOOD

Local Paper There Gave Entertainment a Splendid Recommendation.

The Kingwood Argus printed the following in a recent issue of that paper concerning the production of "Breezy Point" which is scheduled for Oakland on June 20th and 21st at the Maryland Theatre:

The "Breezy Point" entertainments at the armory Thursday and Saturday nights May 23 and 25, were about the best ever given in the town and received many compliments. A fair-sized audience greeted the play both nights and every number on the program was heartily applauded. Every one connected with it deserves great praise for getting up such an entertainment in a week's time. It was gotten up and given under the auspices of the Civic Club, with Miss M. Anna Manges, the daughter of the Lutheran minister at Oakland, Md., as director and leader and star performer, and she is certainly good. Her acting and singing is of a high order and as good as any of the professionals who travel this way. She spent last winter in Michigan directing local talent and plays. She was very much delighted with Kingwood and our people and spoke highly of the talent amongst our young people. Some good judges who witnessed the preformance at the armory declared it the best thing they had ever seen in the town.

Location of New Cemetery.

This paper has received information from an authoritative source that a site, naturally beautiful and located within a very short distance of Oakland, has been secured for the establishment of a new cemetery and that the grounds, comprising about eight acres, will be platted and extensive improvements will be made in the near future.

AMATEUR TRAIN ROBBER GETS NINE YEARS IN PEN

Becker Made a Plea of Guilty for Robbing Passengers on B. & O. Train.

Fred. J. Becker, as will be remembered by many of our readers, who one night last February, entered the rear door of a Pullman sleeping car attached to train No. 1 as it was coming west up the Seventeen-Mile Grade and robbed the passengers and train crew, who was arrested the next morning at a point near where the robbery was occurred and who was brought to Oakland and placed in the Garrett County Jail to await his trial, was arraigned in the Circuit Court here on Monday and made a plea of guilty, through his attorney, Mr. Fred. A. Thayer. Following the plea on the part of the prisoner but one witness, the brakeman, Mr. Peter Singleton, who was on the car when Becker made his haul, was examined. The Court, Judge Robert R. Henderson, sentenced Becker to serve a term of nine years in the Maryland Penitentiary.

The train robbery was made in the most sensational and up-to-date wild-west style. Becker, after he had gained entrance to the car, compelled the passengers as well as the train crew, at the point of a pistol, to disgorge all their money, jewelry and other valuables. The trainmen, cowed by his show of weapons, at his order, assisted in a rapid collection of the loot. Becker dropped off the train at Altamont, the top of the grade, and was making his way back to his home at Keyser, when he was arrested by Baltimore and Ohio detectives.

Other criminal cases disposed of by the Court up to the hour of going to press are as follows:

State vs. Elmer Wilt, burglary, two years in penitentiary; State vs. Elmer Wilt, larceny and receiving stolen goods, 2 years, as above, concurrently. Renninger—Hamill, Sr.

Wilt had broken into the store of the Westernport Mercantile Co., at Swanton, and stolen a quantity of goods.

State vs. Chas. Williams and Chas. Smith. These men were arrested for breaking into Offutt's Big Store, last winter and carrying away overcoats, clothing, etc. Guilty. Williams, one year in penitentiary and Smith, 3 years. Renninger, Legge for Williams; Hamill, Jr., for Smith.

State vs. Geo. A. Bittinger, resisting an officer. This man was declared insane, and ordered to be taken to the asylum at Hyattsville. He had been giving the officers a good deal of trouble shooting at the neighbors, and causing much trouble.

State vs. George Hoover, of Jennings, selling goods on Sunday; three cases; fined $20 and costs, in two cases, other case dismissed on payment of costs.

State vs. Paul J. Hinsky; desertion of wife. To pay her $2.50 a week for one year.

SUPERVISORS ORGANIZE

Mr. W. W. Savage, of Friendsville, Elected President.

The recently appointed members of the Board of Supervisors of Elections, Messrs. Walter W. Savage, of Friendsville, Mr. Gideon J. Gnagey, of Grantsville, Republicans, and Mr. D. M. Mason, of Oakland, organized at the board room in the Court House in Oakland last Monday, by the election of Mr. Savage, President.

Mr. Fred. A. Thayer of Oakland was appointed attorney to the board and Mr. Benj. H. Sincell also of Oakland, was elected clerk.

Another meeting of the Board will be held during the present month, at which time registration officers to serve for a period of one year will be appointed.

Following the adjournment of the board Monday afternoon, Messrs, Savage and Gnagey returned to their respective homes.

Grand Fourth of July Celebration.

The Oak Valley Band will hold a picnic and festival during the day and night at the Kimmel Grove, formerly known as the Fundenberg Farm. Concerts will be given by two brass bands during the day and night. Patriotic addresses will be delivered in the grove at 11 o'clock a. m. In the afternoon there will be all kinds of races and other amusements such as bicycle, egg, sack, potato, wheelbarrow and other races and contests. Baseball game at 3.30 p. m. Dinner and supper will be served in the grove. Cordial invitation to all. Good order guaranteed. Prizes to successful contestants.

AMISH MENNONITE CHURCH.

Second Convention of Progressive Branch Near Grantsville.

The second annual convention of the progressive branch of the Amish Mennonite church was held in the Amish Meeting House, half a mile north of Grantsville. Ministers were present from Missouri, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland. The proceedings were conducted in the Pennsylvania German dialect and pure German. The starting of an orphans' home was approved.

The following were named to select a location and put a competent married couple in charge: John Hershberger, Samuel B. Miller, Joseph Hershberger and Peter Shetler, of Johnson county, Iowa; Joseph Gunder and Daniel Shelter, of Huron county, Michigan; Noah Brenneman of Bittinger, Md., and C. W. Bender, of Elk Lick, Pa.

A church paper has been started at Scottdale, Pa., with E. C. Bontrager, of Minnesota, as editor. It is printed in both German and English. Simon B. Miller and Jacob D. Gingerich were secretaries.

The Amish sect is strong among the farmers of Garrett county, Md.; Preston county, W. Va., and Somerset county, Pa.

Farmers' Institutes.

The annual meetings of the farmers of Garrett County will be held this year as usual under the auspices of the Department of Farmers Institutes of the Maryland Agricultural College. These meetings have increased in number and the attendance of the farmer and his wife and family last year exceeded in some instances the capacity of the hall.

An interesting program has been arranged by the director, Dr Richard S. Hill for four meeting of three sessions each to be held at Accident, June 17th; Oakland, June 18th; Bittinger, June 19th; Grantsville, Jume 20th, at 10 a.m. 1.30 and 8 p. m. Subjects to be discussed: Soil Fertility, Lime, W. Oscar Collier. Live Stock, R. H. Ruffner. Poultry, Geo. O. Brown, Rural Sanitation, Mrs. Effa Funk Muhse, Ph. D. Alfalfa, the Director. The meeting at Oakland will be in the Court House and in the School houses at the other places.

You are all invited to attend your Institute, ask questions and take part in the discussions.

Resolutians of Respect.

WHEREAS, The relentless hand of death has removed from from our midst Meshac Mattingly; and

WHEREAS, He was the careful and efficient president of the Farmers' Union Association and Fire Insurance Company of Garrett County, Md., ever since its organization, fifteen years ago; therefore be it

Resolved, By the Farmers' Union Association and Fire Insurance Company of Garrett County:

1st. That we knew Mr. Mattingly to be a considerate, painstaking officer in our organization, always cheerful, patient and kind, thorough in his investigations of the truth, performing his official duties conscientiously and faithfully.

2nd. That we as a company have lost a man of sterling character and worth, one who always stood for the right without fear, favor or partiality and did his work well.

3rd. That while we sadly deplore our loss and feel it irrepairable we bow in submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in our minutes; that a copy be furnished the bereaved family; that a copy be furnished the county papers for publication.

WM. T. STANTON, President,
WM. M. FRAZEE, Secretary.

Resolutions of Condolence.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom to call from our midst brother Meshach Mattingly, of Hoyes; therefore be it

Resolved, That we as directors of the Garrett County Telephone Co., of Hoyes, Md., with a vast number of others who knew deceased, whom to know was to respect and honor. We fully realize that the Company has lost one of its best members, one who was always ready and willing to give advice and counsel, but we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

Be it resolved, That we extend to the family our heartfelt sympathy.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased and one to each of the county papers and one be spread on the minutes of the Company.

What the Well-Dressed Woman Will Wear

ONE little feature in dress, if well exploited, catches hold of the public mind in an amazingly strong way, writes Anne Rittenhouse in the Boston Herald. Each season has its special little point; each great house has its special way of exploitation; last year it was the revolutionary slash in the skirt; this year it is the flounce near the knee.

The latter is not one hundredth part as much of an experiment as the former. Not since the days of the directoire did women attempt anything so daring as the division of a plain skirt. Every one thought the world had gone mad when the idea was again taken hold of a year ago, and the world was rather right, for Worth has most pungently said that when the times are crazy woman's dress is crazy.

There are students of sociology and laymen who are not averse to saying that the times are quite crazy enough to suit any one, and it is probably for that reason that we see such liberties taken in the name of clothes.

Whatever the reason, it is better to face the truth that the Directorie slash in a skirt was not only projected but accepted, and while we see it on every hand, especially in evening gowns, there is little comment, if any, concerning it.

Now the flounce is more modest than the slash. One is an effort to reveal; the other an effort to conceal. The flounce means more, however, than merely this to the majority. It sounds the knell of the freakish tight skirt. It implies the recrudescence of drapery. It means to the average mind that women will now be clothed, and it is, therefore, the symbol of modesty.

It is a hard-hearted thing to start out to overturn this impression, because there are many who cling to it as a sign of returning moral grace on the part of women, whom they think have lost all the finer senses during this prolonged debauch of eccentric and conspicuous dressing.

Truth About the Flounce.

Yet the truth remains. The flounce as it is today may be a symbol of something that is to come after many moons, but it doesn't mean much change in narrow skirts and slim silhouettes for the present. There is no doubt that any drapery is a graceful addition to a too tight, too plain skirt, yet the flounce of today is so slim and economically cut that it adds little to the fulness of any skirt. However, it breaks the line that has become too severe and too close for many figures.

Naturally, the woman who is long of limb and slim of hip is vain enough to want to wear the silhouette skirt, which gives her more grace, or rather displays what grace she has, but even with banting and dieting and exercise every woman has not acquired grace even if she has been abandoned by flesh.

But if flounces are to be in fashion then we will wear flounces, for it is what the people get that the people pretend they want, which is twisting Mr. Lincoln's saying out of any original semblance to its truth. Cecile Sorel, allied to Redfern, is credited with the innovation in the way of lace flounces, which she translates as the adaptation of Louis XVI. styles.

Over Pink Satin Skirt.

In the manner they are used now it is a long way after the gowns of that day, but it serves very well as a term. One of the best of these frocks has a 15-inch lace flounce draped over a shell pink satin skirt beginning well above the knees in front and draped around to a deep point at the back.

This gives a certain fulness at an important line, for the tightness at the knee was always the ugliest feature of the new skirt; if the lace flounce is full, it, too, is ugly, for, mind you, the lower skirt has not changed its width during all this talk of increased fulness, which has been going on since January. The flounce must be scant to be in keeping with the line beneath, and it therefore remains not much of an addition after all.

The tunic, which has been growing in favor every day, is really far more of an addition in the way of fulness than the flounce, and people paid very little attention to it as an experiment in width; the reason they are harping so upon the flounce is that the word, which is the same as ruffle, carries a direct thought of fulness to the minds of most people.

How the Flounce Is Used.

There is such a variety of opinion about the best way to use a flounce among the dressmakers that one can see almost any kind of experiment, good and bad, among the new models. The majority cling to the feeling that the flounce must be arranged without fulness, so we see on the new taffeta frocks as well as the smart little serge and corduroy ones either five or six flounces which are put on without a gathering string and are shaped like petals at the lower edges.

These do not increase the width, nor do they give a semblance of fulness, but they do something which is very ornate and very attractive, they loosen up the rigidity of a tight line around the body from hips to hem, and this is quite a graceful thing to do; and I, for one, am glad the dressmakers thought of it.

The narrow skirt should stay, whether it does or not, for it belongs to the life and the atmosphere of the busy American woman, who hasn't time to contend against full plaited skirts that impede her movements, and she hasn't the strength to do all she sets out to do and bear an extra ounce of clothes-weight in addition. The narrow skirt should be adopted as a uniform, provided it is a graceful narrow skirt, and not one that hinders walking and which curves in at the knees in an ugly line.

If one can keep to the original slimness, which means comfort and lack of weight, and then adorn it with narrow flounces and scallops, it would seem we have arrived at the best interpretation of the slim frock.

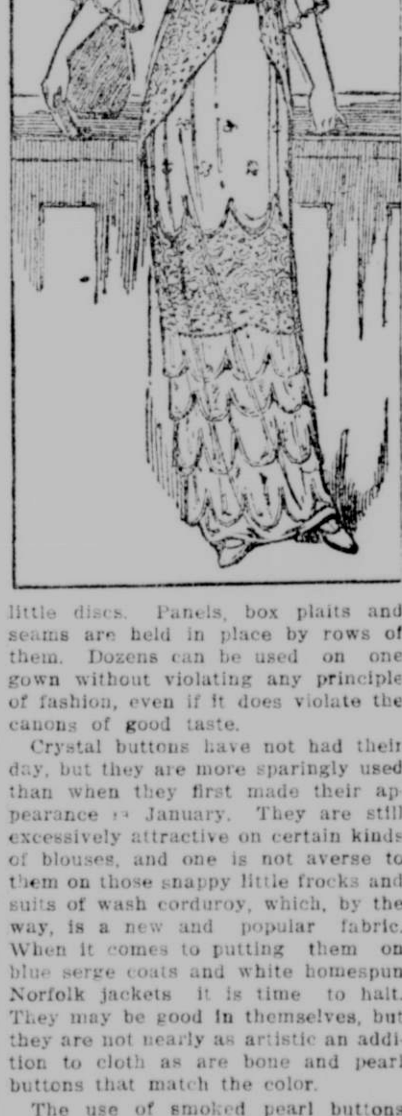
Lace Flounces Pretty.

The lace flounces which are now used on evening gowns are exceptionally attractive. All house fabrics are so diaphanous that the addition of lace means nothing and conveys a pleasant impression to the eye. The evening gown of today is not only of rainbow coloring, but of rainbow substance; when there is a slip of mauve chiffon covered with one of flesh-pink, which, in turn, has a tunic of tulle, the mere adding of thread lace is simple.

These flounces are wide or narrow, as the weaver wishes; in the latter case two and three are used, and between them are usually puffs of the chiffon, merely to show that the tight line around the ankle is not to be abandoned. Young girls, or women who have a girlish appearance, are having these flounces caught with bunches of pink chiffon roses, which are all the fashion just now, and are used in place of other trimming when possible.

Part Buttons Play.

It would almost look as though every cutter of a bad seam had gotten the trimmer to cover it up with ornate buttons, so general is the use of these little discs. Panels, box plaits and seams are held in place by rows of them. Dozens can be used on one gown without violating any principle of fashion, even if it does violate the canons of good taste.



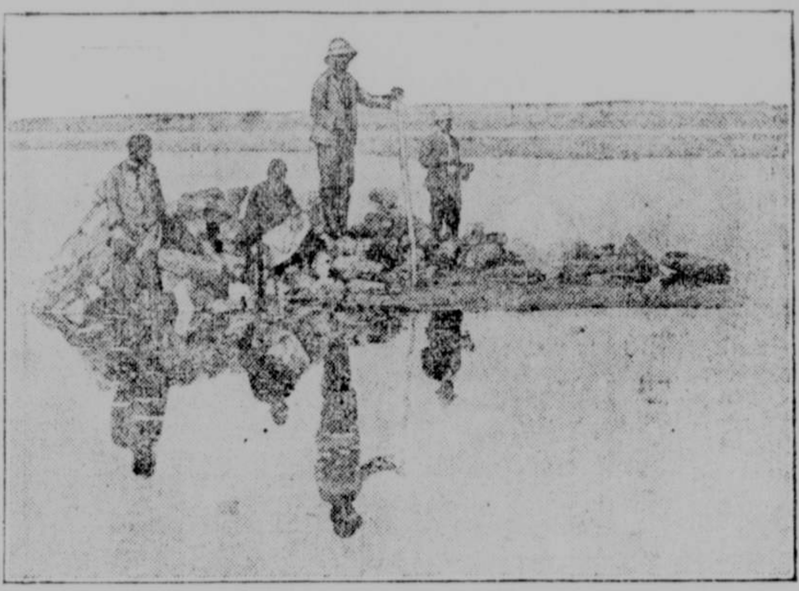
Crystal buttons have not had their day, but they are more sparingly used than when they first made their appearance in January. They are still excessively attractive on certain kinds of blouses, and one is not averse to them on those snappy little frocks and suits of wash corduroy, which, by the way, is a new and popular fabric. When it comes to putting them on blue serge coats and white homespun Norfolk jackets it is time to halt. They may be good in themselves, but they are not nearly as artistic an addition to cloth as are bone and pearl buttons that match the color.

The use of smoked pearl buttons is liberal. The gray tones are neutral, and, therefore, blend with nearly all the prevailing colors except brown, and they give a touch of smartness to coats made in a certain way. Mother-of-pearl buttons with their opalescent colorings will be popular for all manner of late spring and summer clothes, and they have made their appearance on lingerie blouses, especially those of oyster white cotton marquisette.

Dainty Lace Frock.

Creamy lace will press white lingerie effects hard for the lead in favor this summer, according to prophesies. The dainty cream lace frock by Toussaint Soeurs, shown in the illustration, is made of net in combination with a new lace which has an allover design applique batiste motifs on fine net. The scallops bound with satin, which form the skirt, are a new feature and the short tunic, which gives a cutaway effect at the front, slopes down steeply at the back joining a panel which reaches to the ankles. The creamy tone of the lace is emphasized by the cluster of red velvet flowers at the girdle.

Sea of Soda Like a Mirror



At Magadi, in the East African protectorate, is a wonderful deposit of soda, a great commercial asset which will materially advance the prosperity of the British colony. Magadi is situated between the monster extinct volcano Kilimanjaro and the escarpment which forms the boundary of the main plateau. The lake is like a mirror and the great stretch of alkali beds glistens like an ice-bound loch of the northern regions.

ZEBRA-DONKEY A SUCCESS

The creation of a new type is always interesting; the effort of the government to breed a zebra-donkey, or a zebra-horse is particularly so since they already appear measurably successful. The animal breeders of the department of agriculture were impressed some years ago with the splendid conformation, large size and great beauty of the big Grevy zebra which was presented to President Roosevelt by King Menelik of Abyssinia, and which found a home at the National Zoological park at Washington. The zebra was bred to donkeys and the resulting hybrids are apparently great successes, a half dozen colts and fillies now poking their noses over the fences at visitors to the zoo. So far as markings are concerned they show somewhat faint reproductions of the strongly marked black and white stripes of the zebra stallion, but their parentage is evident. They are, however, as hardy, apparently, and endure the climate of Washington as well as the donkeys.

The striking feature of the crossbreeding is that the hybrids show a decided improvement in other respects over both parents in action, conformation and disposition. The Grevy stallion weighs 800 pounds and is 13½ hands high, and while he is a beauty, he is not particularly affectionate; on the contrary he is vicious. The average weight of the donkey dams is 550, twelve hands high. The weight of the hybrids when only a year old was 500 and they stood twelve hands high. They have good action, a neat, clean-cut appearance, and are as gentle as horses' foals of the same age.

The hybrids ought to be tough, for the zebra in Africa is about the toughest thing in the horse line in the world, and he apparently loses none of these qualities by change of residence. The hybrids, then, should develop into animals with much greater endurance than the mule, and should be almost as large.

The zebra in Africa is immune to many diseases and pests which kill off horses and mules, and it is expected that the new hybrids will prove themselves more hardy and disease resistant than even the famous Missouri army mule.

SHEEP THAT LED BATTALION

While making a practice march in the French Alps, near Sospel, a short while ago, a battalion of the Twenty-seventh Chasseurs Alpins became lost in a fog. The officer in command of the battalion asked his men if any of them possessed a compass, but no one had one. The situation appeared inextricable, when a stray sheep appeared in sight. The lieutenant immediately ordered his men to follow the animal, which quickly led them to the nearest village.

CATHEDRALS IN AFRICA

Christianity is slowly spreading over Africa. There are 15 Episcopal cathedrals and 12 Roman Catholic on the dark continent in addition to numerous churches of all denominations.

DEATH HARVEST OF JUNGLE

Deaths from attacks by wild animals in India are increasing in number. Rising waters have driven serpents from the lowland jungles up to the villages, and have diminished through drowning the natural food supply of the larger wild beasts. Over 2,000 persons were killed in 1910 by elephants, tigers, hyenas, bears, leopards, wolves, wild pigs and other animals. Over 22,000 were killed by snakes. The grand total of mortality was nearly 24,000 persons. At the same time 93,000 cattle were killed by snakes and wild beasts. The inhabitants of the jungle also suffered by reprisals on the part of their human enemies. Ninety-one thousand snakes and 19,000 wild beasts were killed.

DEVIL'S ORGANS OF ICE

In the valley of the Great St. Bernard, in Switzerland, are a number of formations of ice known there as "Devil's Organs." They get their name from the weird whistles the wind causes them to utter. The icicles are often 100 to 150 feet long.

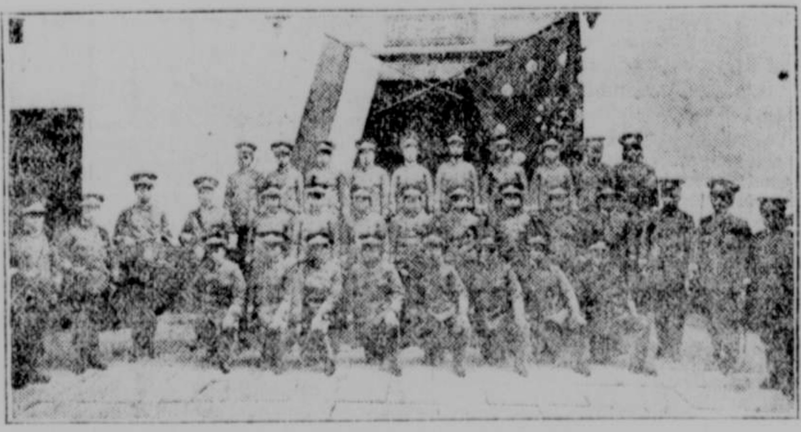
GLASS EGG DIET KILLS DOG

Jackson Axby of Lawrenceburg, Ind., was firm in the belief that his thoroughbred English bloodhound had been poisoned. Veterinarians confirmed his suspicions. After the hound died its body was cut open and four nest eggs of the glass variety were found in the stomach. Axby had put the eggs in nests to encourage his hens to lay. He noticed recently the supply of eggs had fallen off, although the hens appeared to be in laying condition. It is believed the dog had been sucking the eggs, and failing with the glass variety, swallowed them.

THESE BEES CAME BACK

A swarm of bees played a queer trick on R. Griffin of Great Barrington, Mass., a short while ago. He bought the swarm from a farmer, Albert Swift, wrapped a blanket about the hive and drove with it 14 miles to his home. The bees seemed lonesome and stuck close to the hive in Great Barrington for some days. Then one morning early the entire swarm of several thousand was back on an apple tree in bloom on Mr. Swift's farm. Mr. Swift decided to buy back his homesick bees.

Amazon Corps of China



The Chinese Amazon Corps, styled in their Chinese name "The Heroines of the Red Powder," took an active part in the revolution which has resulted in the establishment of the republic. These Amazons are ladies, mostly students, of good family.

Farm and Road Improvement

SOLVE CORNER POST PROBLEM

Use of Heavy Stone or Concrete Post Will Be Practically Everlasting—Method Is Shown.

An old method of setting a firm corner post, but one not known by everybody, is the "dead man" way, which is fully described and illustrated by Carl Brann, of Linn county, Kansas, in the Homestead. The corner post is set and the brace extended to the bottom of the second post in the usual way as shown in Fig. 1, but the guy wires from the top of the second post pass on both sides of the brace and of the corner post near the ground, and being crossed back of the post pass around a large stone or piece of durable wood buried in the ground. These wires are then twisted between the posts to make them tight and hold firmly in place about the brace and corner post. A corner so set cannot pull up. However, as the best galvanized wire will rust off in a few years in the ground the life of such a corner is not so long as may be desired. The use of a heavy stone or concrete post set in the same manner without the "dead man" will be practically everlasting, but in many cases the cost of the stone or concrete post, or some other consideration, makes the plan impracticable. The following method (shown in Fig. 2) has been successful where it was impossible to dig deeply. Three posts were set at a distance of ten or twelve feet apart. Then the brace and guy wires were attached to the second and third posts in the manner usually employed between the corner and second posts. A guy wire was run from the top of the second post to the corner post at the ground and a stout board or 2x4 nailed to the upper ends of the first and second posts. The wire of the fence was then stretched to the second post and wrapped around it. The space between that and the corner post was closed with fencing boards or wire, as was most convenient.

MAINTENANCE OF GOOD ROADS

Cannot Be Kept in Proper Condition Unless Kept Well Drained and Free From Holes.

No earth road can be maintained in good condition unless it be so constructed as to drain well, and unless it be kept free from ruts and holes.

The best method of maintaining an earth road, especially a prairie road, is by the systematic use of the road drag. A sand road is never good under any circumstances, but certainly is not improved by crowning. A sand road is at its best when moist, so it should be left flat. No one wants a sand road, so, if possible, clay should be added to, and mixed with the sand, making what is known as a sand clay road.

The old way, and it is used today by many, of filling a mud hole with brush with a little earth on top, cannot be too strongly condemned, and is only permissible in cases of emergency, when it is impossible to drain the hole or to get sand or stone to fill it. The overseer or foreman should in dry weather center his work on such places until the road is raised to a sufficient height to drain well. Many overseers have brush hauled two miles to fill a mud hole, when sand is within shoveling distance of it.

If farmers do not take a community interest in the improvement of the roads and put their shoulders to the wheel we will surely remain "stuck in the mud."

Manure and Silage Corn.

Twenty tons of corn silage an acre were harvested last fall by George L. Hyslop of Ohio. He uses it for fattening cattle and hogs. The most interesting thing about this yield is that it is the result of proper utilization of barnyard manure. The manure shed has an important place on the farm.

Function of Barnyard Manure.

Barnyard manure is very essential in garden making because it furnishes both plant food and humus. It also warms the soil and makes it easier and cheaper cultivated. It cannot easily be dispensed with.

Squash Bugs.

Squash bugs may be trapped by laying shingles near the plants. The bugs will be found under them early in the morning.

Usefulness of Hypatia

When it was finally decided to tear down the old building in one back room of which Mr. Bellamy and several of his cronies had met on Thursday evenings to play skat and enjoy other festivities appropriate to the occasion, the burning question of the hour became what to do with the club house cat.

"One of you fellows," said the man who owned the house and incidentally had owned the cat, "ought to take care of her. Hypatia is a good cat and fine looker. It would be a shame to turn her out into the street with no home and no friends. Bellamy, she has always been fond of you. What's the matter with your taking her?"

"Me?" exclaimed Bellamy. "Me? Good Lord! My wife hates cats."

"Meow!" interrupted Hypatia, and rubbed patches of her new summer garments off on the leg of his trousers. Bellamy softened at that mark of confidence.

"Never mind, old girl," he said, "I won't go back on you. We'll go up to the house together and see what we can do."

Bellamy carried Hypatia home in a hat box. Mrs. Bellamy viewed the bundle with suspicion and alarm.

"What have you there?" she asked.

"Just a little surprise," said Bellamy lamely.

He raised the lid of the box and Hypatia, released from her unwonted confinement, jumped half way across the room.

"A cat!" she cried. "Why, Harvey, that is a cat. What did you bring her here for?"

"To kill the mice," said Bellamy.

"Mice?" she echoed. "Why, there isn't a mouse about the place."

"There ain't?" said Bellamy excitedly. "Great Scott, haven't you heard 'em? Why, the way they rampage through the walls every night playing golf and baseball is enough to wake the dead. I haven't been able to sleep for a week on account of the racket. That's the reason I got Hypatia. I want her to kill them off."

So for one night at least Hypatia was permitted to enjoy the hospitality of the Bellamys. The next morning Bellamy took his time at dressing. His wife, being curious concerning the welfare of her unwelcome guest, preceded him to the store room where Hypatia had been quartered for the night, and cautiously opened the door. As Hypatia rushed out she looked in and straightway sounded a ringing call to arms. Bellamy bolted down the hall from one direction and the cook from the other.

"What is the matter?" they asked.

"A mouse!" responded Mrs. Bellamy, weakly, and keeled over against the wall. Bellamy held the rodent at arm's length and flourished it by the tip of the tail triumphantly.

"What did I tell you?" he said. "Didn't I say the house is alive with them?"

"Yes," admitted his wife. "It's funny I never heard them, though. I suppose we'll have to keep Hypatia another night now.

Immediately after breakfast Mrs. Bellamy summoned the janitor and pointed to the moribund mouse.

"Henry," she said severely, "what is that?"

A look of consternation overspread the big Swede's infantile face.

"A maas," he gasped. "A maas. Whare you gat heem?"

If the cultivation of mice in a private apartment had been the height of human ambition Mrs. Bellamy could have betrayed exultation no more complete than that which thrilled her voice as she replied:

"Here. Right here in our own flat. I want you to clean out my storeroom and take up my carpets and rugs and stop up all the rat holes. The things will eat us alive if we don't get rid of them."

Although the bewildered Swede worked until bedtime tearing up carpets and moving furniture, neither mice nor their means of egress and ingress were discovered. Nevertheless that night Hypatia slew two more of her hereditary foes.

"I am going out this afternoon to look for a flat. I can't stand it to be eaten by mice," said Mrs. Bellamy.

She really did start, but she had got no further than her own hall door when she met a boy who wanted to see Mr. Bellamy.

"What do you want to see him about?" she asked.

"Oh, nothin' much," was the vague reply.

Mrs. Bellamy opened the door to the widest limit.

"Little boy," she said, with seductive graciousness, "wouldn't you like a dish of pudding and some fruit?"

"Yes, ma'am," said the boy.

She entertained him for half an hour. As a result of the interview she abandoned her intention of looking for another flat.

"I am glad of that," said Bellamy that evening when appraised of her decision. "Where is Hypatia?"

The distilled sweetness of Mrs. Bellamy's voice was positively cloying.

"I gave her," she said, "to little Billy Moses. He was up here this afternoon to see if you want him to deliver any more dead mice, and to collect for those he has already furnished. He says his father's shop is overrun with them, and I thought he might find Hypatia useful."

BIBLE PURGATORY EXISTS IN THIS LIFE.

"Saved So as by Fire" Is Not Literal Fire.

Pastor Russell Points Out That Dante's Picture of Purgatory Has Little Foundation In Bible—Thinks Many Have Been Under Kind of Hoodoo.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Kansas City, Mo., June 9.—Pastor Russell spoke twice here today. We quote his discourse from the text, "Saved so as by fire" (I Corinthians iii. 15). He said in part:—

The Catholic thought of Purgatory has been opposed by Protestants upon the plea that Purgatory is not mentioned in the Bible. Let us admit that no such Purgatory as Dante pictured has any volume of foundation. Let us admit that not all that Catholics have claimed respecting Purgatory is either Scriptural or logical.

But let us admit also that there are Scriptures (of which our text is one) which tell of a salvation by "fire" that evidently is not the salvation in which the "elect" of God will participate as "more than conquerors" through obediently following in the footsteps of Jesus their Redeemer. Indeed, our text is the principal one used by our Catholic brethren in support of their Purgatory.

Purgatory In Our Text.

But if the Pastor did not agree with the Protestants that there is no Purgatory taught in the Bible, neither did he agree with the Catholics respecting the kind of a Purgatory, for he proceeded to show that his text referred, not to a place of suffering, a purgation that existed in the Apostle's day, but that the Apostle was here speaking prophetically, of the end of this Gospel Age—foretelling a purgatorial condition at that time—not after men have died, nor in another world, but in the present life, and on this earth.

Indeed, said Pastor Russell, not only is the fire of this text symbolical of trouble, but the same is true of nearly all that is said about fire in the Bible. There is a process of destruction, consumption. God's righteousness is spoken of as a consuming fire which burns against all sin and unrighteousness.

The context shows that the Apostle is discussing the Church in her earthly estate; that some of the brethren would not at the time appreciate the difference between "the gold, silver and precious stones" of the Divine promises and the cheaper materials—likening them to "wood, hay and stubble;" but that a day would come in the end of the Age when the Lord would specially test His people and when the tests would be severe and crucial like fire. In that day wood, hay and stubble would be consumed; but the gold, silver and precious stone characteristics of the true faith and proper character-building would remain. We are not to understand him to mean that doctrines are all-important, but rather that they are reflected in the character-development of the individual who without them would be unable to stand in the testings that would surely come in the close of this Age.

The Apostle points out, however, that all who build their faith on Christ will eventually be saved, no matter how much error they may get into—even though their entire faith structure is wrong and will be consumed in the foretold fiery trial. All who build faith on Him, in full accord with the Divine Revelation, obediently, will become joint-heirs with the Redeemer in His Kingdom, while those who build their faith on Him, and maintain it even through error, will be eventually saved, though to a lower salvation. Theirs will be a purgatorial experience—purifying, sanctifying, fitting them for an inferior blessing on the spirit plane, serving before the throne instead of in the throne.

Living In Time Mentioned In Text.

Apparently we are now living in the very time mentioned in our text. Many of God's people under the fiery trials of "higher criticism" and "science falsely so called" experienced a loss of all the faith they possessed, because they possessed only the wood, hay and stubble of human tradition, and not the gold, silver and precious jewels of the Divine Revelation.

Indeed, according to prophecy, we see that the time is fast approaching when God will have a further reckoning with the Gentiles and especially with the portion called Christendom. Richly favored, the responsibilities have been proportionate. The squaring of that account means "a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation."

But it will not be in another world nor in another life nor eternal in duration. Instead, God will merely permit the race, in selfishness of heart rejecting His counsels, to wreck present civilization to such an extent that, unless those days were shortened, there would no flesh be saved. But on account of the elect those days will be shortened, by the establishment of God's Kingdom, to restrain evil, to enlighten the world and to assist the willing and obedient back into the image and likeness of God.

The Runabout Girl

By LOUISE MERRIFIELD

(Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.)

"To begin with," Austin interjected forcibly from his unseen location beneath the jacked-up car, "no woman should be allowed to touch a machine. It's death and destruction to the world the minute you put one at a wheel."

"She's driven a car abroad—"

"Where the roads are smoothed paths of dalliance for cars of joy. A one-eyed Chink with a cork arm could drive a car abroad."

"Was she hurt?" asked Forbes. He sat up, with a tightening of his muscles at the sudden grip of pain from his wrenched shoulder and racked ribs.

"Hurt? No. A bit rumpled and excited. When she saw you were alive, she passed over a delicate handful of regrets and rode on."

He dragged himself out, pushed back his cap from a soiled perspiring face, and reached down after his pipe. Overhead in a rock maple a family of robins sounded a melodious concert of protest against the invasion of the solitude by these roadsters. Below the road swept the river between great hills. It was June, June in New England, with the mountain laurel clinging in great clusters of pink bloom to every craggy foothold it could find in the granite cheek of the hills, and a haze of tender beauty flushing the whole land.

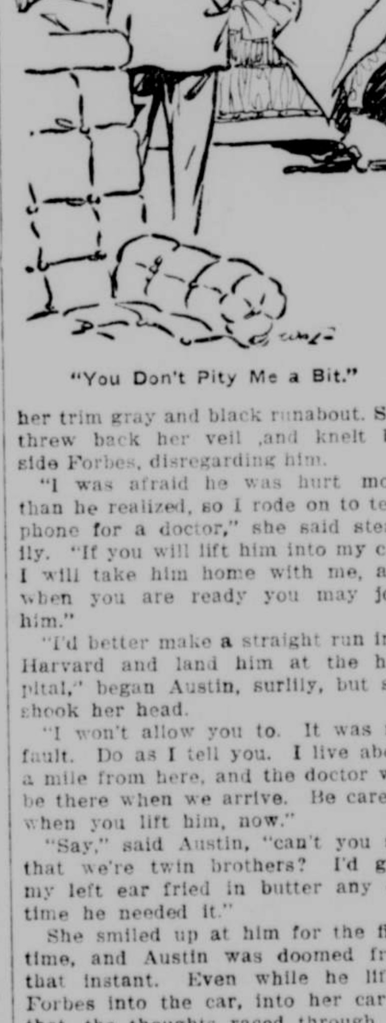
"Whereabouts are we?" asked Forbes.

"About fifteen miles east of Hartford. Need a hospital, Jack?"

"She said she lived near. Mark the map. I'm coming back."

It was a grim joke. Also, it was his last for awhile. Austin just missed catching him as he keeled heavily over, face down in the grass. And even while he knelt there, trying to force a drink between the set teeth, there came the clear, wavering sweetness of her horn around the bend of the board. Austin knew it instantly. Had he not heard it not twenty minutes before, just as they crashed together? Looking down at the deathlike face of his friend and pal, he cursed it now, and its owner.

She drew up close to the big red car. Austin's eyes must have showed their frank disapproval of her and of her trim gray and black runabout. She threw back her veil and knelt beside Forbes, disregarding him.



"You Don't Pity Me a Bit."

"I was afraid he was hurt more than he realized, so I rode on to telephone for a doctor," she said steadily. "If you will lift him into my car, I will take him home with me, and when you are ready you may join him."

"I'd better make a straight run into Harvard and land him at the hospital," began Austin, surlily, but she shook her head.

"I won't allow you to. It was my fault. Do as I tell you. I live about a mile from here, and the doctor will be there when we arrive. Be careful when you lift him, now."

"Say," said Austin, "can't you see that we're twin brothers? I'd give my left ear fried in butter any old time he needed it."

She smiled up at him for the first time, and Austin was doomed from that instant. Even while he lifted Forbes into the car, into her car at that, the thoughts raced through his head dizzily. He stood and watched the vanishing blotch of grey down the road thereafter. Surely the day was playing strange tricks with him. They had started for Boston, escaped all terrors from New York on, and had been knocked out cleanly and neatly by this same natty little French runabout and its driver.

"It was he who did it," muttered Austin. "He saw her coming, and stuck us into the bank, and the telegraph pole did the rest. But she's some kid, all right. I wish it was me."

The runabout sped along the highway for a mile, and turned in a driveway under huge elms. Once or twice the girl turned to take a quick searching look at the face that lay back on the cushion beside her. She frowned, and raised the car up to third speed. When the house came in view, the first sigh of relief came from her own lips. She sounded the horn several times in a troubled, nervous call for help that quavered on the still noon air vibrantly.

"Not dead, I hope," called a cheery voice from the shaded veranda, and she lifted her face to it eagerly. Another car stood at the side entrance, and she knew it was the doctor.

With the help of the gardener, Forbes was lifted into the house, and laid on a couch in the quiet, old-fashioned sitting room. Ruth stood by during the examination, ready with anything the doctor should need. The coat and shirt had to be cut away from the dislocated shoulder.

"Now then, we'll just slip this back where it belongs, and it's mighty good for him he won't feel it. Hold his head over there, Miss Hopewell. Just balance it on your shoulder, will you?"

Which made a striking picture to Bart Austin, just entering. He hesitated on the threshold, watching with lowered chin, catching that strange little click as the bone slipped into its place, catching, too, the agonized groan from Forbes' lips, as he was hauled back to consciousness by the pain. But most of all, in the picture, there stood the slim kneeling form of the girl, holding Forbes' head on her own arm, and soothing him with low, swift words of womanly sympathy.

"Couple of broken ribs, and a crippled wrist. Better stay here and be nursed up a bit," said the doctor, later.

"Mother insists that he stay, as it was all my fault," said Ruth, gently.

Austin stood over Forbes at the couch by the open window.

"I'll take you up to Hartford to the hospital, if you say the word, old man," he said, in a low tone. "The car's all right now. She only rammed her nose into the bank anyhow, and bumped her beauty spots a bit. It was you who hit the telegraph pole. Don't you want to get out of this cozy corner?"

"No, I don't," returned Forbes, placidly, half closing his blue eyes, "I'm very badly hurt, Bart. You don't pity me a bit. You run on to Boston, and attend to business there, and pick me up on the return trip. That's a week hence. Say, take a look out of the window and tell me the color of the roses on that bush. I can't think clearly for the scent of them."

"They're little red ones, crimson rambler," said Bart, but Ruth turned her head and smiled.

"The red ones have only a very faint scent, Mr. Austin. Those that he likes are the large cream white ones. We call them bride's roses out here."

It was a month before Bart Austin's big red roadster found its way along the river road again, and up the drive under the elms. He waited a minute or two, and sounded his horn. It was an alarmist, that horn, none of your sweet-voiced sirens for Bart.

Presently Mrs. Hopewell came slowly down the broad veranda steps. She was slender and charming even at forty-seven, a faded edition of Ruth at eighteen.

"How are you?" said Bart, cheerfully, lifting his leather cap. "I'm Bart Austin, Forbes' friend. I hope he's all right now. I told him I'd stop on the way home from Boston and pick him up, but I was delayed a bit."

Mrs. Hopewell smiled amusedly, and shook her head.

"Oh, dear, you're very much too late. Ruth and Jack were married three days ago, and have started on their wedding trip in the runabout. Jack was very hasty, I thought, but he wanted to be married while the bride's roses were still in bloom. For a business man, he has quite a good deal of sentiment."

Austin's face was buried in his hands, and his shoulders shook with laughter.

"Sentiment?" he repeated. "Well, if you don't mind, Mrs. Hopewell, I'd call it a balmy touch of sunshine beneath his curling locks. And yet—" he hesitated. Mrs. Hopewell was moving away graciously. Bart addressed the empty car as the one sure place of sympathy. "Yet she was certainly all girl. I wish I'd hit that telegraph pole myself."

The Piano.

The proper placing of an upright piano in a room of moderate size is to turn it at right angles to the side wall, leaving room between the keyboard and the opposite wall for the player. Then stand a table, if possible an old-fashioned mahogany one with folding leaf which can be turned up against the back of the piano. There must, of course, be some drapery to cover the unpolished back of the piano. A piece of good-looking tapestry, brocaded silk, embroidered crepe, or even of cretonne, draped loosely over the top and back, but not laid in set folds, would be suitable. On the table stand a plant, a bit of pottery, a brass candlestick or possibly a lamp.

From a musical standpoint the piano is placed in the best position, for the notes are free instead of muffled.

For Education.

The "continuation school," which was created in Ohio by a law which recently went into effect, provides that every girl between the ages of fourteen and sixteen who has not completed the eighth grade, must spend "not more than eight hours a week nor less than four hours" at some continuation school at times most convenient for the employers and employes. It is mandatory on employers to see that the act is enforced. The curriculum is of extremely wide range, designed so as to include practical instruction in the many pursuits in which the girls are employed regularly, and to give such instruction as can be put into immediate practice.

MONEY SQUANDERED ON DRINK

Bill for Alcoholic Liquors in the United States Amounts to $3,000,000,000 Every Year.

The amount of money we spend every year in the United States, directly and indirectly, for liquor would give a two weeks' vacation to every man, woman and child in the land, with their board and expenses paid. We spend $1,500,000,000 a year for alcoholic drinks, and we spend as much more for judges, police, jails, poor houses and insane asylums to take care of the people who get into trouble through hard drink. That makes $3,000,000,000, or $30 apiece for everybody. For a family of father, mother and four children it amounts to $180 a year, a nice sum for an outing in the country.

It is estimated that 1,500,000 men and women in the United States are every day either mentally or physically disabled for work as a result of drink. Investigation among almshouses shows that more than half of the inmates become paupers on account of drink. That means that more than 1,500,000 people who have put themselves out of business through drink have to be fed and cared for at the expense of the honest hard-working people who do not drink. Warden Roberts of the New York almshouse on Blackwell's island, declared that he believed nine-tenths of the inmates came there through drink. Dr. T. D. Crothers asserts that one person out of every ten who dies goes to his grave on account of the abuse of alcohol, and one-fifth of all diseases of mankind are traceable to alcohol.

It is commonly supposed that there is no harm in drinking if the person does not become intoxicated. But doctors are constantly meeting cases of paralysis caused by alcohol in those who never become intoxicated. And besides this, it is known that people who drink very moderately are not so well able to resist when attacked by disease. People who drink even moderately run much greater risk of death in surgical operations. People who use alcoholic beverages have more diseases than people who do not drink. Dr. Alexander Lamber of New York asserts that of the 24,300 patients in Bellevue hospital during one year, over one-fourth were alcoholic patients. The startling statement is made by Professor Cutten that out of every 100 alcoholics attacked by pneumonia 70 die, while out of every 100 people who are not drinkers only 23 die when attacked by pneumonia.

If it could be shown that the drinking man had better brains, or better muscles, or better earning power, or lived longer than the man who did not drink, there might be some argument in favor of drink, even in spite of all that has just been said. But thousands of experiments have shown that the brain worker and the laboring man are both at a disadvantage if they drink.

Experiments in the French army showed that under all circumstances the French soldier is 40 per cent. more efficient when subjected to a regimen of total abstinence. Generals Roberts and Kitchener in Africa proved the same fact about the British army. Laboring men who used to feel the necessity of having their dram regularly in order to do their work and do it well, now know they were formerly deceived, and that they are better workmen without drink. So well is this understood by practical business men that many large railroads and other employers of labor have prohibited the use of alcoholic liquors by employes at all times. Some marine insurance companies made a reduction of 5 per cent. in insurance rates to ships on which no liquors are drunk during the voyage.

DECREASE OF DRINK HABIT

Moving Picture Palace Proves Counter Attraction to Drinking Bars in Small English Town.

Reference was made at the Oldham licensing sessions, in England, lately, to the good effect of competition of picture shows on public houses. The chief constable expressed the view that the decrease of drunkenness in the town was largely due to the fact that the picture palaces which had sprung up during the past two years had drawn many persons from the public houses. Until the last scene was over there was scarcely any business at the bars, hotels being practically empty. Dr. J. Yates of the board emphasized this view. It was evident, he said, that pictures were going to be a permanent form of entertainment for the people, and if well conducted, they could be a means of rational enjoyment, and also of instruction, forming a strong and useful counter-attraction to the drinking bars.

Health Secured.

"A man or woman who abstains is healthy and safe. A man or woman who indulges is unsafe. A man or woman who relies on alcohol for support is lost."—Sir B. W. Richardson, M. D.

Harder Work Without Alcohol.

"To a person in good health alcohol is not in the least necessary or beneficial; he will do harder and sounder work without it."—Dr. H. Maudsley.

FOR THOSE WHO LIKE TO SEE A JOB THOROUGHLY DONE.

The Taft steam roller seems to be doing its work pretty thoroughly at Chicago. Anyone who likes to see a job well done should be tickled to death with the work of this particular piece of machinery.

It seems to be doing its work so well and so effectively and so thoroughly that not only is it crushing under its weight all opposition, but also seems to bent on crushing and obliterating the Republican party as well.

We all recall how the steam roller worked during the French Revolution. It was a fine thing for those in control of the Terror to steam roller thousands of victims to the guillotine! It was not quite so funny when the roller caught under the weight of those same leaders and steam-rollered them to the guillotine also.

Anarchly, after devouring everything in sight, in the end devours itself. If we do not greatly mistake the Taft steam roller, after crushing everything else in sight, will in all probability proceed to crush itself. Nor do we think, if the present methods are persisted in, that the Republican party will be an unconscionable time a-dying.

WHO OWNS THE REPUBLICAN PARTY?

Out in Chicago in a little room in the great Coliseum Building, a group of half a hundred men are sitting several hours each day, empowered to exercise a trusteeship for the political interests of about fifty million people. They constitute the National Committee of the Republican party—just 53 of them in all.

They confront a task more significant, more momentous, than has ever been delegated before to a National Committee. They must decide, so far as it is within the power reposed in them—and it is a tremendous delegation of authority that they possess—who shall occupy seats in the National Republican Convention a few days hence. Their decision may determine—is expected by the now dominant faction in the party to determine—who shall be nominated for President.

In this group of 53 men vested with this authority, laden with this responsibility, are 16 men who have within the last two or three months been rejected by the Republican voters of their States; men who will not succeed themselves as committee-men; men who have submitted their stewardship to the people and been discharged.

These 16 men make up the backbone of President Taft's strength in the committee. Without them he would have about one-third of its members.

Three weeks hence not one of these men will have on official relationship to the national organization of the party. They will have retired and new men will have succeeded them; men who will better represent the present temper and purpose of the people.

But meanwhile these men who are soon to retire possess the power to determine the membership of the National Convention. They are using that power to make Mr. Taft the nominee.

Mr. Taft cannot be elected. Everybody knows that. The men who are betraying their party by the desperate effort to nominate him admit their betrayal, but say that they would rather have the party defeated with Taft leading it than to win with Roosevelt.

The Republican party does not belong to any 30 or 40 men, even though they chance to be for a few days at a fateful time the members of its National Committee. If, in such a juncture, it permits such a betrayal it will deserve the fate that impends.

THE Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Maryland, William H. Anderson, who is also legislative superintendent of the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a member of the National Headquarters Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America, made public Monday the fact that he has written to every prominent Democratic candidate for President and to some prominent Democrats who are not avowed candidates, including Messrs. Wilson, Clark, Underwood, Harmon, Hearst and Bryan informing them of the responsibility of Mr. James H. Preston, Mayor of Baltimore, who is an active candidate for the Vice-Presidential nomination, for the defeat of the local option bill in the recent Maryland legislature. Mr. Anderson charges that the Mayor was selected to his present position with the aid of the liquor and vice element and repaid them by organizing the legislature against temperance legislation. He has twice challenged the Mayor to a public discussion of his responsibility in the premises. Some of these letters were written several weeks ago. He claims already to have replies from some of the candidates for President, and says further that he is giving this notice in time so that the Democratic party leaders will find it impossible to plead ignorance and thus escape opposition to the ticket from the church and temperance forces in case Mayor Preston is nominated.

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT.

Another object of the Constitution I take to be such as is common to all written constitutions of free governments, that is, to fix limits to delegated authority, or in other words to impose constitutional restraints on political power. Some who esteem themselves Republicans, seem to think no other security for public liberty necessary than a provisions for a popular choice of rulers. If political power be delegated Power they entertain little fear of its being abused. The people's servants and favorites, they think, may be safely trusted. Our fathers certainly were not of this school. They sought to make assurance doubly sure by providing, in the first place, for the election of political agents by the people themselves at short intervals; and, in the next place by prescribing constitutional restraints on all branches of this delegated authority. It is not among the circumstances of the time most ominous for good that a diminished estimate appears to be placed on those constitutional securities. A disposition is but too prevalent to substitute personal confidence for legal restraint; to put trust in men rather than in principles; and this disposition being strongest, as it most obviously is, whenever party spirit prevails to the greatest extent, it is not without reason that fears are entertained of the existence of a spirit tending strongly to an unlimited, if it be an elective government.

Surely, gentlemen, this Government can go through no such change. Long before the change could take place, the Constitution would be shattered to pieces and the Union of the States become matter of history. To the Union, therefore, as well as to civil liberty, to every interest which we enjoy and value, to all that makes us proud of our country, or which renders our country lovely in our eyes, or dear to our hearts, nothing can be more repugnant, nothing more directly destructive than excessive, unlimited, unconstitutional confidence in men; nothing worse than the doctrine that official agents may interpret the public will in their own way, in defiance of the Constitution and the laws; or that they may set up anything for the declaration of that will except the Constitutiou and the laws themselves; or that any public official, high or low, should undertake to constitute himself or call himself the representative of the people except so far as the Constitution and the laws create and denominate him such representative. There is no usurpation so dangerous as that which comes in the borrowed name of the people. If from some other authority or other source prerogatives be attempted to be forced upon the people, they naturally oppose and resist it. It is an open enemy, and they can easily subdue it. But that which professes to act in their own name, and by their authority, that which calls itself their servant, although it exercises their power without legal right or constitutional sanction, requires something more of vigilance to detect and something more of stern patriotism to repress; and if it be not seasonably both detected and repressed, then the republic is already in the downward path of those which have gone before it.

I hold, therefore, gentlemen, that a strict submission by every branch of the government to the limitations and restraints of the Constitution is of the very essence of all security for the preservation of liberty, and that no one can be a true and intelligent friend of that liberty who will consent that any man in public station, whatever he may think of the honesty of his motives, shall assume to exercise an authority above the Constitution and the laws. Whatever government is not a government of laws is a despotism, let it be called what it may.—Address at Bangor, Maine, by Daniel Webster, in 1835.

HAS NEW HEAD

Associated Board of Trade of Maryland.

Through the employment of G. A. Waterman as director of the Associated Boards of Trade of Maryland, this state is the first to have a man trained in commercial organization work to devote his entire time to state wide cooperation in publicity and other lines for the advancement of the material interests of the whole state and all its parts.

Mr. Waterman, who took charge on June 1, will get over the state as soon as practicable, acquainting himself with localities and conditions and rendering whatever services he may in strengthening the local commercial organizations and in bringing them into closer touch with each other for the common good.

G. A. WATERMAN.

At an early day the executive committee will issue a statement of the broad policy of the Associated Boards of Trade of Maryland, together with a prospectus of the special lines of work to be followed. Publicity of Maryland, in such ways that each and every city and town can take advantage of the general publicity, will be the keynote of the policy. A salient feature of the publicity campaign will be the early issuance of a Maryland book.

For the fullest fostering of a co-operative spirit, the executive committee will probably create a general advisory body comprising at least one representative from each organization holding membership in the state association.

The director's temporary headquarters will be in the rooms of the Greater Baltimore Committee, 763 Calvert Building, Baltimore, which in addition to being a contributing member of the Associated Boards of Trade of Maryland, has placed its quarters and its office force at the service of Director Waterman in order to facilitate his work in behalf of all Maryland.

Married.

DAVIS—BRUMBAUGH—The marriage of Miss Elizabeth Brumbaugh, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Brumbaugh, formerly of Deer Park, to Dr. O. R. Davis was solemnized Wednesday evening, June 5th, at Union church, Wyatt, W. Va., Rev. L. B. Bowers, officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attended by Miss Beatrice Heyward, of Mt. Lake Park, as maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Annie Frantz and Miss Margaret Stevens, of Roanoke, Va., and little Mildred Hess and Virginia Palmer were flower girls.

The bride wore an exquisite gown of embroidered net over white satin and her veil of tulle was gracefully arranged with a spray of orange blossoms, and carried a large bouquet of bride's rose. The maid of honor wore a gown of beaded net, over blue silk and the bridesmaids were dressed alike in blue embroidered voiles. All wore wreaths of pink roses and carried bouquets of the same.

Dr. Davis was attended by Dr. E. Forest Harbert, as best man. The ushers were Mr. Charles Moore and Mr. Harry Hawker.

The church was artistically decorated with wisteria and daisies. A large bell of daisies was suspended over the bridal couple, from an arch of wisteria. Soft music was played throughout the ceremony by Miss Vivian Hess, of Mannington, W. Va.

Among the guests present were Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Thrasher of Deer Park.

After a tour to the Great Lakes and Canada, Dr. and Mrs. Davis will reside at "The Brick," Wyatt, W. Va.

NAYLOR—BOWERS—At the Lutheran parsonage last night by the Rev. Edmund Manges, Miss Mattie Bowers and Mr. Gustavus Naylor, both of Oakland. The bride is the youngest daughter of the late Mr. John T. Bowers and the groom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Naylor.

OAKLAND NORMAL SCHOOL

Started Off Monday Morning With an Enrollment of 23.

The Oakland Normal School opened Monday morning in the Grammar School building with an enrollment of twenty-three scholars, with Profs. R. R. Sanner and C. Edward Bender as instructors, Capt. Sanner having arrived in Oakland that morning from Grantsville, when, on Friday of last week, he closed a normal which had been successfully taught by him for a period of eight weeks.

The Oakland school starts out with a satisfactory enrollment, although some take exceptions to "23" but the instructors expect to have more than twice the number enrolled before the close of the present week.

Messrs. Treacy and McComas, agents for the Ford automobile company, received another consignment of cars last Friday, all of which have been sold and delivered. Mrs. T. W. Casteel purchased one of the cars while the other two went to parties out of town.

Dr. Dame will also officiate at chapel of the Deer Park hotel Sabbath afternoons. Dr. Dame preached his second discourse here last Sunday morning.

County Commissioner D. M. Dixon and family are now occupying their home on Second street, the repairs to the building made necessary on account of the fire occurring on February 22d, having been recently completed. In addition to placing the property in the best of repairs Mr. Dixon added a new upper balcony and made some alterations to the interior of the dwelling.

Thirty years ago "the Mountain Democrat of Oakland wanted to know 'whether anybody had seen its special correspondent in the vicinity of Bloomington, Grantsville or Accident?' The Journal replied that he had 'passed through Frostburg last Monday, looking hale and handsome as any French gentleman from Edinborough town who had been shot foremost through a barrel of axle-grease.'"—Frostburg Journal.

A third gang of section men on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, under the foremanship of Mr. T. W. Taylor will work out of Oakland beginning this week, the new section being that portion of the road recently built beginning at the east end of Fifty-eight cut and running west to Corinth. The men will be engaged for some time in levelling up the new tracks and in taking out two humps of considerable proportions.

Mr. Scott T. Jones, delegate-elect to the Republican National Convention, will leave Oakland Saturday night for Cumberland where on Sunday he will join the Maryland delegation who will travel to Chicago in a special car attached to train No. 5. This paper acknowledges the receipt of an invitation to attend the graduating exercises of Saint Agnes' Training School for nurses, Baltimore, to be held Wednesday, June 19th, at St. Agnes' Hospital. Among the graduates is Miss Mary Annie Boyle, daughter of Mr. Michael Boyle of Oakland, who has completed the full course prescribed to enable her to obtain a diploma. Miss Boyle is a most excellent young lady and her many friends in Oakland will be pleased to learn of her success.

Endorses the Governor.

Governor Goldsborough is going about the building and improvement of Maryland roads in a very thorough and businesslike manner. The "stitch in time" plan of the new Commission is an excellent one and will, if adopted save many a dollar of the taxpayers' money. Although it would be ideal to have model roads over the entire State it is too soon for that, considering the money available at present. The next best thing is a series of extensive throughfares—much traveled arteries—properly maintained and more road building at moderate cost.—Emmitsburg (Md.) Chronicle.

Gone Back to Goshen.

Allen F. Miller, son of Joel J. Miller of Grantsville, Md., returned home from Columbia University, New York City, last Saturday, and left on Monday for Goshen, Ind., to teach in Goshen College during the summer term. Breezy Point.

Breezy Point, the big home talent play, to be given Thursday and Friday evenings, June 20 and 21, at the Maryland Theatre, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of St. Mark's Lutheran church, surely does look good and promises to be one of the best home talent performances ever given in Oakland. More than 100 will appear in the cast and choruses. Admission 25, 35 and 50c. Seats reserved at the Gonder Pharmacy on and after Tuesday, June 18th.

Civic Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Civic Club will be held at the court house on the 18th inst. A full attendance is requested.

In Memory of Andrew G. Friend.

The subject of this sketch was one of the ten children born to Josiah G. and Luvina Friend of this county. He was born in Friendsville October 14, 1838, and lived all his life within a few miles of his birthplace, and died April 30, 1912, aged 73 years, 7 months and 16 days. He was converted at a very early age and joined the M. E. church. He adhered to that branch of the church for twenty-three years, when he joined the U. B. church at Swanton, to which he was a loyal, consistent and liberal member until his death, his home being the home of the preacher. His life was not lived in vain—the world has been better for his having lived in it. The family, the church and the friends miss him, but our loss is his eternal gain. He died in the triumphs of a living faith.

He was married to Miss Mahala Browning Feb. 29, 1864, and to this union were born ten children five of whom are living, viz: Josiah G., Alpha H., Martha V. Switzer, Rufus and Marie E. The wife died May 22, 1888, five children joining her—Sarah J. Argenbright, Elmer M., Franklin C., Richard M. and Bruce A. Deceased leaves a sister, five children, a number of grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn. All was done by physicians, children, neighbors and friends that could be done to restore him to health and alleviate his sufferings, but the Supreme Ruler of the universe decreed otherwise. We bow in humble submission to His will and may the blessings of God rest upon all who remain.

Interment was made in the Friend cemetery by the side of his wife May 2. Rev. S. E. Bauman officiating, assisted by his pastor, Rev. S. J. Harris.

He joined the Union army April, 1861, and was attached to Co. I, 2nd Regt. P. H. B., in which he served thro the war. Four of his old army companions were pallbearers conveying the body to its last resting place. S. J. H.

Sunday School Meeting.

June 23, 1912, will be a day long to be remembered, as arrangements has been made to have four Sunday schools meet at McHenry in the beautiful oak grove of M. Glotfelty's, where they will unite in the study of the lesson at 10 o'clock. Preaching at 11 o'clock. There will be dinner an the ground. The afternoon will be taken up in an old people's meeting and getting better acquainted. A number of choirs will furnish the music. Come one and all with a basket of dinner and enjoy the day. S. J. HARRIS, Pastor.

Why Should You Install Modern Plumbing?

Because, in the first place, your health demands it. A good plumbing system will protect you from the dangers of sewer gas and will keep your home healthful and sanitary.

The "Standard" porcelain enameled fixtures which we can supply are an ornament to any home, as well as being thoroughly sanitary. Their smooth, enameled surface is easily cleaned and will keep its beautiful, snow-white finish during years of service.

Our workmanship is careful and thorough, whether for repairs or for installing new plumbing.

It would pay you to find out more about it.

Woe For Willie.

During the morning school the children had been examined and their eyes tested according to the education authority's latest decree. Those who were suffering from any defects had notes given them to take home to their parents.

Among the note-bearers was one Willie Thompson, and the note he bore was as follows:

"Dear Sir: I beg to inform you that your son, William, shows signs of astigmatism, which ought to be attended to at once. Yours faithfully,
"JOHN JONES, Teacher.

In the afternoon Willie brought a reply:

"Dear Sir: I don't know just what it is that Willie's been doing, but I walloped him well this dinner time, and you can take another go at him if he isn't better. Yours faithfully,
"JOHN THOMPSON."

FRIENDSVILLE.

Three frosts, but no damage done in the borough, although reports from the country claim the wheat badly damaged and potatoes and corn frozen.

ORDER NISI.

Noah Pysell, Assignee, vs. Frederick C. Ries and Etta Ries, his wife.

No. 1784 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

Ordered this 28th day of May, 1912, by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, that the sale of the property mentioned in these proceedings, made and reported by Noah Pysell, assignee of the mortgage therein mentioned, be ratified and confirmed, unless cause to the contrary thereof be shown on or before the 28th day of June next; provided a copy of this order be inserted in some newspaper, printed in Garrett County, Maryland, once in each of three successive weeks, before the 21st day of June, 1912.

The report states the amount of sale to be $1100.00.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True Copy—test: E. Z. TOWER Clerk.

NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS!

This is to notify the taxpayers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1912 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract Section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills.

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and on all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 5 per cent. will be allowed and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The Treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon the books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of state and county taxes are paid when same is made.

J. B. EMORY, Treasurer.

MORERI II, 20279.

Having lost my Percheron Stallion Herve, I have purchased MORERI II 20279, a Registered Percheron Stallion, bred by R. D. McGonigle & Sons, of Ashley, Ohio.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS:—To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

C. A. ASHBY, Owner.

A Highly Sensational Mystery Serial

THE YELLOW LETTER

A Detective Story that has one fresh thing about it is remarkable. There are three fresh things about the kind of crime, the manifestations of that crime, and the pursuit of the criminal.

The Yellow Letter

The exact nature of the crime the reader must discover for himself.

He will search it out with bated breath and a wildly beating pulse.

The manifestations of the crime are suicides in different places, of people of different ages, sexes and circumstances, but all taking place within a few days of each other and each one of the victims having about him a scrap of yellow paper.

¶ Because of a Yellow Letter a beautiful young girl tried to take her life;

¶ Because of a Yellow Letter her father was seized with apoplexy;

¶ Because of more Yellow Letters an aged lawyer took poison;

¶ A young girl drowned herself and

¶ An elderly spinster hanged herself in a room of a hotel twenty miles away.

¶ What are these Yellow Letters?

¶ By whom and to whom were they sent?

¶ These mystifying mysteries are explained in our new serial story

The Yellow Letter

¶ The most clever piece of fiction devoted to amateur detective investigations that you ever read.

You Can't Afford to Miss It

A Story of a Thousand Thrills that Starts with a Rush and Goes Faster and Faster

The daughter of a rich, highly respected New York gentleman is the first person in the story to attempt suicide and she is the only one who does not succeed. The lover of her beautiful young sister is determined to discover the reason of her evident misery, and he enlists the services of his friend, a famous post-office inspector, for it is evident that the mails have been used for criminal purposes. The author has made an exceedingly interesting study of the way these two men, both of keen minds and working side by side most of the time, draw widely differing conclusions from the same evidence, and of how the trained man will find clues where the untrained has seen nothing.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19; ALL WAITING FOR THAT DATE

The Exact Hour of the Great Event. 3 p. m. All Anxious as to the Results.

Wednesday, June 19, at three p. m., there will be anxiety written on the faces of many of the people in the town of Oakland, and in this section of the county, as it will be at that time that it will be decided who is to get the beautiful prizes in the Republican voting contest. First of all, the young ladies who are in the contest will be anxious to know who is in the lead, because the one who has the most votes, will have first choice of the prizes and naturally she will take the beautiful piano which has been on exhibition in this town for several weeks past. If she has no place to put the piano she undoubtedly will be made a cash offer for the instrument the moment it is made known that she is the winner. The other prizes will also be announced at the same time, and it will be up to the ladies to choose which they will take, according to their standing.

On Wednesday, June 19th, we will have some person at the phone who will answer all questions, so do not be backward about telephoning in and asking who the winners are.

It is not believed by these who have given the matter any careful thought that any particular person has the grand prize cinched at the present time, but there are several in the race who have a good chance to land it if they will only hustle. There is one thing certain, and that is, the person who does land it will get one of the best instruments of the kind ever unloaded in the town of Oakland, finer than silk, that sums it all up.

There are several young ladies who appear to have the best of the contest at the present time, but none of them have a sure cinch of being the ultimate owner of the first prize. If one of the contestants who is way down the list should take it into her head that she was going to win the big premium she could do so. She would have to do some work to make it, but that was what was expected when the contest opened. Several bunches of seven new subscribers and renewals in the group of seven would put the lowest candidate in the race up among the leaders.

For those who wish to vote without any competitor seeing them the contest editor desires to state that cash with your subscription, telling where the paper is to be sent and to whom the votes shall be given can be placed in an envelope and deposited in the ballot box. The judges will open these envelopes as soon as they start to count and will credit all votes, including bonus votes. In order to secure bonus votes on merchants' coupons they must be counted at the Republican office before being deposited. In this way it will readily be seen that no person can tell anything about how many votes a contestant has, as the bonus votes will be issued by the judges at the time they do the counting.

Miss DeWitt and Miss McRobie were almost even at the last count. Several others are well to the front and are putting forth every effort on the home stretch to win the coveted prize. Any of these ladies can land the prize if they will take the time to get out and solicit new subscriptions and renewals, as they count up rapidly and they carry with them the big bonus offers. Here is the way all votes count, and remember there will be no change:

For every three 2-year subscriptions 25,000 bonus, making a total of 28,600.

For every two 20-year subscriptions 75,000 extra, making a total of 135,000.

For every 7 new subscriptions, 8,000 extra, a total of 12,200.

For every 7 renewal subscriptions 6,000 extra, a total of 9,500.

For every 7 back subscriptions 4,000 extra, a total of 6,800.

For every 40 merchant's coupons 1,000 extra, a total of 2,000.

Do not forget the fact that this is the last opportunity we will have to say a word to the contestants before it is finally decided who the winner is. We are just as anxious as any of them as to the result, but we are frank to say to you that we get no prize out of this contest, and although it has not been as spirited as we had hoped it might have been, yet we are bound to be satisfied with the returns. Whether the firm who are putting up the piano are satisfied or not we cannot tell, but like ourselves they must take what is handed out to them just the same as we do. There is one thing certain, and that is they have had some of the very best advertising they possibly could get for their piano, and we have been pleased to give them the advertising, for in so doing we believe we are avertising one of the best pianos manufactured. It has come up to every requirement which they claimed for it at the beginning, and if it had not, the contest would have been stopped long ago. We think this much of the piano. The probabilities are that before we buy a new automobile we shall buy one of these instruments, and when we do buy it we shall insist that we own one of the best pianos made.

Following are the names of the merchants where you can get coupons, and the prizes they offer the lucky contestants:

Arthur Townshend—Ladies umbrella, valued at $5.

Bolden, Brown & Weimer—Leather rocker, valued at $10.

J. E. Harned—Cut glass dish, valued at $5.

H. C. Sincell—Traveling bag, valued at $7.50.

Dixon & Kelso—A fine trunk, valued at $10.

Thos. Little—Dinner set (44-piece), valued at $5.

Gonder's Pharmacy—Lady's toilet set, valued at $5.

G. C. Martin & Co—Lady's Gold Watch, valued at $10.

J. W. Hart—Embroidered robe, valued at $10.

J. M. Davis & Sons—Fine chafing dish, valued at $5.

Samuel Lawton & Sons—Jardeniere, valued at $5.

H. Creutzburg—Leather hand bag, valued at $5.

Just a word in conclusion. Be a sport, and no matter what the result, take it in a good natured way. You know that all of the contestants cannot win the first prize. If you do not happen to win it, be a sport, and be the first one to go up to the one who docs win the piano, shake hands with her and congratulate her upon the result. That is what the congratulations. Which one are we going to shake hands with?

The following shows the official standing of contestants after the first and second counts:

	First Count	Second Count	Total
May McRobie	60,475	93,475	153,950
Bern. Dewitt	56,475	104,650	161,125
Bernice Bowers	15,000	28,000	43,000
Bessie Echard	14,900	5,500	20,400
Mar. Glotfelty	9,650	15,000	24,650
Blanche Clark	7,575	8,575	16,150
Laura Sanders	3,200	9,400	12,600

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. Hartman, who occupied the Col. Burns cottage with his family last season, has rented the Mrs. R. G. Richardson cottage and his family will be here next week.

Mr. J. C. Sheehy, of Washington, D. C., has leased the Fulton cottage and his family will be here in a few days. They occupied the Dr. McLain cottage last season.

The drug store is now open with a full and fresh stock of everything usually kept in an up-to-date drug store.

Mrs. J. W. Martin, of Washington, D. C., lessee of the Alleghany House came to the Park last week and is now ready to entertain guests.

Mr. Whitford Shelton and wife, who spent the winter in England among relatives and friends of Mrs. Shelton, will arrive at Philadelphia by steamer Sunday or Monday, and will be met there and accompanied to the Park by Mr. Shelton's father, Dr. Chas. E. Shelton.

Mrs. Annan and two daughters, of St. Louis, are in the Dowler cottage, having arrived Monday.

Mr. Simon Baker shipped a car of hay and oats straw from this station on Tuesday.

Dr. and Mrs Logan Carr were summoned to New York Sunday on account of the death of a relative of Mrs. Carr.

Mr. Eugene Comerford is having his house raised and a cut stone foundation put thereunder. Mr. Brice Gibson is doing the work and, of course, it will be a fine piece of work

Mrs. Sarah Gilbert is having her cottage painted. Hayden Brothers are doing the work.

Mrs. Gibbs, of Wheeling, daughter of Mr. E. L. Stone, arrived Monday and is occupying her cottage.

Mrs. Chas. May and two children, of Hagerstown, are here visiting relatives and friends.

The Ladies' Aid Society will serve refreshments and sell fancy articles on Thursday evening, June 20th. The place will be announced later.

Dr. Logan Carr is re-roofing his cottage with tin shingles. Messrs. G. A. Shirer & Co., of Oakland, are doing the work.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Allen, of Cumberland, are occupying their cottage here.

Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Richardson, son Carl and daughter Frances are in the large Richardson house.

Mr. Walter W. Dawson has accepted a position in the First National Bank of Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. George Dawson and baby, of Clarksburg, are in the Park.

The first evening of moving pictures was given Tuesday in the Auditorium to a large audience. Miss Louise Sperry was pianist and Miss Beatrice Heyward favored the audience with violin solos. The picture machine is new and gave very distinct pictures. These entertainments will be given every Tuesday and Friday evening until the opening of the campmeeting.

A revival of much interest is now being held at Kurtz Chapel, a few miles southeast of here, where it is claimed a remarkable cure was effected in answer to prayer. The subject, Mr. Geo. Harvey, a brother to Mr. C. V. Harvey, of the firm of Leighton & Harvey, of Loch Lynn, who has been under the care of physicians for a long time. On Sunday evening, June 2nd, it was supposed by his friends and even his physician that he could not live until morning, but during the night he arose from his bed and rushed through the house praising God and claiming to be healed. On Wednesday evening he attended the chapel and testified to the fact of his healing, and his appearance justified the claim. A short time before a Miss Stever claimed to be healed and is assisting Rev. Johnson in holding meetings. Great crowds are attending the meetings.

Preaching next Sundday in the M. E. church at 11.00 a. m. and 8.00 p. m.

RUDISILL—RAND—The marriage of Miss Elsa Rand and Mr. Wesley H. Rudisill took place at the Parker Memorial Baptist church, Anniston, Ala., at 9 p. m., Wednesday June 5th. A large and representative assemblage witnessed the ceremony, and this beautiful church made a harmonious setting for the wedding. Palms and ferns banked the altar and the greenery was intermingled with sweet peas, which were suggestive of the rainbow decorative motive.

Miss Rand was given in marriage by her father, Mr Ralph Leon Rand. She was a distinguished figure in her wedding gown, built of white dutchess satin, with flowing train and rose point lace garnitures. Her tulle veil was gracefully caught with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower boquet of white orchids and lillies of the valley. Her ornaments were a string of pearls and a diamond brooch, a family heirloom,

Mr. Rudisill entered from the vestry room with his best man, Mr. Jno. Sweeney, of Waterloo, Ia., as the bride and her father were approaching the altar, where they received their marriage vows from Dr. W. F. Yarborough, pastor of the church. After the ceremony the party left the church to the strain of the wedding march from "Lohengrin."

Mrs. Rudisill is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Leon Rand, two of Anniston's most highly esteemed inhabitants. She is an attractive and beautiful blond and her vivaciousness and charming frankness of manner have won for her many close friends.

Mr. Rudisill is a successful young business man of Anniston, and is well known and popular. Both he and the lovely woman he has won will receive the congratulations of friends throughout the State.

Later in the evening Mr. Rudisill and his bride left for a wedding trip to Virginia Beach, Va., Norfork, and Mountain Lake Park, Md. On their return they will go to housekeeping in the Gordon cottage.—Daily Hot Blast, Anniston, Ala.

Mr. Rudisill and bride arrived here yesterday anv will be with the groom's parents, Rev. and Mrs. L. A. Rudisill, for some time.

Miss Blanche Chance left this morning for Baltimore and will later visit relatives and friends in and near Philadelphia and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Mr. Thomas Deveny's family, of Fairmont, took possession of their cottage here yesterday.

Mr. David Richey, of Fairmont, is occupying his cottage on E street.

Mr. Levi Echard is still quite ill.

Mr. C. F. Dawson is visiting relatives in Rowlesburg.

Mr. E. E. Kesner has installed a very handsome soda fountain in his confectionery store at the station.

Miss Helice Rathbun has been added to the clerical force in our postoffice.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. Nicholas Paugh, of near Frankville, a well known citizen and farmer of that neighborhood, a democrat of the dyed-in-the-wool variety, was in town on Tuesday visiting his daughter, Mrs. Adam Elliott.

Mrs. James Walsh, of Westernport, spent Tuesday with friends at this place.

Mrs. Garvey, wife of Mr. Lawerence Garvey, of Franklin, who has been a patient in the Hoffman hospital at Keyser, for the past five weeks, ill with typhoid fever, returned home last week very much improved.

Messrs. Benton and Grant Harshbarger, of this place, spent Sunday in Cumberland.

Mrs. Jackson, of Swanton, is visiting her son, Mr. Benjamin Jackson, of Seldom Seen.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Mitter, of Beryl, were guests of the former's parents, over Sunday.

An attempt was made on last Saturday night, by parties unknown, to break into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Freeland Tibbetts, during their absence in Piedmont. Their daughter Bertha and her cousin, Miss Cora Tibbetts, were the only persons in the house and were in the front room playing the piano, when their attention was directed to an unsual noise at the kitchen door. When they went to investigate, they heard footsteps on the back porch, which frightened the girls. One of them ran to the telephone and sent a message to John Miller's store for help. A number of young men responded, but when they arrived at the house everything was quiet. It is suppose that the parties had been frightened away when they heard the message go over the phone. On investigation, a poker was found on the back porch and the lock to the kitchen door partially broken from its fastenings.

The Western Maryland Base Ball League composed of the towns of Dodson, Thomas, Davis, Hendricks, Parsons and Elkins is putting up some good games this season. They only play on Saturdays and holidays. Last Saturday Dodson was scheduled to play at Davis and Mr. Will Buckalew, of this place, who played back stop for Dodson, reported it to be one of the snappiest games he has witnessed this year—the score being 3 to 2 in favor of Davis.

Master Dayton Buckhannon, who has been a patient in the Hoffman hospital, under treatment for typhoid fever, returned to his home Sunday afternoon.

Three days a week is about the best the mines in this vicinity can do. The prospect for summer work are not very encouraging.

Mrs. Harris, wife of the pastor of the M. E. church of Piedmont, and Mrs. W. C. Johnson, of the same place, were guests of Dr. and Mrs. Kemp on Wednesday.

Messrs. Jacob Stump and William Moody, two prominent and well known citizens of this place, were called to Cumberland the latter part of last week on important business.

The heavy frosts and the extreme cold nights of last Friday and Saturday destroyed all the young and tender vegetation in and around Chestnut Grove It is reported that many of the farmers on the highlands and hills, where the prospects for an early crop of vegetables were never better, will be compelled to reset all their tomato plants and replant the beans and corn. In certain localities, the potato crop was almost entirely destroyed, whole fields of which, two and three inches high, were frozen to the ground.

Mrs. Jacob Stump was called to Aurora, W. Va., the latter part of last week on account of the critical illness and death of her sister.

Born unto Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Jackson, on Sunday morning, a girl.

The proceeds of the recent Junior Order carnival brought into the treasury the nice sum of $365.11. It was a pronounced success in every particular.

GORTNER.

Mr. "Jack Frost" was a most unwelcome visitor at this place the latter part of the past week. Considerable damage was done to the crops. The farmers are busy replanting.

Miss Anna Gortner spent Saturday evening in Oakland the guest of Miss B. C. Maroney.

Misses Leola Schlossnagle and Mable Wamsley, Messrs. Arthur Detrich and Artie Dodge were among those that attended the party at Wm. Kelley's Saturday evening. A most enjoyable time is reported by all.

L. J. Swartzentruber is in Ohio on business.

We understand W. C. Welch has ordered a new 1912 Maxwell automobile.

Stanley Stahl of Sunny Side was calling on Miss Emma Burkholder Sunday afternoon.

D. S. Slabach expects to have his large barn moved. L. J. Swartzentruber will do the work.

We are very sorry to note the continued illness of Miss Mary Lichty in Canada. Her father and mother are at her bed side.

Rev. Bauman will preach in the Union church next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock

Miss Nora Wamsley who has spent almost two years at the home of Grant Hayden at Westernport, is at home again. She was accompanied home by her cousin Miss Grace Franklin.

Miss Lena and Sam Slabach, Mrs. D. J. Slabach and Mrs. F. S. Irwin spent Sunday with relatives at Hauser.

Mr. Silas Welch was a visitor at the home of Mr. J. F. Martin Sunday.

BITTINGER.

Destructive frosts visited this section three nights in succession, on the 8th, 9th and 10th, doing considerable damage to corn, potatoes and garded vegetables. In some places ice was formed.

C. E. Ellithorp attended the meeting of the School Board in Oakland last week.

Rev. C. H. Shull and family visited among their members at Meadow Mountain recently.

Mrs. Thomas B. Wiley and two sons, Masters Dewey and Thomas, left here on Tuesday of this week for a few days visit with relatives in Cumberland.

The district road supervisors are getting busy on our public roads and will soon have the rough places smoothed down.

Master Roy Otto, of Springs, Pa., spent Sunday with friends here.

Ex-Sheriff A. J. Oester of this place and William Junkins, of North Glade, recently "swapped" horses and both parties seem fully satisfied.

Messrs. John H. Stark and Jacob Brenneman were spectators at last week's session of court in Oakland.

N. U. Bond, Lieut. E. S. West and others of Oakland, were automobiling in this part of the country last week.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

Monday was a Good Day for Farmers' Information.

(BY MR. GEO. E BISHOFF.)

Dr. R. S. Hill opened the Institute by showing that it is not the purpose to set aside the kind of crops that are being grown here, but showed how much larger crops can be grown with less labor and cost and greater profit for the producer.

The institute was fairly attended, but many more could have been profited by receiving such grand instructions.

Mr. R. H. Ruffner gave a fine talk on "Live Stock," more especially on the production of beef. He said Maryland is far behind some other states, and the United States is lacking in keeping as many head of stock to the amount of grass land as other countries.

He showed that cattle fed very liberal and good beef stock can be sold at the most profit at from eight to twelve months old. It cost less to make gains on young stock than old ones. Grow more cattle and less weed.

Mr. W. O. Collier gave a fine talk on "Soil Fertility and Lime."

He said the cheapest source to get nitrogen for the crop is to grow some of the legames, such as clovers, soybean, cowpeas and vetch to humus and nitrogen. Without those ingredients in the soil the crop will be light and sickly. Where the land is very poor, a complete fertilizer must be used to get the field started to produce a crop. He believes in using a small quantity of lime often instead of a large amount at once. The hill land ought to be kept in permanent pasture and the best kind is blue grass.

Mrs. E. F. Mushe gave an unusual illustrated address on "Rural Sanitation." She assured us that many of the diseases are contracted from each other by not using the proper precaution, and also from the food and more especial from the water we drink.

Mr. Geo. O. Brown gave a good lesson on "Poultry; How to house them, feed them and to prevent sickness." He also answered many questions on other subjects.

Dr. Hill also gave his experience with "Alfalfa: How to grow it and its richness in protein. A ton of alfalfa has about as much protein as a ton of wheat bran.

The speakers all understood their subjects and delivered them in a plain aud pleasing manner.

CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE, TO WHICH CONVENTION DELEGATES CLAIMS HAVE BEEN SENT, FAVOR THE PRESIDENT

Test Vote Yesterday Gives Taft 564 to Roosevelts 510.—Governor Hadley's Fight for Roosevelt is Futile, the Taft Republicans Proving Themselves To Be Absolutely in Control of the Convention.

CHICAGO, June 19.—Under the leadership of Elihu Root, the Taft forces today, by a vote of 564 to 510, took command of the convention, referred the 78 contested seats to a strong Taft committee on credentials and made preparations to go ahead with the nomination of President Taft.

The steady grinding of the Taft machine was interrupted only once and that was by a 40-minute demonstration for Roosevelt.

A motion to substitute a Roosevelt roll for that made up by the National Committee was admitted, argued for three hours and defeated.

Governor Hadley, who led the Raosevelt fight, tried every parliamentary trick known to him to retard the contested delegates from voting on their own cases. He failed in every instance.

His original motion to substitute the roll was amended by James E. Watson, the Taft floor leader, so as to refer the matter to the committee on credentials.

Governor Deneen moved to eliminate the contested delegates from voting on all cases. Watson moved to lay this last motion on the table, which brought the test vote of 564 to table, against 510 not to table, five not voting.

The ordinary matters were disposed of in short order and the whole affair was referred by a viva voce vote to the committee on credentials as at present constituted. The committee stand about 29 to 24 in Taft's favor and will, with easy unconcern, approve the steam-roller roll and give Taft enough votes to nominate him if his backers still choose to do so.

In any event, they are absolutely in control of the convention and have within the past two days robbed Mr. Roosevelt effectively.

RESERVOIRS MAY BE CONSTRUCTED ON YOUGH RIVER

Ambitious Plans Outlined by the Pittsburgh Flood Commission.

While the Pittsburgh flood commission is awaiting a sufficient appropriation to begin the construction of the contemplated reservoirs on the headwaters of the Mononhahela, Youghioghney and other rivers, the forestry service has agreed to purchase all the sites selected for these reservoirs in West Virginia and Maryland, paying for them out of the appropriation for the purchase of forest lands in the Appalachian range. This has just been made known by W. M. Jackoby, secretary of the commission.

The plan of the flood commission is to construct four reservoirs on the Youghioghney river in Maryland and 11 in West Virginia on the Cheat river and other tributaries of the Monongahela.

The dams for these reservoirs will vary in height, some of them reaching more than 60 feet and backing up 10 miles or more. The calculations show that the dams in West Virginia and Maryland would hold back about 85,000,000,000 cubic feet of water, which is estimated to be equal to the difference between the amount of water which passed Pittsburgh in 1907, at the time of the great flood, and the amount which would have passed if the danger line had not been exceeded. The estimated cost of these reservoirs was $21,000,000 but the purchase of the sites by the forestry service will reduce this cost to about $13,000,000.

About two years ago congress made an appropriation of $2,000,000 a year for five years for the purchase of forest lands along the headwaters of the Ohio and other streams rising in the Allegheny mountains. Any portion of the $2,000,000 not spent within the year for which it was appropriated was to revert to the government. By reason of this $3,200,000 has reverted to the government or will have done so by July 1st.

An amendment added to the agricultural appropriation bill in the senate provides for the restoration of this money to the fund as originally intended and this amendment has been agreed to by the conferees on the agricultural bill so that it is expected it will pass. With this amount in addition to that already available, a good deal of forest land could be purchased and, with the promise of the forestry service that these sites would be bought, it will be a matter of but a short time until work might begin on the reservoirs.

TERRIFIC STORM VISITED GARRETT COUNTY SUNDAY

Much Timber Destroyed. But Little Other Damage Resulted.

One of the hardest wind and rain storms that ever visited this section of the country passed over Oakland and other portions of Garrett county last Sunday afternoon about three o'clock which did untold damage to timber, uprooted hundreds of trees and rending other hundreds into fire wood.

The storm center seemed to be directly over the town, as to the north as well as south little if any serious damage resulted. To the east and west, however, the track of the storm is yet in evidence where the forests are a tangled mass of torn-off limbs and fallen trees.

Telephone service from Oakland to the outlying country as well as to the neighboring towns was paralyzed and is still badly crippled.

Up on Crook's Crest a hundred or more trees were uprooted, while in front of Mr. Louis Bush's residence seven of the largest chestnut chestnut trees on his lawn were blown down. In other portions of the town like damage resulted. So far as has been reported no buildings were damaged.

A BIG WRECK ON THE GRADE

In Which Three Engines Are Demolished and a Number of Cars Damaged.

Yesterday morning a big freight wreck occured on the Seventeen Mile Grade near Everitt's Tunnel when rear-end collision took place between two eastbound freight trains. Three engines were almost totally wrecked. All three tracks were completely blocked for some hours, delaying traffic a long time.

Child Painfully Injured.

The little eight year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Nine, residing near Crellin, was painfully injured Monday morning when a horse he was leading to the stable trod upon his foot, laying the bones of that member bare, besides bruising and otherwise injuring him. The parents of the little boy brought him to Oakland where his injuries were dressed by Dr. Henry McComas.

MISS MAE M'CROBIE GETS THE REPUBLICAN PIANO

Was Awarded Her Last Night by the Judges Who Canvassed The Vote.

The Republican piano contest was closed yesterday afternoon at four o'clock, the time having been extended to that hour on account of an extraordinary rush at the last minute by the contestants and their friends, who delayed making their returns until the last minute of the last hour set for the close.

The votes were counted last night by three competent judges: Mr. R. E. Sliger, cashier of the First National Bank; Prof. C. Edward Bender, principal of the Oakland High School, and Dr. W. W. Grant, in the presence of the editor and Mr. J. A. Morrison, the contest manager and representative of the Publisher's Music Company.

The prize winner was Miss Mae McCrobie, the chief operator of the Garrett County Telephone Company in Oakland, who had a total vote of 848,400 on the last count, or a grand total of 1,002,350 in three counts. Miss McCrobie made a record run during the last few days of the contest. Her many friends in Oakland were strenuous in their efferts to have her win and they succeeded.

Miss Bernadine DeWitt, of Deer Park, came in as a good second in the race and we are indeed sorry that we do not have two pianos to give in the contest. Miss DeWitt's total vote turned out of the ballot ballot box amounted to 565,200; her grand total being 726,325.

Miss Laura Sanders is third with a total of 53,500; Mrs. Bernice Bowers is fourth with a vote of 44,150; Miss Margaret Glotfelty is fifth with 26,750 votes to her credit; Miss Bessie Echard is sixth with 20,850; Miss Blanche Clark is seventh with 17,350 votes; Miss Madge Enlow is eighth; Miss Alma Turney ninth; Miss Ella Cleveland tenth; Miss Jean DeBerry eleventh; Miss Bessie Ault is number twelve on the list and Miss Josephine Browning gets number thirteen.

The prizes will be awarded as they may be selected by the contestants, the highest in order having the first choice and so on down through the entire list until the thirteenth is taken.

The Republican feels that it is under obligations to each and every one of the young ladies who contributed in making the contest the great success it has been. We have added very materially to our list of subscribers and feel that the weekly visits of The Republican to the more than four hundred new homes it will go into will bring pleasure and profit to the readers.

Oldest Engine Went Well on Its Trial

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad's eldest engine, the Atlantic, was fired up Saturday at Mount Clare shops and given a trial run around the yards, proving that she is just as capable as when she operated as a passenger engine 50 years ago.

Plans are now in progress to run the Atlantic into Camden Station pulling a train of modern passenger coaches, with President Daneil Willard of the Baltimore and Ohio at the throttle. This is to be one of the "side shows" of the Democratic convention.

The engine was built 80 years ago and for fifty years was used in the passenger service, then made to serve as a switching and freight engine in the Mount Clare yards for 10 years. Since 1892 it has been used as an exhibit.

Maryland's Wheat Second Best.

The Department of Agriculture reports the wheat crop of Maryland as being the second best in the United States.

Of Maryland's 1912 wheat crop the department experts now class 92 per cent of it excellent. The average wheat crop of Maryland for the last ten years has been classed 86 per cent excellent, so that this year's crop is apparently 6 per cent better than the average.

Of the total wheat acreage of the United States 2.3 per cent is in Maryland, which makes Maryland rank as fourteenth State in the production of wheat. This year promises to be the most prosperous that Maryland farmers have had in a long time, according to the government's report on the general condition of all crops combined in Maryland.

On the basis of 100 per cent representing the average condition of all the State's combined crops, the condition of the 1912 crops in Maryland is 111.2 per cent, says the Department of Agriculture's monthly report dealing with general crop conditions of the country.

You Can't Afford to Miss It

A Story of a Thousand Thrills that Starts with a Rush and Goes Faster and Faster

The daughter of a rich, highly respected New York gentleman is the first person in the story to attempt suicide and she is the only one who does not succeed. The lover of her beautiful young sister is determined to discover the reason of her evident misery, and he enlists the services of his friend, a famous post-office inspector, for it is evident that the mails have been used for criminal purposes. The author has made an exceedingly interesting study of the way these two men, both of keen minds and working side by side most of the time, draw widely differing conclusions from the same evidence, and of how the trained man will find clues where the untrained has seen nothing.

A Winner.

"Boy, take these flowers to Miss Bertie Bohoo, room 12."

"My, sir, you're the fourth gentleman wot's sent her flowers today."

"What's that? What the deuce? Who sent the others?"

"Oh, they didn't send any names. They all said, 'She'll know where they come from.'"

"Well, here, take my card, and tell her these are from the same one who sent the other three boxes."—Tit-Bits.

Earned It.

At a country school in the Midlands the head master said: "Now boys, I will give a penny to the first lad who can ask me a question which I cannot answer."

Several tried unsuccessfuly until one boy asked him: "Please, sir, if you stood up to your neck in soft mud and I threw a stone at your head, would you duck?"

The question remained unanswered. —Ideas.

His Training.

"Well, boy, what do you know? Can you write a business letter? Can you do sums?"

"Please, sir," said the applicant for a job, "we didn't go in very much for those studies at our school. But I'm fine on bead-work or clay modeling."

All Funny.

A Different Thing.

"Whom is that pretty young widow mourning for?"

"I am sure I have no idea."

"She is wearing very deep black."

"Oh, that's for her old husband."

The Cameo Rings

Muriel sat in the twilight, with a small box in her hand, unmindful of the shadows which were beginning to steal into the room. If one could have peeped inside the box one would have seen a cameo ring of a peculiar style. She was thinking of the one who had given it to her eleven years ago.

Just then a light tap at her door aroused her from her reverie, and she sprang to her feet. The box fell from her hand and rolled under the table.

"Oh, it's you, Miss Fuller!" she exclaimed, opening the door.

"Yes, it's I," laughed a young voice, and a girl of about 20 came into the room. "And why are you sitting in the dark?"

"I didn't realize it was so late," explained Muriel, as she turned on the light. She stooped to pick up the box, but it had opened and the ring had fallen out.

"That's a peculiar ring," she said, "and a beautiful one."

Muriel's face crimsoned. "Yes, it has a strange setting," she replied. "I've had it a long time. A very dear friend gave it to me."

"Would you mind telling me about it?" said the girl, softly, and she slipped her arms about the other's neck.

Lois Fuller was a niece of Muriel's landlady, and during the last year had frequently visited her aunt. Muriel had seen quite a lot of the girl, for nearly every evening during her stay she had come up to Muriel's room.

Lois was expectant, and at last the other broke the silence. "I've never told any one before," she said, "but perhaps it may do me good to confide in you. I was very young when I first met Philip Browning."

Here Lois gave a little start, but Muriel did not notice it. "He was an artist and came to our village the summer I was 17. He was a constant visitor at our home during his stay in town, and as he was far superior to any young man I had ever seen, it was not long before I grew to admire him.

"Before he returned to the city in the autumn he told me that he loved me. There was no happier girl in the world than I when he put this ring on my finger. He said that it was an heirloom and showed me another ring which was exactly like it, only a little smaller.

"This he wore on his watch chain. His parents had died when he was a child, and the rings had been left for him. This one was his mother's betrothal ring, and his father used to wear the other ring, as he himself was doing, on his watch chain.

"The days after this were very bright until Philip was obliged to return home. At first I was lonely, but I tried to comfort myself with the thought that we would not be separated very long, for the following June we were to be married. I grew quite happy again as I made my plans for our new home, but in a few weeks my happiness turned into sorrow. My father was suddenly taken ill with pneumonia and in less than a fortnight I was left alone. This was a severe blow to me, for I loved my father very dearly. Now I only had Phillip left.

"Up to that time he had written me long, loving letters, and it was a cruel shock to me the month following my father's death to pick up a paper and read of his marriage."

When Muriel had finished, Lois was looking very thoughtful. "Are you sure that there wasn't some mistake?" she said.

"Oh, no," answered Muriel, "there wasn't any mistake. I only hope he is happy—without doubt he is, and he probably never gives a thought to the girl he used to know so long ago."

Lois murmured a few words of sympathy and then, after a little while, she left Muriel alone.

One evening, about two weeks afterward, a feeling which Muriel could not define compelled her to again look at the cameo ring. After a little while she slipped it on her finger. At this juncture Lois came up to her room, her eyes sparkling and her cheeks flushed with excitement.

"Auntie has gone out," she said, "and I have a caller downstairs—a cousin of mine. I want you to meet him. You'll come down, won't you?"

As they entered the living room, made bright and cozy by a glowing open fire, Muriel started as a tall, familiar figure stepped toward them.

Philip Browning! Could it be possible? Yes, it was he and no other who took her trembling hands in his.

It took her only a few minutes to find out that there had been a mistake after all. It was Philip's brother who had married, and it was through an error of the paper that Philip's name was used.

He told her how pained he was when he received the letter unopened, and how he had written after that several times, only to have every letter returned to him in the same way. At last he had been forced to believe that she cared for him no longer. It was then that he had gone abroad, and he had returned home only two months ago.

"I owe my good fortune in finding you to Lois," he said, and he looked around gratefully, but his cousin had slipped from the room.

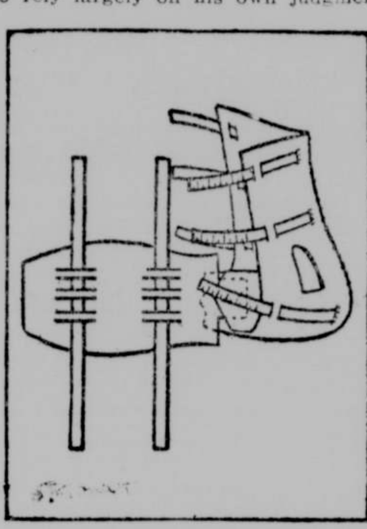
Among the Browning's possessions there is nothing they prize more than the cameo rings.

SCIENCE and INVENTION

MEASURE FEET CORRECTLY

Device, Invented by Massachusetts Man, Equipped with Tape, Fits Closely Around Foot.

Custom-made shoes arep likely to be more comfortable through the invention of a Massachusetts man. Where formerly the cordwainer was obliged to rely largely on his own judgment and on such measurements as he could obtain with a right-angle rule and a tape measure, he now has a device by which the correct measurements of all important parts of the foot can be procured in a few minutes. There is a heel-piece and sole of soft leather, the former running up well above the ankle. Small tape measures run through slots in both pieces of leather and when the foot is adjusted in the device the tapes are drawn over and around it and the measurements noted. The advantage of this contrivance is that instead of each measurement being taken separately, all are taken in proper relation to each other and when the foot is in the natural position it should occupy in the shoe. The result should be that the shoe is more comfortable.



To Measure Feet.

IS A PUZZLE TO SCIENTISTS

Theory of Atomic Disintegration of Radium Suggests Large Number of Unanswered Problems.

"The greatest of our scientists know little about radium," remarked Prof. H. D. Blackie, of the University of California. "The theory of its atomic disintegration has suggested a large number of problems, some of which remain unanswered. For instance, there is a mystery concerning the nature of the ultimate product or products of the atoms of the two primary elements of radium—uranium and thorium. There is some ground, but no positive proof that lead is the ultimate product of one, but as to thorium there is no solution.

"Even the origin of radium is unknown. We know that it is an element of intense activity and of great rapidity of disintegration, resembling its short-lived and active constituents. The period of the average life of radium is not accurately known, but it can not be more than a few thousand years, some say 2,500 years. Thus in a few centuries all the radium in existence today will be gone. What there was of it in the world, say at the time of the building of the Pyramids, must have largely vanished by this time through disintegration."

Human Skull Elastic.

Fortunately the human skull, although composed of bones, is elastic—much more so than one would think. The average male adult skull, in fact, is so elastic that it may be compressed lateraly in diameter by a blow or pressure applied at the center of area at right angles to the surface at that point by 1½ centimeters, or about six-tenths of an inch, recovering its original diameter and form without breaking.

Diseases Cured by Cold Air.

Diseases cured or improved by cold air are specified in American Medicine as malaria, tuberculosis, digestive disturbances, yellow fever, tetanus and organic troubles affecting the blood pressure.

Face Immersed in Water.

To enable a person to keep his face immersed in water for several minutes, as for facial massage, a Washington man has invented a clip to close the nostrils and a rubber tube to admit air through the mouth.

Test for Smokeless Powder.

Ultra-violet rays from a quartz mercury vapor lamp have been found to accelerate the spontaneous decomposition of smokeless powders, and are purposed as a test of the stability of such powders.

Many Languages Taught.

French, German and English are taught in the schools of Holland, and pupils are required to pass an examination in these languages before graduation.

Highest Scientific Station.

The highest scientific station in the world is on the summit of Mount Misti, an extinct volcano in southern Peru. It is 19,000 feet above sea level.

TRAINING THE DOG TO WORK

For Farm Use Scotch Collies Are Most Useful and Besides They Are Most Companionable.

Scotch Collies are the most useful dogs for the farm, besides being the most companionable. They are naturally intelligent and do not range over the country, as do most dogs. With proper care a Scotch Collie pup can be trained to do almost any dog trick. A well-trained Collie will bring stock from the pasture more satisfactorily than most boys. The herdsman at the Kansas Agricultural college has a Collie dog which is very useful for that purpose.

The demand for Scotch Collies is steadily increasing as their value on the farm becomes known. It is better to buy pups or young dogs, as they are more easily trained. They usually are black, with tan legs and tan dots over the eyes and feet, tail tipped with white, and often with white collars. With their large, shaggy, silky coats they are very pretty. As house dogs, they have no equals.

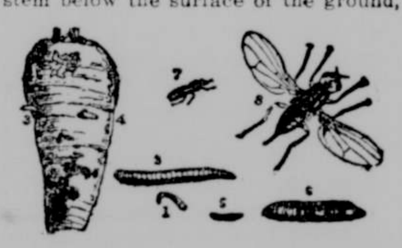
The pup must be treated kindly. Scolding and whipping will soon spoil him. In training him, always use the same words and he will soon learn to know what you mean. After he has learned one lesson well it is no trouble to train him to do other things. When he is older, if you have to whip him for disobedience, be sure that he is again friendly with you before you let him go. If you do not you are likely to spoil him. It requires patience to train a dog right.

EUROPEAN ENEMY OF CARROT

Rust-Fly, of Recent Importation, Does Much Damage to Roots—Excellent Remedy Given.

The carrot rust-fly is a very serious enemy to the plant. It is a comparatively recent importation from Europe, having first been observed in this country about twenty-five years ago. Its attack may first be noticed in spring, when the leaves of young carrots turn a reddish color, and on examination the roots will be found to be covered with rusty blotches—hence the name of the insect.

The parent of the mischief is a small two-winged fly, quarter of an inch long, body dark green, head and legs pale yellow and the eyes red. From the eggs, which are laid on the stem below the surface of the ground, the young maggots make their way into the root, and tear the tissues in a similar manner to the cabbage maggot; the attack causes the rusty blotches to appear. The maggots of a later brood infest the full-grown roots and continue their work of destruction in the root-house during the winter. Celery and parsnips are also attacked.



Carrot Rust-Fly in Its Various Stages and Damaged Carrot.

Preventive measures seem to be the only remedies available. To deter the fly from laying her eggs, the rows of young carrots, when ready for thinning out, should be sprayed with kerosene emulsion, or dusted with sand or plaster in which coal oil is mixed, half a pint being used to a pailful of the material. The application should be made weekly, and especialy after hoeing, until about the middle of July.

Good Roads & Farm Notes

By means of seed corn selection, the corn crop is moving northward.

Poultry manure is particularly good for forcing the growth of onions.

It is none too soon to begin to think about putting up a silo for next fall.

For the West there is still no better variety of early potatoes than Early Ohio.

A proper kit for farm work is about as handy a thing as the average farmer can buy.

The asparagus should have had a coat of manure last fall, but better late than never.

Tobacco stems strewn on the ground at the base of rose plants will help to keep away insects.

Big prices for sweet wotato plants demand first pulling, or no later than the second at the most.

No land is so rich that its owner can afford to waste the manure that is made by his farm stock.

Don't plant the large varieties of cucumbers expecting to raise as many as if the cluster kinds were used.

Some enterprising gardener should work up a fancy trade on A1 vegetables in the neighborhood of cities of 5,000 or over.

Nurse the young clover and the alfalfa, plan for more of both another season, also a large acreage of root crops and pumpkins.

Alfalfa does not attain maturity until the third or fourth year; therefore, do not sow it expecting to get the best results in less time.

For general or common use, caustic or burnt lime or ground limestone are employed almost exclusively for the correction of soil abnormalities.

Two blades of grass where only one grew before are all right provided each blade is as good as the one, and also provided that the cost is not too great.

Winnie and the Widower

By Emeric Hulme Beaman

"It's the first time," said Winnie, letting her eyes droop, "it's the first time that we have been quite alone together—since it happened."

The widower seemed struck by the circumstance.

"Yes," he replied consideringly, "I believe it is—I positively believe it is."

"I—I hope," she said timidly, "I hope you've got over it—by now?"

The widower reflected.

"I think I have," he answered conscientiously; "I'm almost sure I have. You see, I have been trying hard—traveling and all that sort of thing, you know. I finished up at Monte Carlo. The place cheered me wonderfully; I lost quite a lot of money at the tables."

"I think that was very wrong of you," said Winnie, sternly. "Gambling is wicked."

"Ah—but if you knew what a relief it was to be able to do something wicked again," sighed the widower, "you would overlook it. Do you know, I was gradually becoming almost too good to live. It gave me quite a shock, when I realized it. My constitution would not have stood the strain much longer, I am certain."

"The older men grow the worse they get," declared Winnie with the air of one delivering a profound epigram.

"That, of course, is the natural tendency," he admitted. "It doesn't do to check it—beyond a certain point." He sighed again at this sudden contemplation of man's innate depravity. "It's like suppressing measles," he added a little inconsequently.

Winnie was silent for a moment. Then she looked up suddenly, fixing her large, blue, childish eyes on the widower's abstracted countenance.

"I can't think," she protested, "what on earth ever made you marry her."

The widower withdrew his gaze slowly from vacancy and let it rest on her face with mild wonder.

"You didn't know my wife," he remarked cryptically.

"I don't see that that would have helped to explain what made you marry her," persisted Winnie.

"It would have helped immensely," he corrected. "It would have afforded a complete and satisfactory explanation, in fact."

Never Mind the Next Dance.

Winnie shook her head.

"I don't understand," she admitted. "It has puzzled me ever since—especially as . . . as—" She faltered and blushed.

"Exactly," said the widower. "Especially as that was the case."

"Don't be absurd!" exclaimed Winnie wrathfully. "All the same, I should like to know," she added, with true feminine pertinacity, "what made you marry her?"

"Shall I tell you?" he asked calmly.

"Do, please," entreated Winnie.

"She did," said the widower.

"She did? What do you mean?"

"I mean that she made me marry her," explained the widower patiently.

"Your wife?" demanded Winnie, opening wide eyes of amazement upon him.

"Yes. She was a woman of the most extraordinary determination. She was very rich, too." He sighed. "Money is such a power," he added.

"Then," said Winnie, with an air of stern rebuke, "it was not a love match at all?"

"Well, perhaps not exactly what you would describe as a love match," he conceded; "although she pretended to be very devoted to me. I may add that she had a rather remarkable way of showing her devotion at times."

"What sort of a remarkable way?" inquired Winnie, becoming interested. "Did she pet you too much?"

"Hardly too much," replied the widower reflectively. "You see, the poor girl had a somewhat fiery temper. She was terribly jealous—entirely, oh, quite entirely without cause," he hastened to add. "Nevertheless, she would not allow me on any consideration to speak to a woman under forty-five."

"That must have been a great hardship," murmured Winnie.

"I could have supported it with equanimity," he sighed. "But she latterly developed various uncomfortable eccentricities. Among other things she became a vegetarian, and compelled me to live on herbs, like herself. She embraced the absurd theory that two meals a day were enough for human beings to subsist upon, and from that moment I never knew what it was not to feel hungry. It was this practice, I believe, that eventually carried her off."

"She—she was not very young?" hazarded Winnie.

"Poor girl—no! She—she had been, I believe. But she outgrew it. She was in her sixty-fourth year when she expired."

"Sixty-four!" exclaimed Winnie.

"Sixty-three," he corrected.

"O—oh!" ejaculated Winnie in a long-drawn gasp. "And you—you were only twenty-five when you married her!"

"When she married me," the widower interposed mildly. "Yes; I couldn't help that, you know. It was three years ago now, so I became considerably older as we went along."

"She was old enough to have been your grandmother!" exclaimed Winnie indignantly.

"True; but she would never have consented to act in that relation towards me—though, of course, I shoud have preferred it, if it could have been arranged."

"I feel," declared Winnie severely, "that we are treating the subject much too flippantly."

"You've not been married," he sighed; "so you don't know."

"That's true," conceded Winnie meditatively. "I don't know—at least, not yet—"

"There's no reason why you shouldn't," put in the widower, with sudden eagerness.

"Oh, but I am not sure that I want to," she objected.

"You would then enjoy the advantage of being in a position to prove your assertion," he urged.

"And, supposing I found—when it was too late—that I was wrong?" she demurred.

"You wouldn't," said the widower, with emphasis. "You would find that—in your case—theory and practice would entirely coincide. To begin with, you—are not a vegetarian."

"But," protested Winnie, "my husband might insist upon making me become one."

"I can answer for him," said the widower decisively. "Do you know—Winnie—by the way, you don't mind my calling you 'Winnie,' do you?"

"'Winnie' has always struck me as being the very prettiest name a girl could have—Winnie."

"I didn't say you could!" she exclaimed.

"I have a wonderful way of taking things for granted," explained the widower airily. "But do you know, it just occurred to me—while you were talking and while you were showing me what a beautiful thing marriage might be with a sweet girl (who wasn't a vegetarian)—it just occurred to me that I was most frightfully fond of you—"

"Oh," said Winnie, rising. "There's the next dance beginning, and I—"

"Sit down," said the widower, placing a detaining hand on her arm. "Never mind the next dance. What do you think I came here for tonight? I didn't come to dance. I came to see you. I have been waiting to see you for—for months; but they told me you were engaged, and I kept away."

"I—I broke it off," she murmured, looking down.

"Was—was he a vegetarian?" asked the widower anxiously.

Winnie raised her eyes to his, and her cheeks turned suddenly crimson.

"No, but I, I—"

The widower gave a little triumphant laugh.

"My darling," he whispered in her ear, "we can make it up to each other all the rest of our lives!"

READY FOR WAR IN THE AIR

France Already Has Organized the Fourth Arm of This Most Important Service.

France and Germany lead the world in military aviation; and, despite sensational reports to the contrary, France is at present considerably ahead of Germany. France has at this moment 208 avions, or military aeroplanes, actually ready for use, and a grand total of 234 machines built and building. These are divided into thirteen squadrillas, or squadrons; eight field and five garrison squadrons. The military aviation unit, as stated by the French war minister in the senate, is a squadron of eight avions, in three sections—monoplanes, biplanes and multiplanes—plus a reserve section. Each squadron is provided with transport and material, comprising eleven or twelve motor wagons with tractors, a repair car, and a rapid motor car.

At the end of 1912 the French war office will be able to dispose of 344 avions, comprised in thirty-two squadrons, twenty-seven field and five garrison squadrons. This total includes the 100 avions which are to be presented to the state by the eighty-seven departments. It is practically certain, however, that France's total at the end of 1912 will be not 344, but between 500 and 600 machines built and building. The 344 government aeroplanes probably will be increased to 400 or more machines from all sources by December, 1912, by which time fully 100 or 150 more will have been ordered by the French war office. It should be remembered that the French rate of progress is an increasing ratio, and that it is the admitted intention of France to produce a fleet of 2,000 to 3,000 aeroplanes, fully equipped and officered for war purposes, within the next three or four years.—W. Joynson Hicks, M. P., in the National Review.

PERCENTAGE OF MALE POPULATION ENTITLED TO VOTE

Statistics as Given by Census Bureau on Those Who Can Cast Their Ballots in the Coming Election.

The Census Bureau has just completed a compilation of statistics of the various classes of the male population of the United States of proper voting age.

The potential voting strength of each State and city is expressed by the number of its males twenty-one years of age and over, excluding the foreign born, who have not become naturalized. But this does not mean the actual number of voters. It represents, rather, that number of males who, from the standpoint of age alone, are eligible to vote, aside from any qualifications based upon education, length of residence, or considerations of a like nature imposed by the national or State government.

The table, as issued by the Census Bureau, shows that the twenty-five principal cities of Massachusetts have a total of 646,783 males of age, out of a total population in the whole State of 1,210,669; the twenty-one principal cities in New York have a total of 1,922,500 males of age, out of a total population of 2,836,773. Of these, 1,433,749 are in New York city alone. Of the other large cities, Chicago has 700,590 males of voting age; Philadelphia, 468,873; St. Louis, 221,913; Boston, 208,321; Cleveland, 177,388; Pittsburgh, 166,424; Baltimore, 163,554; Cincinnati, 113,919; Minneapolis, 105,305; Milwaukee, 113,106; Atlanta, 44,510; New Orleans, 96,967.

The total of the various States is given as follows: Alabama, 513,111; Arkansas, 395,824; California, 920,397; Colorado, 271,648; Connecticut, 347,692; Delaware, 61,887; District of Columbia, 103,761; Florida, 214,195; Georgia, 620,616; Illinois, 1,743,182; Indiana, 822,434; Iowa, 666,672; Kansas, 508,520; Kentucky, 603,454; Louisiana, 414,919; Maine, 235,727; Maryland, 367,908; Massachusetts, 1,021,669; Michigan, 870,876; Minnesota, 642,669; Missouri, 973,062; Montana, 155,017; Nebraska, 353,626; New Hampshire, 336,668; New Jersey, 774,702; New York, 2,836,773; North Carolina, 506,134; Ohio, 1,484,265; Oklahoma, 447,266; Oregon, 257,118; Pennsylvania, 2,309,926; Rhode Island, 163,834; South Carolina, 335,049; Tennessee, 552,668; Texas, 1,003,357; Utah, 104,115; Virginia, 528,532; Washington, 441,294; West Virginia, 338,349; Wisconsin, 683,743.

Frost—And a Play With Words.

There was frost in Connecticut Friday night of last week that "nipped the vegetables and early fruits," and said to be "the latest in that State in a century."

Thomas J. Johnson, living on the beautiful highlands beyond Great Savage, made the same report for his section last Saturday morning, excepting that he could not speak for "the century."

The Mule Question in Mississippi.

This year a certain railroad sent a farmers' special into Mississippi. It drew large crowds and everything went well until the educators struck a town about halfway down the state. At that meeting the speaker was finishing with great eloquence. He declared that Mississippi could produce everything its people needed. Why should they send to other states for products which they could raise themselves?

In mentioning these products he reached this climax: "Why send to Missouri for your mules? Why doesn't Mississippi raise her own mules?"

"Professor," drawled a thin, piercing voice from the middle of the audience, "kin I interrupt you a second?"

"Certainly, sir."

"I'd like to ask you a question."

"I shall be very glad to answer it if I am able," said the expert.

"Well, sir," continued the thin voice slowly and solemnly, "how the thunder kin Mississippi raise her own mules when all her jackasses are in the legislature?"

WHEN LINCOLN RAN

There Was Also Mudthrowing in Politics.

Because of the terrific firing of the mud batteries during the present Presidential convention there are many timorous souls that believe that no candidate has ever been so bitterly assailed as his favorite. True, the Presidential primary has led to political methods that are condemnable, but, nevertheless, they are not entirely new. The North American Review has collected some of the utterances when Lincoln ran for the Presidency.

From the New York Herald.

"May 19, 1860—The Republican convention at Chicago has nominated Abraham Lincoln of Illinois, for President of the United States—a third rate Western lawyer, poorer than even poor Pierce. They pass over Seward, Chase and Banks, who are statesmen and able men, and they take a fourth-rate lecturer, who cannot speak good grammar, and who to raise the wind, delivers his backyard, illiterate compositions at $200 apiece. Our readers recollect that this peripatetic politician visited New York two or three months ago on his financial tour, when, in return for the most unmitigated trash, interlarded with coarse and clumsy jokes, he filled his empty pockets with dollars coined out of the Republican fanaticism."

"May 22, 1860—The candidate for President, Abraham Lincoln, is an uneducated man—a vulgar village politician without any experience worth mentioning in the practical duties of statesmanship, and only noted for some very unpopular votes which he gave while a member of Congress. The comparison between Seward and this illiterate Western boor is odious—it is as Hyperion to a satyr."

From the Albany Atlas and Argus:

"May 21, 1860—Mr. Lincoln was first heard of in politics a year ago last fall, when limping with wounds and howling with anguish, he was driven through the State of Illlnois by Douglas and defeated with the tacit approval of the majority of his own party, and with the publicly expressed gratulation of Greeley, Weed and others. Last spring he made his debut in this State at an orator and commenced charging for his speeches at the rate of $100 apiece, and was forced to desist amid such public expressions of contempt that he may be said to have been fairly hissed out of the State. He has never held public office of any credit, and is not known except as a slang-whanging stump speaker of a class with which every party teams, and of which all parties are ashamed."

From the Boston Post:

"May 21, 1860—Lincoln has merely a talent for demagogue appeal that was thought to be worth in New England $50 or $100 a speech by those who hired him; but some who heard him were surprised that he should be considered a great man. He can only be the fanatical tool of the fanatical host he will lead on."

Mud-throwing is as old as politics and politics began when there were two men, and one of them wanted office.

Cheer up, oh ye doubtful, for the worst is yet to come—wait until we go into the campaign proper and not a mere convention, and then it will be time to run for the cyclone cellar.

"DEAN OF MOONSHINERS" FREE

Nathan Tusing, King of Hardy County Distillers of Mountain Dew Acquitted.

Oakland had a visitor the other day in the person of Nathan Tusing, of Hardy county, West Va., who was on his way to Parkersburg, W. Va., to stand trial on the charge of moonshining and who spent the day here visiting his brother, Isaac Tusing, having been indicted upon the charge by a former Federal grand jury.

Nathan's trail came up on Saturday and after hearing the evidence the jury acquitted him. He is a resident of Hardy county, W. Va., and has been convicted upon a former occasion for moonshining. He is sixty-two years of age and is known as the "dean of moonshiners" in his community.

Briar Patch LoKals.

Raz Barlow went to Tickville the first of the week to watch the train come in. He brought a bottle of train smoke back with him.

Yam Sims arrived home Thursday evening wearing a mule collar that he bought at Bounding Billows.

Fit Smith fell out of a wild cherry tree in the Gander Creek woods the other day. Next time he will climb nothing but tame cherry trees.

Cricket Hicks began a search this week for fishing worms and will leave no stone unturned.

It is rumored that Jefferson Potlocks is about to get married for the third time. A good many peoples sentiments are against this third term proposition.

Ellick Hellwanger surprised the Dog Hill preacher by going to the church last third Sunday. When he went in several looked around and appeared surprised as Ellick is considered a sinner and they wondered what he was doing there.

A swarm of bumblebees got after Columbus Allsop Wednesday morning and pursued him for several miles before he could get home and shut the door. The bees then settled on the door knob where they will wait for him to come out.

The Standard Oil Company cannot get the best of Washington Hocks. Every time the company raises the price of its oil he turns his light down a little bit lower.

A committee started over to Thunderation neighborhood the other day with a lot of flowers for a sick man but changed their minds before carrying out the movement deciding that it would be better to wait until the man died.

Miss Flutie Belcher has appeared along with the flowers and other natural beauties of Spring with a new pink dress that fits both going and coming. Everything is complete about the dress except the buttons have not yet been put on but until then she will use pins.

While passing under a tree on the Gimlet creek road the other day Fit Smith was hit on the head by someone. Fit at once notified the deputy constable to look for the man higher up.

The Excelsior Fiddling Band had an engagement to act as an orchestra for the Tickville opera house during a show there Saturday night but the band got so interested in the things going on on the stage they forgot all about playing until it was too late.

Slim Pickene has been engaged by Luke Mathswela to stand in his watermelon patch this summer with an old ragged hat on.

We need more light on this potato planting proposition. There are persons who declare that if potatoes are planted in the full of the moon there will be much vine but no potatoes. What do you think about it? One man argues that if the moon has an influence over the ocean it surely can affect an Irish potato.

While shoeing Yam Sims mule the other day, Dry Brain Clark let the mule get a squint at him—story continued in Obituary Notices.

Miss Flutie Belcher smiled at Goslin Clark the other night at the Hog Ford church sociable. She said that if it had been any other place she'd have laughed right out loud.

Washington Hocks has donated a pop corn popper to the Dog Hill church for to take up contributions with so everybody can see how much the Old Miser gives.

Yam Sims while at Pounding Billows Tuesday morning bought a lot of bologna sausage but says it was so tight he could hardly eat it.

The Tickville Tidings deplores the publication of such a large number of papers in the United States. The editor says nearly everybody he approaches is already taking more papers than they can read.

Ellick Heliwanger has swapped for a new pistol and is preparing to shoot a man over near Thunderation as soon as he can get his witnesses organized.

Dock Hocks, who has been operating his barber shop out under the tree in front of of his blacksmith shop since the warm weather set in will have to move back inside as the rain washes the lather off the faces of his customers.

The Hogwallow Postmaster received a very inquisitive letter the other day from the government. It inquired into all of the private affairs of the office and he is so indignant he refuses to answer it.

GIVE THEM A START

This would be a good time for you to start your young folks on the road to Success.

Early training in the practice of self-denial; instruction as to the use and value of money; opportunities for earning and saving money; all these tend to fix and fasten the children in the ways of thrift and prosperity.

We most gladly assist the young people in getting started.

One Dollar opens an account and entitles the depositor to one of our Savings Banks.

We shall be pleased to have our Garrett County friends call and open an account with us.

Proved Harmlessness of Comets.

Twice during the nineteenth century the earth plunged directly through the tail of a comet—in 1819 and again in 1861. Once it was immersed to a depth of 300,000 miles. The more imaginative astronomers thought they detected a peculiar glow in the atmosphere, but nothing more.

While the proposed coinage of half-cent and three-cent pieces has provoked many interesting objections, the most curious of all comes from Pennsylvania. It comes, too from a church leader, none other, in fact, than Bishop Lengel, of the Followers of Christ denomination. That worthy man opposes the new coins on the simple ground that they would result in a shrinkage of church revenues. His belief is that many persons who nowadays drop a nickel or a dime into the contribution box on Sunday would cut their offerings to three cents or half a cent if the smaller coins were available. But the good bishop, however, finds one appealing feature in the projected coinage, and that is that children who now contribute nothing might give half a cent, and that parents unwilling to give a nickel might feel disposed to donate three cents. The bishop's argument against the coins of smaller denominations goes only half way. Why not demand the abolition of the one-cent, five-cents and ten-cent pieces, in order that a person desirous of contributing to the church fund would have to drop at least twenty-five ceuts into the box.

THE DEATH RECORD

JOSEPH HENRY SMITHMAN.

The death of Mr. Joseph Henry Smithman occured Saturday afternoon, June 15, at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Mary Lowenstein, on Oak street in Oakland, after an illness extending over a period of several months. The cause of Mr. Smithman's death was valvular heart disease.

Mr. Smithman was born in Oakland on January 26, 1854, and was aged 58 years, 4 months and 20 days. He was the only son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Augustus H. Smithman, who died a number of years ago.

Mr. Smithman is survived by three sister: Mrs. Lowenstein and Mrs. John A. Wolf of Oakland, and Mrs. James M. Litzinger, of Grafton. The deceased was never married. He was a consistent and life long member of the Catholic church of Oakland from which edifice his funeral occured Tuesday morning. Rev. James E. Connell, the pastor, conducted the services.

Engagement Announced.

At a tea given on Saturday afternoon by Misses Nellie and Grace Blocher of Gettysburg, in honor of their guests, Misses Sara Brumbaugh and Elizabeth McLaughlin, announcement was made of the engagement of Miss Grace Blocher and Mr. Edmund L. Manges, of Champaign, Ill. Mr. Manges is the youngest son of Rev. and Mrs. E Manges, of Oakland, who recently went from here to Campaign, Ill., to establish a Lutheran church.

FISH DISTRIBUTION.

Upwards of Twenty Thousand Trout Placed in Garrett County Streams.

Tuesday evening train No. 5, the westbound evening accommodation, placed in the siding at the station here one of the numerous cars belonging to the United States Fish Commission from which some 30 cans containing about 20,000 trout of the rainbow and brook variety, was distributed to residents of Garrett county, who placed them in streams in various portions of the county.

In Herrington Creek ten thousand of the rainbow trout were placed by Messrs. R. S. Jamison and James H. Painter. Mr. D. McLean secured several thousand for his dam located near McHenry, while Fish Commissioner Smith secured a large number for the State nursery located at Lake Brown near Thayerville.

Lawn Fete Postponed.

The Lawn Fete announced by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church to be held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Jones on Tuesday evening, owing to the very inclement weather, was postponed until a later date. Announcement of the event will be made later on.

MARYLAND THEATRE

GOVERNOR'S BOY

14 PEOPLE 14

Pretty Songs, Costumes, Girls and Dances

In offering this attraction to the patrons of the Maryland Theatre, the management again gives an attraction which will rank with the dollar and a half shows. In fact, it is the same identical show that George Cohen, the popular comedian and play writer, gives to the public with a company of thirty people, and those forming the cast of this attraction are the same as play in the large company.

There are fourteen big song hits, besides six big acts of vaudeville. The scenic effects and costumes used in staging this small show of fourteen people cost alone two thousand dollars, and the music and songs are all by the popular writer, Mr. Cohen.

Again we can assure you that the performance will be absolutely clean in every respect, and we are giving you the same company, same songs, same dances and same people that play in such theaters as Ford's of Baltimore City and the National of Washington, D. C.

Oakland people should take the advantage of this opportunity and see for the first time one of Mr. Cohen's musical comedies at popular prices.

Seats on Sale Saturday and Monday at Gonder's Pharmacy, and at popular prices.

In Barbara's Garden

By Molly McMaster

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Janice was not in love with either of her two good-looking suitors. Neither Jimmy, big and blonde, nor Caroll, lithe and dark, had caused her butterfly heart to thrill.

But Janice realized that either one was worthy of her hand and she had decided to accept one of them.

"Which shall it be?" she asked half aloud. Even as the question formed itself she caught sight of Jimmy's motor cycle and at the same time remembered Caroll's reputation as a sprinter. Janice smiled.

"I will marry the one of you who first brings me a bunch of one hundred pink sweet peas," she exclaimed suddenly.

Both men cast aggrieved eyes at her. Sweet peas were as yet a scarcity, owing to the youth of the season, and there was but one garden in the village that boasted a green house. That one was a mile or more from the outskirts of the village.

"One hundred pink sweet peas!" she called after them. Caroll had turned swiftly and swung into his steady athletic run and Jimmy was dragging his motor cycle from under the apple tree. Caroll was a good three squares away when the cycle went off like a shotgun, causing Janice the usual jump at its fierce chugging.

She sank down onto the cool veranda and then jumped up suddenly. A man had turned in at the gate. A flush swept over her face and her eyes sparkled. "Billy!" she cried out, "I thought you were in South Africa!"

The man took both little outstretched hands. "The same lovely Janice," he smiled. "May I?"

Down the road a man on wheels and a man on foot raced toward the long green house in the distance.

Out in the garden, with pink sunbonnet hanging from strings about her neck, Barbara tended her rows of budding sweet peas. She caressed each blossom with loving hands and snipped with her big scissors while she hummed a tuneful air.

She Carried a Tray.

So busy was she with her flowers that when two men seemed literally to pounce upon her she smothered a startled scream. One was panting and breathless, the other was reeking with dust and the odor of oil.

"I want one hundred pink sweet peas!" demanded the voices in perfect unison.

Barbara had recovered herself and now smothered a laugh.

"I have not two hundred pink blossoms in my garden," she told them.

"Only one hundred," both men corrected. They glowered at each other with such ferocious eyes that Barbara half retreated toward the house.

Her wide, beautiful, startled eyes brought both men to their senses and a realization of the spectacle they presented. Jimmy smiled sheepishly and apologized for his abrupt speech and his bedraggled condition. Caroll assumed his most deferential tone and informed the girl in the pink sunbonnet that they were there on a wager.

Barbara laughed merrily. She seemed to have grasped the situation as if by intuition.

"You are both tired and hot," she said with quick sympathy, "so if you care you may go and rest in that little summer house by the trees. There is a pump just beyond at which you can refresh both the exterior and interior man. I will endeavor to find a hundred pink blossoms," she laughed again. "After that you will have to toss for them."

"There seemed to be bunches of them in that green house," Jimmy suggested but with eager interest. He watched the pink clad figure bending over the flowers.

"I send all my hot house blossoms to New York," the girl told them in her sweet voice. "The few early outdoor ones are all I have to sell."

"There may not be a hundred in any case," remarked Caroll with a suggestion of hope in his voice.

Barbara smiled under cover of the pink bonnet. "Perhaps not," she said, trying to keep the laughter out of her voice. "In that case," she added, "the girl of your wager—will have to try another method." The eyes under the bonnet smiled at each man in turn. "I will do my best—however," she consoled them.

Jimmy glowered at Caroll and Caroll glared at Jimmy. With a gradual lagging interest in sweet peas they made their silent way to the summer house.

After a wash at the pump they took up a position in the arbor where the pink sunbonnet might remain within vision. They vouchsafed no word to each other and each was conscious of a desire to go back to the sweet pea hedge and be near the girl who was industriously clipping with her big scissors.

"Sylvia, dear!" they heard her call to some one in the house, "will you bring out a plate of my fresh cookies?"

A moment later Jimmy half started from his seat. Caroll was already standing.

A slim girl in a blue sunbonnet that half concealed a pair of laughing gray eyes came out of the house. She carried a tray upon which a plate of cookies and a pitcher of lemonade invited the thirsty eyes.

Jimmy and Caroll watched her join her sister beside the sweet pea hedge. A laugh floated from under the blue bonnet and then the two girls made their way toward the summer house. One carried a bunch of pink sweet peas and the other the tray.

"I have only ninety-nine pink ones," Barbara's tone conveyed regret. "Do you think—she—would count them?"

"Sure to do so," two masculine voices exclaimed, and with an air of certainty not to be questioned.

"Oh, dear!" sighed the girl in the pink bonnet and turned to her sister in the blue. "Put the tray down any way, dear. Even if these gentlemen do not have to do another Marathon they may as well fortify themselves against the return."

"Barbara—couldn't you spare just one blossom from the hot house—to make up the—"

"Not by any means!" Jimmy cried quickly.

"It wouldn't be fair!" put in Caroll with a hasty look into the eyes beneath the blue bonnet. The girl flushed under the look.

"Then you will just have to risk ninety-nine," Barbara said with well-modulated sympathy.

Suddenly Jimmy smiled at Caroll and Caroll held out a hand to Jimmy.

"She's yours, old man," their voices were as one. The smile faded from each face and their glances drew apart.

"Since the gentlemen are so generous—toward one another," put in Sylvia demurely while suppressed laughter played havoc with her voice, "perhaps we had better toss a coin to see which one wins the lady's—the sweet peas."

"I am afraid my cycle is out of commission," Jimmy lied.

"I couldn't run another foot if I had a million at stake," Caroll lamented the fact with an exaggerated sigh of weariness.

"You are a fine specimen!" Jimmy put in.

"Your cycle must be a very cheap make," Caroll remarked by way of return.

The two men unable longer to restrain themselves, burst into laughter. Silvery, rougish feminine laughter followed.

Simultaneously Jimmy and Carroll put hands to their pockets and drew forth cards and placed them carefully upon the rough table.

"My mother," said Jimmy, "is passionately fond of sweet peas!"

"I have an aunt," Caroll put in with tender inflection, "whose one hobby is a bunch of fresh sweet peas every day."

"In that case you must each have half of these. Barbara blushed as she divided the blossoms.

A momoment later a motor cycle that throbbed up the road and a man on foot, with no sign of fatigue, were being followed by two pairs of eyes. The ones under the blue bonnet turned to the ones under the pink.

"Shall we toss for them, Barbara?"

But fate tossed, instead, and the two girls found husbands by this chance meeting among the flowers.

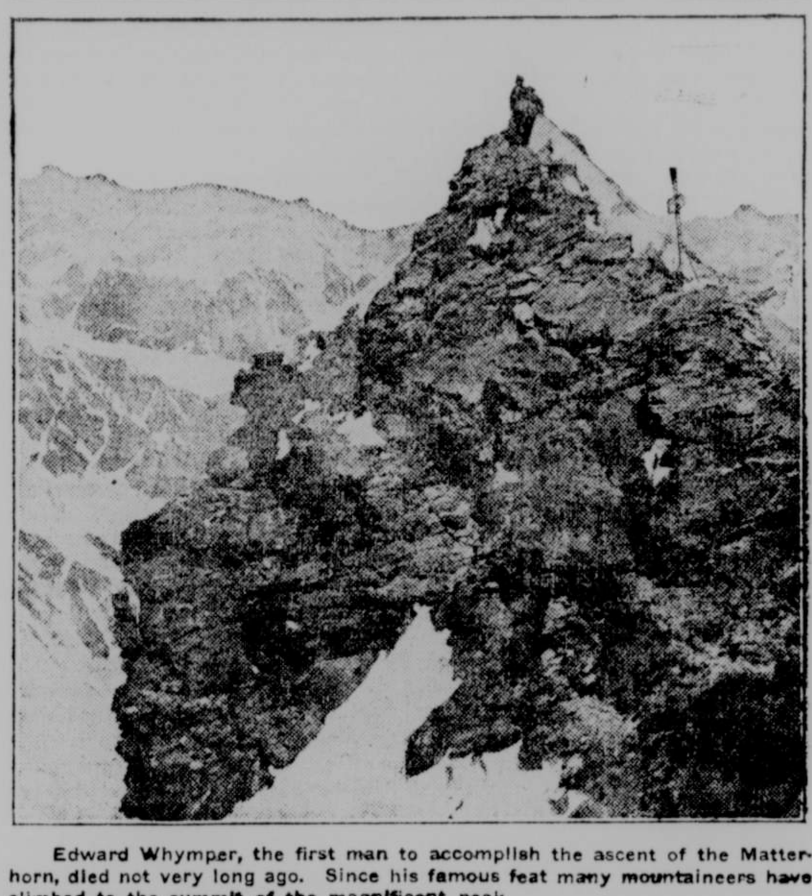
A Mood.

The following delightful bit by John Galesworthy is from the Atlantic Monthly: A quiet owl stole by in the field below, and vanished into the heart of a tree. And, suddenly, above the moor-line, I saw the large moon rising. Cinnamon-colored, it made all things swim, made me uncertain of my thoughts, vague with a mazy feeling. Shapes seemed but drifts of moon-dust, and true reality nothing save a sort of still listening to the wind. And for long I sat, just watching the moon creep up, and hearing the thin, dry rustle of the leaves along the holly hedge. And there came to me this thought: What is this universe—that never had beginning and will never have an end—but a myriad striving to perfect pictures never the same, so blending and fading one into another, that all form one great perfected picture? And what are we—ripples on the tides of a birthless, deathless, equipoised Creative Purpose—but little works of Art!

New Foundation for Cathedral Tower.

The tower, 142 meters high, of Strasburg Cathedral, rests on foundations that are nearly 650 years old, and have evidently become unsound, since for some five years past the doorway has shown cracks, which are continually widening. The remedy that has been decided upon by an international commission of architects is rather surprising. The tower is to rest on a platform constructed of oak tree trunks capable of supporting the eight million kilos which it weighs. The cost is estimated at more than £6,000.—From the Architectural Review.

Actual Summit of Matterhorn



Edward Whymper, the first man to accomplish the ascent of the Matterhorn, died not very long ago. Since his famous feat many mountaineers have climbed to the summit of the magnificent peak.

WRESTLING WITH A SNAKE

A thrilling experience was that of E. W. Copley, in Dallas, Tex., recently, when he came to grips with a sixteen-feet long boa constrictor. Copley had the snake on exhibition in a museum and took him over to Oak Cliff suburb to give him an airing, and to feed him. He tossed five little chickens to the snake, which swallowed them whole, killing them in his gullet by compressing his muscles. Then Copley gave him five eggs. He swallowed them too. After feeding Copley thought the snake was quiet and drowsy, so he and an assistant started to carry him away on a blanket. The assistant stumbled and dropped his end of the blanket. Then the snake woke up, wrapped himself around Copley's legs and was preparing to throw its coils around his body, when Copley seized the snake's head above the jaws, snapped it suddenly backward and broke the neck.

The illustration shows an ingenious musical device of the Chinese, being a whistle that is wired to the tail of a pigeon and plays a musical note when the bird is in flight. Though the whistle looks clumsy, it is of very light construction.

NOVEL WEATHER PROPHET

M. Violle recently demonstrated before the Academy of Sciences of Paris an interesting mechanism, invented by another scientist, M. Flageolet, by which it will be possible to detect 24 hours in advance great variations in the weather. This little instrument is a wireless receiver, of such acute sensitiveness that it records a storm at a distance of 300 miles. It takes an average storm about 24 hours to travel this distance.

MARRIED IN THE SADDLE

Married on the main street of Fort Klamath, Ore., while astride of their saddle horses was the unique way in which Joseph Hessig and Mrs. Fannie V. Marsh, a pretty widow, began life together the other day. The bridegroom came from his home in Siskiyou to Fort Klamath, where he formerly lived, and purchased a large number of beef cattle. He was met there by his bride-to-be, and together they went out and rounded up the stock. Mr. Hessig had secured a marriage license and he and Mrs. Marsh drove the cattle from the feeding grounds into the city. Rushing them into a corral, they rode to the store of John H. Hessig, brother of the husband-to-be, and asked him to telephone for Justice C. C. Jackson, who soon answered the call. While the two sat on their horses in the street he pronounced the words which made Mrs. Marsh the wife of Mr. Hessig.

FIVE DOLLAR CIGARS

It was not so long ago that dollar cigars were a luxury. Now the demand for cigars selling at five dollars each is so great that Havana manufacturers cannot fill it. Most of this demand is to supply banquets of the ultra-rich. A considerable part of it is from Heidelberg university, Germany, where the students never seem to get enough to satisfy their appetite. A favorite method they have of smoking them is to put one in an Oriental water pipe, while five or six will each take a tube and smoke it. This five-dollar brand is known to the trade as "promenties." It is about sixteen inches long and looks more like a yellow Roman candle than a cigar.

MOUNTAIN STOPS WIRELESS

It has been observed repeatedly on board vessels stationed west of Cape Otway (at the southern tip of Australia) that it was impossible to communicate by wireless telegraphy with vessels situated in the port of Melbourne. This has been attributed to the fact that the mountain which forms the cape contains large quantities of metallic minerals, which absorb electric waves.

TRANSPLANT DEAD EYE

GRAFTING OF CORNEA RESTORES SIGHT TO FRENCH BOY.

Successful Experiment Marks Epoch in Ocular Surgery — Diseases That Distress Some Serve to Give Relief to Others.

Paris.—By slow but sure steps science and human skill are widening the boundaries of the possible, and in no department of beneficent activity is this progress more apparent than in the domain of surgery. Not so long ago the chief aim of operative surgery was the removal of a damaged limb or the extirpation of a malignant growth. Then came what may, without irreverent presumption, be styled creative surgery, when the object was restoration instead of destruction, when skin could be grafted, a severed nerve spliced and even a damaged or useless organ repaired or replaced by a healthy one. It has remained for a clever French ophthalmic surgeon to give back sight to the blind. He has been successful in one case only, but what has been done once can be repeated.

Several months ago Dr. Magitot made the experiment of grafting a human cornea, kept in a state of slackened vitality, upon the eye of a young man whose sight had been practically destroyed by lime. Numerous experiments had been previously made with corneas of animal origin, but they had all failed to give the desired result. Dr. Magitot made his daring attempt—and succeeded.

The transparent cornea of the eye is one of the most delicate of all the organic tissues. Very soon after death it becomes opaque. But by placing it in certain conditions as to "milieu" and temperature scientists have succeeded in preserving it in a healthy condition—that is to say, alive—for several days. This discovery of the possibility of preservation of the cornea is doubtless destined to render incalculable services to suffering humanity.

At the Academy of Sciences Professor Dastre performed the pleasing duty of describing the results of Dr. Magitot's operation. A boy fifteen years old had almost lost sight in one eye in consequence of a burn from hot lime. An opaque film entirely covered the cornea so that it became impossible for the rays of light to make even the faintest impression on the retina.

Seven months ago Dr. Magitot cut a small rectangular "window" in the diseased cornea, and in this he inserted a fragment of transparent tissue, obtained from an unfortunate patient who had lost his sight through another eye disease, that of glaucoma, but whose cornea remained intact. It had, however, to be removed, owing to the pain which it caused him. Thus, what on one hand constituted a relief for one patient became a means of remedying the infirmity of another.

"The adherence of the tissues," said M. Dastre, "was complete in eight days. A transparent window had been placed in the opaque wall. A few weeks later the bandages were removed and the young man was able to see sufficiently to walk about without assistance.

"For seven months this condition of things has persisted, and the sight of the damaged eye has reached one-tenth of the normal, which is enough to enable him to see and move about.

"These facts," M. Dastre continued, "are in accordance with those presented to the Biological Society by the learned French surgeon, Alexis Carrel, of the Rockefeller Institute, of New York, on the possibility of preserving living tissues outside the human organism and afterwards transplanting them on other living organisms. Received with much reserve and amidst general incredibility, these statements have now been, at least, partially confirmed."

MAN BESTS CUNNING WOLF

Montana Hunter, by Clever Ruse, Captures Animal Seven Feet Long.

Bozeman, Mont.—Man's intelligence has won at last against brute cunning with the capture by George W. Brown, a trapper, of a large gray timber wolf, which had been roaming Brown's territory all winter, but which until of late had been too wily to caught. The wolf's pelt is seven feet one inch in length and is more than three feet wide at its widest point. Brown captured the wolf by setting his trap by a rope sling without dismounting from the horse he was riding and without leaving any traces of man in the vicinity.

Prof. Payr Grafts Thyriod Gland From Healthy Child on Liver of an Imbecile.

Leipsic, Germany.—A remarkable operation has just been performed with great success on an imbecile child by Prof. Erwin Payr, director of the surgical clinic attached to the Leipsic university.

The professor planted a piece of the tyhroid gland taken from a healthy child born of a healthy mother into the liver of an imbecile child, who immediately afterward began to improve in intelligence, which steadily increased until a complete cure was effected and the patient was discharged from the clinic.

MAKE STUDY OF ATMOSPHERE

Kites and Balloons Used to Lift Self-Recording Instruments to Obtain Air Conditions.

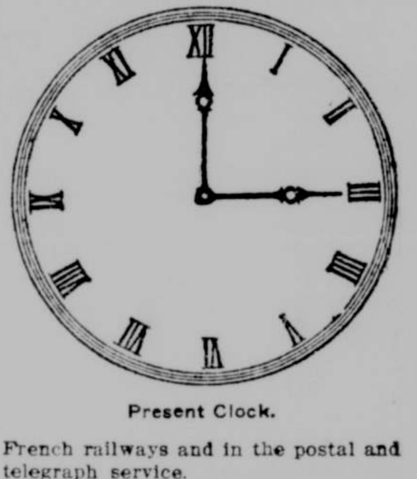
M. A. Lawrence Rouch, at the Blue Hill observatory, near Boston, in 1894, was the first to employ kites, attached to steel wires, to lift self-recording instruments and so obtain records of the various conditions in the atmosphere. Since that year they have been used extensively in this country, in Europe, and from the decks of steamships, frequently ascending three and four miles into the air, writes Paul Foster in the American Review of Reviews. About the same time the small ballons-sondes, or sounding balloons, were perfected in France, and began to be employed to carry instruments far higher, some reaching the extraordinary height of 15 miles.

These discoveries and improved methods of research led to the organization of an international commission for scientific aeronautics, under the auspices of which measurements are made simultaneously at an increasing number of stations throughout the world. Started as a private enterprise, the work is now an international undertaking, and balloons and kites have been employed monthly for some years at many stations in Europe, and within very recent years at one or two stations in the United States.

ADVANTAGES OF NEW CLOCK

Twenty-Four Hours on Dial Prevents Serious Mistakes in Arranging Appointments by Wire.

Beginning June 1 the hours of the day will be numbered from 1 to 24, from midnight to midnight, on all French railways and in the postal and telegraph service.



Present Clock.

The new arrangement is intended to replace the awkward "a. m." and "p. m." designations. A partial test in the telegraph service has given satisfactory results.

New time tables for all the lines will be printed and instead of 4 p. m., for instance, the simple number 16 will be used, and instead of 11 p. m., the hour will be designated as 23, and so on. Postmarks will be similarly registered.

GNASHING OF TEETH NOT IN HELL FIRE.

Twisting the Scriptures Has Been Making Infidels.

Pastor Russell Shows That His Text Refers to Sorrow, Disappointment, Chagrin, That Came Upon Jews In Overthrow of Their Nation, A. D. 70.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Philadelphia, June 16.—Pastor Russell had his usual crowded house today. He delivered two addresses. We report one of them from the text, "The children of the Kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." (Matthew viii. 11, 12.)

The speaker declared that in common with the majority of ministers he had misinterpreted this and similar Scriptures to refer to all the unsaintly of mankind and to imply that they are writhing in torture in a hell whose location is unknown and which he now sees to be a human tradition without authority of the Word of God.

The Pastor analyzed his text and showed that it was addressed to the Jews, that they for sixteen centuries had been God's favored nation, in harmony with His promise to Abraham. They had much advantage every way over all the other nations—not only in the fact that the promises were given to them and the assistful influences of the Law, but additionally that to them were sent the Prophets with their encouraging messages.

Notwithstanding all these favors but comparatively few of that nation were in the heart condition to be accepted of God, to be Messiah's joint-heirs in His Kingdom. As the natural seed of Abraham they were the children or heirs of the Kingdom, and to them Jesus presented Himself. All of His miracles and teachings went to them, yet only a few were in such condition of heart that they could receive this Message.

In the context Jesus referred to the fact that the Gentile centurion who had none of Israel's privileges had more faith than any Jew. Commenting upon this the Great Teacher declared that God would take from the Jews the special privileges, except such Jews as were "Israelites indeed," and that He would complete the number of His elect by a selection of saintly characters from amongst Gentiles.

The Election Hath Obtained It.

St. Paul declares, "Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for, but the election hath obtained it and the rest of the nation were blinded." (Romans xi. 7.) The elect of Israel were gathered into the New Dispensation at Pentecost and subsequently, while the Jewish people as a whole became more and more blinded and darkened in understanding until their nation expired in a time of anarchy, A. D. 70. Since then the Jews have been in trouble, in sorrow.

It was to this very condition of things that Jesus referred. He used the highly figurative language common in the East. What St. Paul styled "blindness upon Israel" Jesus described as going into outer darkness—losing the light of the prophecies and the hopes of the Abrahamic promise and thus getting into the same blind and dark condition in which Gentiles in general were. The experiences of the Jews during the past eighteen centuries Jesus described as "weeping and gnashing of teeth." His words simply signify sorrow, disappointment and chagrin.

Truly the Jews have had all of these experiences. We are glad if we see in God's Word a glorious prospect for His ancient and Covenant people. St. Paul calls this promise to our attention in Romans xi. 25-33. He tells us that God's Covenant with Israel cannot be broken, but will be established, and that natural Israel shall yet receive mercy, Divine favor, at the hands and through the agency of the Church—spiritual Israel—part of whom have been selected from the Jews and some from every nation—all saintly.

"Sit Down With Abraham."

The Great Teacher declares that while the natural heirs of the Messianic promises would be cast out from Divine favor, as they have been cast out for the past eighteen centuries—in the meantime Gentiles from the East and West, North and South would be found of similar character to the Centurion whose servant was healed. And these would sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom, in the sense that they enter into rest. As St. Paul declared, "We who believe do enter into rest." This is the same rest or sitting at ease that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob enjoyed. They had God's promise that eventually He would raise up a spiritual Seed of Abraham through whom all the families of the earth would be blessed.

Abraham rested upon that promise; so did Isaac; so did Jacob. And so we rest in this Divine assurance that a blessing will come to the children of Adam in God's due time; more than this, thus seated, we are resting in the Divine promise. To us has come the wonderful assurance that, if we sacrifice our little all of the present life, we shall become joint-heirs with Messiah in His Kingdom, members of His Bride

TEMPERANCE NOTES

FOE OF EFFICIENCY IN NAVY

Commander-in-Chief of British Atlantic Fleet Declares Alcohol Is Detriment to Men.

The following clear and striking declaration by Sir J. R. Jellicoe, commander-in-chief of the British Atlantic fleet, shows how the most responsible officers of the navy regard alcohol as the great foe of efficiency among men of the service:

"Any officer holding a command which carries with it any measure of responsibility for the defence of the empire must recognize, as I do, the value of temperance in promoting fighting efficiency. In the navy there are three qualities upon which efficiency mainly depends. They are discipline, straight shooting, and endurance, and temperance unquestionably tends greatly to the promotion of these qualities. In regard to discipline, one has only to look at the punishment returns to realize how many of the disciplinary offences are due at the outset to intemperance. As for endurance, medical research has amply proved the fact that temperance is a great asset in improving physical qualities, and, therefore, the endurance of the human race. But of our own personal experience we know that we do not drink alcohol just before a football match or a boat race. If we do we shall fail, and the same is true of any other pursuit involving endurance. As regards straight shooting, which is so largely a question of eye, it is every one's experience that abstinence is necessary for the highest efficiency. If one were going to a rifle meeting in the afternoon, it wouldn't do to drink a whisky and soda at lunch. If I should do that I know I should have no chance of making a "possible." What applies to a rifle applies equally to a heavy gun, and all admirals recognize this by taking care that the fleet is called away from a harbor on urgent business at least twenty-four hours before battle practice or a gunlayers' test is commenced.

"Most captains also, if their ships are to fire at these practices in the afternoon," continued Admiral Jellicoe, "hold over the grog issue until the evening. In this connection I should like to refer to the experience of Capt. Ogilvy, who, I regret to say, died some eighteen months ago. He was the officer who did such good service with naval guns at the relief of Ladysmith. Commencing under Sir Percy Scott in the Terrible, he later commanded the Grafton, a gunnery school tender, and then the Revenge, the instructional battle practice ship, and died when in command of the Natal, which ship he placed at the top of the fleet in gunlayers' test. He went carefully into statistics, and found that the shooting efficiency of men was 30 per cent. beter before than after the grog issue. He put his figures in the form of a curve, and it behooves an admiral when chasing an enemy's fleet and manoeuvering for position to consider the grog curve as well as the position of the sun and direction of the wind. These facts will show, I think, that naval officers are fully alive to the advantage of temperance in promoting fighting efficiency."

GREATEST BREEDER OF CRIME

Alcohol Is Most Evident and Dangerous Cause of Lawlessness, Says Dusseldorf Expert.

What is the greatest source of crime? Is it poverty and misery? Is it unfavorable social conditions? Is it hereditary affliction? Is it defective education and training? These questions were presented and discussed by Doctor Pollitz, penal hospital superintendent of Dusseldorf, in a lecture on the psychology of crime, at a meeting of scientists in Tenbangen and afterwards published in a memoir. In it he says that the close relation existing between alcoholism and all kinds of crime has been much discussed since the alcohol question has received so much attention, and it is no longer seriously denied. He declared alcohol to be the most evident and most dangerous cause of crime as well as of much misery and evil, and closes by saying that the hopeful movement against alcohol offers the best prospect for the prevention of crime.—Hygienische Rundschau.

Warning Against Alcohol.

The health committee of the Sheffield (England) city council is about to issue large posters warning citizens against alcohol. "Alcohol (it says) is a luxury and not a necessity, and its abuse is a most terrible danger to personal health, to family happiness, and to national prosperity." It is stated that Gotch, Hackenschmidt, F. C. Selous, Victor Trumper, Burgess, Beaurepaire and E. P. Weston, all recommend total abstinence for athletes. The poster is signed by the lord mayor and the town clerk, and the medical officer of health.

What Is Whisky?

"What is whisky?" is a question which is bothering food experts. If the question had been put to us we could have answered promptly and saved much time and money. Whisky is the greatest curse known to men.—The Standard.

Stephen's Statistics

By JOHN PHILIP ORTH

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

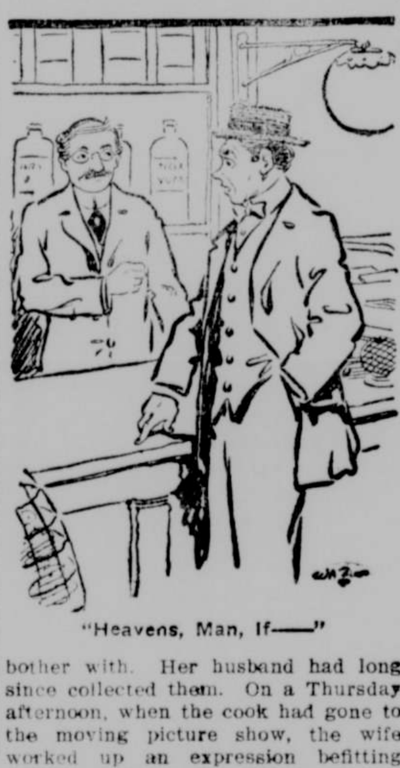
There was no question but that Miss Gladys Farnham got a good husband when she married Stephen Agnew. He was with a life insurance company and stood high for character. For the first three months after marriage there were entertainments at home and the theater and other things abroad, but then a change came. Mr. Agnew became preoccupied. He went about whispering to himself, and he neither wanted company at home nor to seek divertisement outside. Every night upon his arrival home it was the library for him, and all the explanation he had was that he was very busy with office matters.

If the young wife had been a coaxing, persistent woman she could have learned all about it after a bit, but she didn't coax, and after what she felt was the one rebuff, she had no more questions to ask. She took it out in thinking, and at the end of six months she had come to the conclusion that her husband was a disappointed man in marriage. He was still kindly and even-tempered, but unless something preyed on his mind, why should he go about with that absent look on his face, and why should he shut himself up at home?

There was a reason, and the wonder was that it did not leak out sooner. The life insurance company had promoted Mr. Agnew on his marriage to a higher position and more salary, but as an offset he must delve into statistics until he could reel right off the number of old women in Indiana who would die before the year expired, and the number of old men in Michigan who would never see another Christmas. He must gather into the folds of his memory all the diseases that carried the insured to the grave—the average of longevity since Moses came out of the bulrushes—the action of the human heart after a meal of pork and beans—what the difference was between a man taking three or six nips per day, and many other things.

He wasn't the man to give up after he had started in, simply because statistics danced before him day and night, but he kept on accumulating and his wife kept on thinking she was shamefully neglected, until a climax came. A friend hinted at divorce, and that brought the climax.

The plan adopted belonged to Mrs. Agnew alone. There was no statistics in it; that is, none that she had to bother with. Her husband had long since collected them. On a Thursday afternoon, when the cook had gone to the moving picture show, the wife worked up an expression befitting such an occasion and put on her hat and cloak and went to a drug store three blocks away. She had been in there before with her husband. It was the proprietor that came forward, and after swallowing the lump in her throat, she gently asked:



"Heavens, Man, If——"

"Do you keep arsenic?"

"Certainly, ma'am. What is it to be used for?"

The stereotyped reply on such occasions is "Rats!" and it was given.

"But why not take a rat exterminator?"

"I'd rather have arsenic."

"You'll have to write your name and address in the book."

"Very well."

It was written, and after she had secured enough arsenic to give fifty rats that tired feeling and then some more she departed.

"Mrs. Stephen Agnew, 234 Vine avenue," read the druggist again as soon as the poison customer had left; and then he asked of his clerk:

"Isn't that the wife of that insurance fellow who has come in here quite often to get something for throbbing in the head?"

"Shouldn't wonder."

"She looked as if she was in trouble, and I'm sorry I let her have the stuff. Well, I'm clear of the law, anyhow."

Two hours later the husband dropped into the store to say that he had wheels in his head again, and the druggist queried:

"Married, aren't you?"

"Oh, yes."

"Live at 234 Vine avenue?"

"Yes. About the wheels in my head. You must——"

"But I wanted to say that your wife was in here this afternoon and bought arsenic."

"Good Lord!"

"To poison rats."

"But there isn't a rat about the house! Heavens, man, if——"

And he went up the street on the run, with the German delicatessen man and many small boys crying "Stop thief!" behind him. The few seconds that it took him to unlock the door seemed hours. Down the hall and into the sitting room, and he reeled as he noted what was on the reading table. A glass of water, a spoon, a square of paper bearing the label "Arsenic!"

"She's done it!"

Mr. Agnew's statistics told him that at least four residents of Vine avenue ought to commit suicide that year, but it had never occurred to him that his wife might be one of the number. With a groan that ended in a wail he entered the bedroom. There, on the bed, was his wife, and clutched in her fingers was a slip of paper bearing the words:

"I forgive you! Farewell!"

A cry—a wail—the doctor!

The medical man said it was probably too late, but he would do his best. If the patient had taken all the poison it was an overdose and her life might be saved. Mr. Agnew was sent for emetics and a stomach pump and then kept busy in the kitchen, and the doctor was about to begin serious work when the woman sat up in bed and whispered:

"Is he out in the kitchen?"

"Yes. Did you take poison?"

"Not a grain."

"Well, what sort of a circus do you call this?"

"I—I want to scare Stephen."

"Oh, I see. So the poison is all a bluff?"

"Stephen is a good man, doctor, but he's all taken up with statistics or something and I can't get him out of the house of an evening or enjoy his company myself. I thought he ought to have a shock. Help me with it."

The doctor did. Mr. Agnew came in from the kitchen with mustard-water and the hot-water bag and salt and various other things, and he heard the stomach pump going and the doctor saying to himself that there was just one chance in a thousand. If statistics in that case are ever compiled, they will show that his tears flowed freely.

Drawn back from the grave at last, and the doctor taken his departure, the husband hung over the bed and appealed:

"Darling, what drove you to do it—what, what?"

"Your neglect."

"But I—I——"

"You had got to be a stick of statistics. You thought of nothing else. You handed me mortuary tables from morning 'til night, and made me dream of them as well. Why, Stephen, I can tell you how many men in Ohio will break their necks in the next twelve months."

"Um! I see. I had to learn the tables and carry them in my head."

The recovery of the patient was so rapid that the husband left for the office at the usual hour next morning. He was back in a couple of hours, however, to exclaim:

"Now old times shall come back!"

"What is it, dear?"

"I've changed from life to fire insurance."

"Yes?"

"All the statistics you have to carry in fire insurance is that out of 3,000 farm barns, 21 will be struck by lightning between May and October!"

Digs Mile of Ditch a Day.

The largest excavating machine ever built is capable of digging a mile of ditch six feet deep and 12 feet wide every day. It is employed in the construction of canals and laterals comprising an irrigation system to water the 16,000 acres which compose the Cudahy ranch, situated in the Imperial valley of Mexico. The conditions are identical with those of the valley of the Nile, for this ranch is of silt lands built up by the ages of overflow of the Rio Grande. The machine weighs 100,000 pounds and covers an area of 25x60 feet. It is entirely of steel construction and is propelled by two thirty horse power oil engines. The fore part of the machine carries the engines which drive a shaft wheel, which in turn, by a series of cogs and chains, propels the machine over the ground and at the same time operates the immense circular digger carried at the rear. This digger is equipped with scoops bearing sharpened blades of steel. It first picks up the dirt and, revolving upward, drops its burden on to conveyors which carry it to both sides, depositing it upon the banks of the excavation. The machine is so nicely adjusted that it can dig a ditch from two inches up to eight feet in depth and from four to 12 feet wide, shaping and finishing the excavation as it proceeds. With this machine seven men do the work of 50 scraper shovels hauled by 100 mules, with a driver for each team.

Wanted to Save His Soul.

The extension division of the University of Kansas has one less package library on Socialism since a woman at Harper took the liberty recently of showing her opinion regarding such literature.

A young man rooming in her house had obtained from the university a number of books dealing with Socialism. He had left them on his library table. The woman, in cleaning up his room, found the volumes which to her mind represented all the evils of anarchy and infidelity and unmentionable crimes. She decided to save the young man from danger and lost no time in putting the vile books into the fire.

The young man wrote an anxious letter to the extension department explaining the matter, and the department has decided to excuse him.—From the University Kansan.

Dressing for the Party

"Oh, say, mother, I don't want 'em manicured," protested the boy who was going to a party. "Shiny nails are awful sissy. Why, Bill's never had his nails polished, and he said to me just yesterday that he'd never heard of anybody having to take a bath every day except me. I've asked every boy in this block and there ain't a single fellow who has to take a bath more'n once a week. Now I've got to take an extra one this afternoon on account of Maybelle's party! Gee! I don't want to go to her old baby doll party.

"Say, mother, have I got to go? Well, I think it's mean having parties on Saturday. I wish I was lame, so I couldn't dance, and then no girl would want me to her party. I don't see why the girls are always having parties.

"You say you're going to give me one to return all this hospertality! Oh, say, mother, please don't. I don't see what I've done that you're going to give me a party. If you only won't do it I'll be more careful about my English and I'll clean my nails and scrub my teeth every morning without your reminding me. I will, honest. Why, if Bill knew I was going to have a party he'd guy me terrible.

"There's no use training me up for society, 'cause I'm going to be a gold miner. Bill knows about a mine out in Nome or Nevada that's awful rich. There's old nuggets as big as footfalls and he and me—I mean I and him—are going out there as soon as we're 16. There was one fellow who went out when he was only 15 going on 16, and now he's a millionaire.

"Well, anyway, if I do have to go to college first before I'm a miner, I'll be a athlete. No society for me, mother, so I don't see why I can't cut out parties and dancing school.

"That brown stuff on my hands? Oh, that's the mahogany stain Bill and me are going to put on my model aeroplane. I was just trying it. Ain't it a swell color? Of course, it won't come off easy or it wouldn't be any good, Bill was coming over this afternoon to work on the aeroplane. He'll be awful sore when he finds out that you made me go to a party. Bill hasn't got any mother. She died when he was a kid a few days old. Of course, it was an awful sad loss to Bill, but he is real brave about it. He says his father wouldn't know if he didn't take a bath for a month. His father believes in letting Bill grow up independent and develop his own character, that's what he says. Oh, yes, Bill takes a bath real often. I didn't say he didn't.

"Oh, say, mother, do I have to wear them silk stockings and pumps? I hope Bill won't be anywhere around when I start to the party. I don't care if Aunt Julia did give 'em to me. I'd rather she'd given me some leggings or a pair of ice skates. I've got to go to see Aunt Julia next Saturday! Say, mother, it's awful mean the way my Saturdays go. Bill and me—I mean I and Bill—ain't that right? Well, then, us—we was going to finish the aeroplane and make another model all by ourselves, and now if I've got to go to Aunt Julia's I don't know when I'll have time for anything.

"No, I haven't written to grandpa yet. Of course not. With all them parties and calls on Aunt Julia I don't have a minute to write letters. I guess if grandpa knew how my time was spoilt he wouldn't expect me to write to thank him for that jackknife. Bill says it's a pretty good knife and he's going to get a man he knows to sharpen it for me. The man used to be his father's hired man when they kept a horse, before Bill was born, and he's such an old friend of the family that he'll do it for nothing. So even if you don't think Bill is a good companion for me, you can see what a valuable friend he is.

"Oh, say, mother, I hate that sissy tie! Can't I wear my old dark blue one? No, I ain't chewing gum. I just happened to have a little in my mouth, but I wasn't chewing it. I never chew it since you told me not to the last time. But I've got a little on hand that I thought I ought to use up, so I just put it in my mouth once in a while.

"Lemme comb my hair myself, mother. I can part it straight. Say, did you hear that? That's Bill's whistle. Lemme go to the window and holler down that it's all off with the aeroplane work today, for I've got to go to a party.

"Say, mother, what do you think? Bill's all dolled up in a lot of new clothes and he's going to Maybelle's party himself. Wouldn't that freeze you?"—Chicago Daily News.

Most Effective Way.

"I certainly am sincerely indebted to you for winning my case."

"By no means. I represented your opponent."

"Just so."—Filegende Blaetter.

The Result.

"Did the plumber I sent you do your work?"

"No; he 'did' me."

MORERI II,

20279.

Having lost my Percheron Stallion Herve, I have purchased MORERI II 20279, a Registered Percheron Stallion, bred by R. D. McGonigle & Sons, of Ashley, Ohio.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, with the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on foal on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

MR. DANIEL ANNAN HONORED

Elected President of the Maryland Bankers' Association.

At the final session of the Maryland State Bankers' Association held last Saturday at the Blue Mountain House, near Hagerstown, Mr. Daniel Annan, president of the Second National Bank, Cumberland, was elected president of the Association, and Mr. James M. Sloan, president of the Lonaconing Savings Bank, Lonaconing, was chosen as one of the vice presidents of the Association.

The honor conferred upon these two Allegany county bankers is highly deserved, both being prominently identified with the financial interests of their respective cities.

Grand Fourth of July Picnic at Accident.

The English Lutheran congregation at Accident will hold its annual picnic in Frazee's Grove on July 4th. A grand parade will form in Accident at ten o'clock and march to the grove, where the following program will be carried out: Addresses by Dr. Seaber, of Hagerstown; Rev. W. W. Morris, of Grantsville, and other noted speakers. Drills, recitations, vocal and instrumental music. At 3.30 o'clock a base ball game will be played. Fire balloons and fire works at night; also a festival will be conducted in the grove at night. Dinner, supper and all kinds of refreshments will be served at the picnic grounds. COMMITTEE.

Davis Ranges In Great Demand.

The demand for Davis Ranges has increase so that it became necessary for Mr. C. S. Davis, a member of the firm to make a special trip to Cleveland, Ohio, to urge prompt shipments from the factory, placing an order for seventy-five ranges, ten of which were shipped at once by local freight, the balance making up a car load to be shipped as soon as possible, all amounting to more than two cars that have been purchased this year.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION IN SESSION

No Nominations As Yet—Mr. Bryan Floored In Battle to Control.

The National Democratic Convention, now in session in the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, has been the scene of stirring event since Tuesday.

Mr. Bryan precipated the fight by opposing the election of Judge Alton B. Parker for temporary chairman. Mr. Parker was elected, however, by a majority of 63 votes.

The nominations will probably be reached today. At present it looks as though Champ Clark will be the nominee for President. His running mate will in all probability be Mr. Gaynor of New York.

Mr. Bryan's power in the convention, notwithstanding the fact that his candidate for chairman was defeated, is still strong. He succeded in having Senator Ollie James, of Kentucky, named permanent chairman and has also succeeded in having a resolution passed deferring the adoption of the national platform until after the candidate has been named.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Chairman N. U. Bond Addresses the Republicans of the County.

To the Republican Voters of Garrett County, Maryland:

I deem it important to write you this letter, and I hope you will pardon me for using our local newspaper as a medium in which to address you, owing to the fact that it takes considerable time and expense to send each one of you an individual letter.

There is no doubt but what many of the Republican voters of this county are greatly disappointed over the fact that Theodore Roosevelt was not made our nominee for President by the regular Republican Convention at Chicago last week, and perhaps none of you felt more disappointed at the time than myself. However, upon reflection it seems to me that it would be an unwise thing for us, the Republican voters of this county, to allow ourselves to become irregular to our party affiliation at this time, owing to the fact that we have four months' time before election to consider this matter, and to investigate to our own satisfaction anything that we feel was done irregularly in the Convention, and thus intelligently arrive at our own conclusions.

There is another reason why we should remain loyal at this time, and that is our nominee for Congress, Mr. Charles D. Wagaman, is a gentleman worthy of our united support, and should the Republican voters in this County become dismembered and divided into factions it would certainly endanger his election.

I would not at this time wish to assume the position of dictating to you whom you should vote for for President, but only to ask you to delay arriving at any conclusions in this matter until later and then upon reflection see if it will not be possible for us to act in harmony as we have in the past.

I feel that it is scarcely necessary for me to mention to you that should we become divided into factions on this Presidential issue for which none of us are in the least reoponsible, nor over which any of us have the least control, it would materially interfere with the nomination and election of our county ticket next year, which embraces almost all of our county offices, and which is a matter that we are all very much personally interested in accomplishing.

In conclusion may I venture to say that the Republican party is greater than any one man, whether he be President or ex-President of the United States and that we were Republicans before we knew of either of the opposing candidates who were seeking that nomination which our party had prevously honored by bestowing upon them both, the greatest gift with its power.

Yours very truly,
N. U. BOND, Chairman,
Republican County Committee.

The Erection of a Stable on the Court House Square Opposed and the Reasons Therefor.

To the Editor of The Republican:

In the columns of your journal the writer has noticed an advertisement eminating from the office of the Board of County Commissioness inviting bids for the erection of a concrete stable on the Court House square, presumably for the use of the Sheriff and all those that will succeed him in office.

The writer of this article is not opposed to improvements, but in this case the "improvement" upon the Court House square, the most beautiful spot in all of Garrett county, is unnecessary for a number of good and sufficient reasons:

First, It will detract very materially from the stateliness of the surroundings at the Court House, which is admittedly the handsomest public square in the entire State of Maryland, deemed such by many who have travelled extensively throughout the country.

Second. A stable erected at any point will draw flies and other vermin to that particular spot and an odor will arise that is almost impossible to keep down, no matter what measures or preventives are employed and notwithstanding that fact that every effort may be made to keep the building in the most sanitary condition possible.

Third. The county owns the old court house and jail properties, located in a sparcely populated portion of the town, and up to the present moment the stable erected on the property a number of years ago has been used by all former Sheriffs for the stabling of stock and no objection that is apparent to the writer on account of its distant location from the present residence of the Sheriff has been made.

Fourth. I do not know of a law giving the County Commissioners power or authority to erect buildings other than those dedicated to the use of the public, such as jail and court house; hence a stable for the private use of the Sheriff is not a public building, even though it is located on public grounds and paid for by the tax payers of the county, nor can it become a public building or dedicated to the uses of the public.

Fifth The Court House square was largely paid for by the citizens of Oakland, a hardship imposed upon them by the then Board of County Commissioners, in order that the public buildings might be located in a central portion of the town and not upon the highest and most inaccessible hill within the confines of the municipality. The property was intended for the Jail and Court House alone and not as a site for a stable that may become a public nuisance.

Sixth. The proposition to erect such a structure on the public square, in sight of every passer-by and immediiately beneath the windows of the Court House, the Jail and the Sheriff's residence, is preposterous and should be protested against from the standpoint of wastefulness of the people's money and a menace to the health of the prisoners and other unfortunates who may be confined in the jail.

I represent but one of a great number that holds the views above expressed, and I am convinced that the gentlemen composing the Board of County Commissioners will see the utter uselessness of marring the beauty of the public square when the matter is properly presented to them.

Thanking you for the use of your columns, I beg to remain,

A TAXPAYER.

Oakland, Md., June 26, 1912.

Box Supper.

"T. R." ELECTORS MAY BE ASKED TO QUIT TICKET

If They Do Not, Taftites in Maryland Will Take Steps to Force Them.

Upon the highest party authority in Maryland it is stated that unless the ultra-Roosevelt men of the Republican electoral ticket give assurances that they will vote for President Taft in the Electoral College, if elected, steps will be taken to displace them. This is stated without equivocation and in a manner reflective of the intense feeling that exists between the conservatives and the radicals.

Taft men think that the only decent thing for Roosevelt men on the electoral ticket who purposes following Colonel Roosevelt to the limit is to retire. If they do not, steps will be taken to force them. It is claimed that the last Republican State Convention, which nominated the electoral candidates, did not adjourn sine die, and that as the candidates have not been certified to the secretary of State by the officers of the convention it may be reassembled, the nominations revoked and straightout Taft men named.

Again, it is claimed that the convention did adjourn sine die and that the Taft people are powerless to reassemble it for any purpose. It has been suggested that if this be true, the officers of the convention, Taft men, may refuse to certify the electoral nominations to the secretary of State. This probably would result in mandamus proceedings by the men nominated for electors against the officers to compel issuance of the certificates.

Should those who contend that the adjournment was sine die be found in the right and those nominated for electors stick as the Republican candidates despite support of Roosevelt and finally land on the ticket, the Taft people, in all likelihood, would put electoral candidates on the ticket by petition. This would present the anomalous situation of Taft men running under some name other than "Republican" and the Roosevelt people, candidtes of the new party, under the old party name.

Behind the matter is more than personal feeling between the two elements; there is a possibility, if the old nominations for electors were allowed to stand without opposition from the Taft people, that Roosevelt would win the Maryland vote, even though the Democratic candidate should win a plurality with three candidates in the field; and of all things under the heavens the Taft men want most is the defeat of Roosevelt.

This possibility arises from the heavy ordinarily Republican vote that would be polled with Taft and Roosevelt running, which vote would go to the regular electors; maybe in sufficient size to overcome the vote for the Democratic electors. And if the electors were Roosevelt men, Taft's followers would have aided their enemy.

In some quarters the idea is advanced that Roosevelt's game will be to indorse the regular Republican candidates for electors throughout the North and, in the event of their election, claim them wherever he polled a larger vote than Taft.

Maryland's Population.

The Department of Commerce and Labor announced the color, nativity and parentage of the inhabitants of Baltimore and the state of Maryland. In each of 12 large cities there are more than 40,000 negroes, but the proportion of negroes to the total population is generally small. In Baltimore 84,749 negroes live, which is exactly 15.2 per cent of Baltimore's population.

Of Baltimore's 559,485 inhabitants, according to the last census, 261,474 are of native parentage. There are 134,870 Baltimoreans of foreign or mixed parentage, while there are 77,043 persons in the city of foreignborn white parentage. There are 346 Asiatics in Baltimore.

Of the state of Maryland's population of 1,295,346 there are 766,627 persons of native parentage, while but 191,838 of foreign or mixed parentage. There are 104,174 persons of foreign or mixed parentage in Mary-land, while the state has 232,250 negroes and 457 Asiatics.

It is noteworthy that West Virginia has the largest percent of population of native parentage, with Indiana stand second in this respect.

Was He a Coward?

By Cora A. M. Thompson

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

When Fred Winters departed for Cuba with his regiment the know-it-alls in society said there was an engagement between him and Ruth Burt, and that when the war was over and the lieutenant came marching back again there was to be a wedding.

By and by there came strange rumors from the front. In no case could they be traced to a fountain head, but those who held them in greatest contempt had a half-belief just the same. Some one was giving out and repeating that Fred Winters had shown cowardice in the face of the enemy. The newspapers didn't have it, but letters came back affirming and denying it.

"It's a lie, and I know it!" exclaimed Miss Ruth's only brother, who had reached his sixteenth birthday. "It's the work of some of his jealous rivals."

"I do not know a gentleman that would stoop to anything of the sort," replied the sister.

"Well, some one has been stooping. Have you written to Fred what is being said about him?"

"Of course not. Indeed, I am not writing to him at all."

"Just like a girl to condemn a feller unheard! Hang it, I'll write him myself."

"You'll do nothing of the kind. I can manage my own affairs."

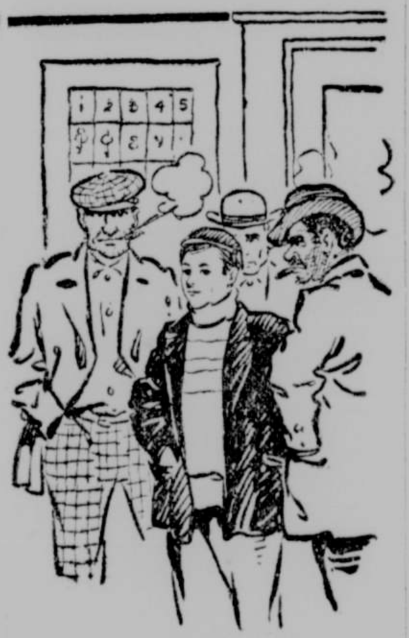
"Go on, then, but I'd give my pony to find out the liar."

"We shall know all about it when the soldiers return."

"Yes, and I'll challenge and fight the man that first set the rumor afloat!"

And the youth puffed out his chest and walked to and fro in the long parlors and tried to look determined and ferocious.

When Miss Ruth's letters ceased to put in an appearance, Mr. Winters was on his dignity at once. There was some good reason, but was it for him to beg it? He had written last, and now he must wait. At the front there were no rumors of cowardice. It was the other way. Lieutenant Winters had received high praise from his superior officers.



No One Knew Their Mission.

He was in at the beginning and at the finish, and he returned home no wiser about Miss Ruth's silence.

"If he calls, then what?" asked the brother.

"He won't call."

"All right for you. Ruth, you are as stubborn as a mule."

"A coward has no place in my estimation."

"How about the half dozen fellers hanging around you? Do you know whether they are cowards or brave men?"

"It isn't necessary for me to know. I am going down the country and shall forget all about it."

Young Mr. Burt took a resolve, and next day he hunted out the returned warrior and put the case to him straight from the shoulder.

"And is that it?" was mused in reply. "This is the first time I have heard of the rumors, and it's pretty late in the day to put up a denial. Thanks for your interest."

Young Burt went home to sit down and purse his lips and say to himself:

"Let's see? Let's see? The governor and the duchess are keeping hands off, and the thing has been flung on my shoulders to settle. Very well; I will settle. Fred Winters must prove he is not a coward, and Ruth must apologize for doing him an injustice. I bring about a marriage, make two souls happy and gain a tip-top feller for a brother-in-law. Um! I am equal to the occasion."

Eagle's Nest is a manor house. So is the Birches. They are three miles apart. Two days after Miss Ruth reached the Nest, Mr. Winters reached the Birches. It just happened so.

As the ex-warrior had his auto with him, and the girl had had her electric sent down, it could be only a question of time when the two must meet. Young Burt imagined that meeting and smiled. Not a word—not a nod—not a look! For three days he disappeared from the paternal mansion and a detective might have traced him to a country inn between the two manor houses. He was there on business. He saw his sister and a friend out in the electric, but he took good care not to be seen himself. In his company, much to the wonderment of the landlord and others, were three beetle-browed men who seemed to ache to cut throats. No one knew their mission, but on a sunny morning, out behind the barn, young Burt was saying to them:

"You go right down the road about a mile to the thick growth of bushes and go into ambush. When two young ladies in an electric runabout come along look up and down the road and see if you can see an auto. If you can then go ahead and hold up the girls. These revolvers are loaded with blank cartridges. Do a good deal of shooting. If the chap in the auto stops to mix in give him fists."

"Are we to hurt him?" was asked.

"If you can. Don't fear that he won't try to hurt you. If he doesn't show up then let the ladies pass and come back here."

"If it's highway robbery or assault we may get arrested," muttered the leader of the trio.

"Then I'll get you clear. It's all in the way of a joke, you know. The idea is that the man in the auto rescues the ladies, and the harder you fight the more credit he gets. All as easy as pie, you see!"

For four days Mr. Winter had been out in his auto, and for the same four days Miss Ruth Burt had gone spinning over the highways in her electric. No meeting. One was due, however. On this morning Miss Ruth started for the village, and Mr. Winter to explore a pond where there was said to be good fishing. There came a time when he sighted her, but too far ahead to tell who it was. He was about to turn off when he heard the reports of pistols, and saw three men bound out of the bushes and stop the vehicle.

Five minutes covered the distance. The autoist didn't stop to look at the woman who was screaming at the top of her voice. The three men were his game. They shouted to him to "hands up," but he didn't put them higher than the professional boxer usually does. They turned their guns on him, but he got on to the blank cartridge bluff, and then followed a sad ten minutes for the conspirators. They were knocked gally-west and gally-east, and they finally threw away their useless weapons and fled into the woods.

It was then that the puffing, bleeding Mr. Winters had time to look about him. He knew that the electric and the young lady were there, and that after his arrival the cries for help had ceased.

"What—you," he exclaimed, as he looked into the face of the girl who wasn't sure that he was not a coward.

"And you here!" she answered.

"You have come to no harm?"

"No, thanks to you."

Then there came an embarrassing silence. One of the men had left his cap behind, and Mr. Winters stood turning it over with his foot.

"You did not call on your return from Cuba," said the girl at last.

"I feared you might not be at home to me."

"Did you fight this way in Cuba?"

"I shall have to refer you to the official reports."

"I am stopping at Eagle's Nest."

"Yes?"

"And you might call."

"Thanks, I will."

And when he did call it didn't take twenty minutes to make satisfactory explanations, and a week later young Burt was saying to his mother:

"They've made it up."

"So Ruth writes me."

"Mighty lucky she had a brother about my size."

"But what had you to do with it?"

"Oh, nothing much, except that Fred has got to return me the sixty dollars I paid the robbers. You can't hire fellers to be knocked into the middle of next week for a nickel apiece."

The "Panhandler."

Like the firetrap, the automobile speeder, the ticket speculator and other notorious evils, the panhandler is the direct product of popular apathy. And never, perhaps, in the history of the town has he flourished as at the present day.

He makes a living chiefly by trading on those superficial emotions that are supposed to spring from a kind heart, although they seldom reach below the skin. The nickel that these "good-hearted" ones bestow is well invested, for it makes them feel that they have done a kindly act, and self-esteem is not readily purchasable in this town at that price. The wants of the panhandler are few and simple—a cup of coffee, the price of a night's lodging, car fare to Brooklyn or the Bronx, and now and then "a good square drink." Despite the immense number who are assisted to their plans of emigration to remote points their number never lessens to a perceptible degree, possibly because the citizens of Brooklyn and the Bronx cheerfully aid in sending them back.

Like the other evils named, the remedy for the panhandler rests in the hands of the public. If the hearts that are so easily touched with pity were only backed by a little cold reason, the race of panhandlers would soon die out.—New York Herald.

The Hobo's Bearing.

A kind-hearted old lady in a Westchester town was summoned to her rear door not long ago by the knocking of a tramp who desired food. The good soul hastened to give the man something to eat, and as he fed, gazed upon him with an expression of the utmost commiseration. "Oh, that you should have allowed yourself to sink into such a state!" she murmured. "Man, man! Think of your poor mother!"

"Excuse me, mum," said the hobo, unmoved, "but I can't get excited about that phase of my career. You see, lady, I was raised in an incubator."

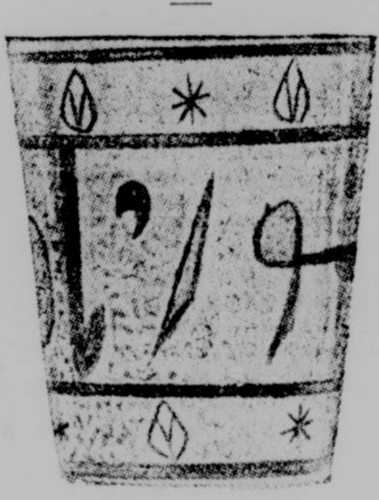
CUPS WORTH A FORTUNE

Romantic as are the associations of historic plate with the life of the past, there is scarcely less romance associated with the battles fought over old cups and spoons and salts when they make their appearance in the salesroom. Perhaps there is no more amazing example than the pair of standing cups made for the corporation of Boston, England, in the year 1582. The silversmith who wrought them, a cunning man of his hands, got no more than $100 for the work. Two hundred and fifty-five years later the corporation, doubtless in a fit of private madness, sold them for the paltry sum of 13 guineas. Five years ago they fetched £2,900 (about $14,500), a commentary sufficiently incisive on the prophetic insight of Boston's city fathers. One is permitted to guess what would be the state of mind of the silversmith if he could know that his standing cups had been sold for a sum representing 140 times the amount he was paid for them.

The story of the famous piece known as the Blacksmith's cup is hardly less astonishing. What it cost originally cannot be told, but in 1862 it fetched $185, a decade later it had sprung to $1,750, in 1890 it was sold for $2,675 and last year reached the enormous figure of $20,000.

Not long ago a silver inkstand of the year 1630 was sold for $400 an ounce, while Mr. Holms, a Glasgow man with a singularly choice collection, has given $1,500 an ounce for a font-shaped cup of the sixteenth century. In 1903 a set of thirteen Apostle spoons brought $24,500, while another set of eleven only was recently bought for more than 30 times the amount it had fetched in 1855.

IS THIS THE HOLY GRAIL?



There is now resting in the safe deposit vault of the Second National bank of Frankford, a suburb of Philadelphia, a metal vessel which the owners assert is the Holy Grail, or the cup actually used by Christ at the Last Supper. The cup is composed of gold, silver, brass and iron. The surface is coated with palladium, and the material is as hard as steel. Four enameled bands or rings encircle the cup and the outside surface is filled with symbolic figures.

The relic is in the care of the executors of the estate of the late Edward Biddle Latch, of the United States navy. Mr. Latch believed that the Holy Grail was a cup within a cup, and was of the opinion that the hidden surface of the inner cup of the vessel now in Frankford is covered with symbols of rare historic value. Speaking on this phase of the subject, he said that the separation of the cups would be a matter of much difficulty and that it was also inexpedient. Mr. Latch obtained the cup for an insignificant sum through a beggar or tramp who said he had picked it up by the roadside.

FRAUD POSED AS A SAINT

A man named Bursy and venerated in upper Silesia as a prophet and saint has been arrested on a charge of a long succession of frauds. He is a person of humble origin, with a disinclination to work, who managed to persuade the country people that he was endowed with supernatural powers and could foretell the future.

From all parts of Silesia pilgrims came for his aid and advice, and he received them in a room adorned with religious pictures and fragrant with incense burning in dimly lit lamps. Sometimes a hundred persons visited him in a single day.

His fees and gratuities brought him an annual income of $7,500, and he might still have been in the receipt of this competency had it not been for the outcry made by a poor widow, from whom he tried to extort $60, for which he guaranteed to rescue her late husband from the sufferings he was supposed to be enduring in the other world.

The woman made a great effort to raise the money, and the story came to the police, who promptly arrested the swindler.

IN A QUART OF HONEY

A bee culturist gives some interesting data concerning the work of bees in gathering honey. He calculates that a quart of honey represents no less than 48,000 miles of flight between the hive and the flowers. Also, that in June, which is the busiest month of the season, the workers of one colony easily cover as much as twice the distance between the earth and moon in one day. The distance of the moon from the earth is 237,600 miles. Therefore, the gathering of about ten quarts of honey means, totaling the flight of all the workers of the colony, a flight of some 475,200 miles.

POULTRY

KEEPING LICE FROM POULTRY

Maine Experiment Station Bulletin Recommends Simple and Quite Inexpensive Treatment.

One of the difficult and trying problems of the poultry keeper is to keep his poultry houses and stock free from lice, mites, etc. There are many proprietary preparations on the market to combat these, most of which work satisfactorily. However, they are more or less expensive. The Maine experiment station has just issued a bulletin on the subject and recommends a treatment which appears to be fully as simple as anything else, and much less expensive. The powder made by the station at a cost of only a few cents a pound is as follows: Take three parts of gasoline and one part of crude carbolic acid. Mix these together. Add gradually, while stirring, enough plaster of paris to take up all the moisture. The liquid and dry plaster should be thoroughly mixed and stirred so the liquid will be uniformly mixed through the plaster. When enough has been added, the resulting mixture should be a dry, pinkish-brown powder, having a strong carbolic odor and a rather less pronounced gasoline odor. Be sure that the crude carbolic acid is secured. If a spray is desired instead of the powder, simply take three parts of kerosene and one part of crude carbolic acid. If birds are infested with lice the best way to get rid of them is to use the powder, which is to be worked into the feathers. Remember, a single application will not be sufficient, because where there are lice present there are also unhatched eggs or nits. Make a second application four days to a week after the first, and if it is a bad case a third application may be necessary.

PLYMOUTH ROCK IS POPULAR

More of Breed Found on Farms Than Any Other on Account of Blocky Shape—Wyandottes Next.

The Barred Plymouth Rock is without a doubt the most popular breed of chickens in this country—more of them are found on the farms than any other breed. On special poultry farms the Leghorn is a very popular breed, and in the poultry farming districts the Rhode Island Reds are almost exclusively used, says a writer in the Rural New Yorker. As a general utility fowl the Wyandottes are second in popularity to the Rocks, the white variety being the most popular. Their blocky shape makes them an excellent breed for broilers. Like the Plymouth Rocks and Rhode Island Reds, they lay a brown egg. The Leghorns lay a white egg and in this respect they have a slight advantage, as most markets prefer the white egg, though there is no difference in the qualities of eggs with a brown or a white shell.

SEPARATING YOUNG AND OLD

Pullets Need Plenty of Flesh Forming Food, Such as Barley, With Less Fattening Feeds.

Young chickens, like young people, have more or less timidity and therefore it is not well to run young and old together, at least it is much better to have them separate if you can well do so. Then again the pullets are still growing and they need plenty of flesh forming feed, such as barley, bone, meat with less of fattening foods. The hen should not be deprived of these either, but she can get along on less, as what you give her will not be taken away from the purpose for which you intended it, as in the case with the pullet, which not only needs these things for making the egg, but to go toward the development of her body. It naturally follows, too, that the developed bird will require less feed than the pullet, and because the pullet is somewhat timid she is likely not to get enough, or even her share. The young will feed more free among themselves and if you can possibly do so, keep them to themselves.

Green Feeding Worth While.

If the best results are to be obtained with poultry they must be furnished plenty of green feed, is a statement so often heard that its repetition seems silly; yet there are flocks on fairly prosperous farms where one would think the practice of regular green feeding had never been heard of.

TINKLING PERSIFLAGE.

This is just a bit of dialogue after the fashion of the modern English comedy of the John Drew class:

She—Can you look me in the face and repeat that story?

He—Why, it isn't as bad as all that.

She—The story?

He—Your face.

"For shame. I'm sure you make it up."

"No, dear, you made it up."

"Silly! And now it will be read all over."

"Only on the cheeks, dear."

"Aren't you horrid! You know I never make up."

"Well, then, let's kiss and make up now."

Curtain.

No Place for Him.

"William, come. I refuse to sit through another act of this show with you."

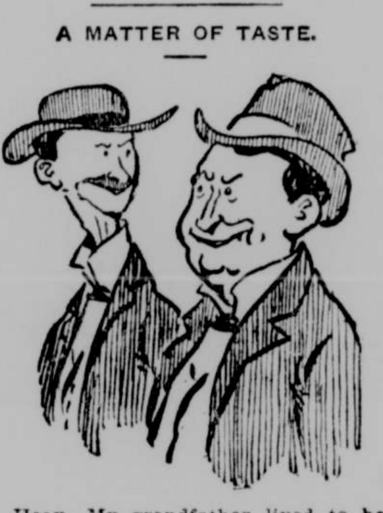
"But, my dear, it may not be——"

"No, no. It isn't fit for decent people to see. I refuse to stay here with you any longer."

"Very well, if that's the way you feel about it. Only I would like to know how the plot is finally unfolded."

"I'll get a matinee ticket and tell you."

A MATTER OF TASTE.



Hoax—My grandfather lived to be nearly ninety and never used glasses.

Joax—Well, lots of people prefer to drink from the bottle.

Serious Thought in Last Line.

The wedding bells ring gaily out,
Of rice a perfect torrent pours;
Kind friends their words of parting shout,
Meanwhile the cost of living soars.

They Don't Speak Now.

Gladys (just twenty-two)—This is my birthday, Mabelle. Guess how old I am?

Mabelle—Oh, I'll guess twenty-six.

Gladys—Not very good. Four years out of the way.

Mabelle—Well, dearie, I wanted to be sure and be on the safe side.—Judge.

Egging Him On.

The scene is laid in Tripoli.

"Ah, a battle!"

"See them charge."

"Who is that dauntless hero who is cheering on the combatants?"

"I think he works for a moving picture concern," explained the guide.

Then the tourists started for the Pyramids.

He Tells the Truth.

"Mr. Wombat, I wish to marry your daughter."

"Well, young man, can you support my daughter in good style?"

"I'll do my best, sir. I must admit, however, that we shall have to buy the furniture upon the installment plan.

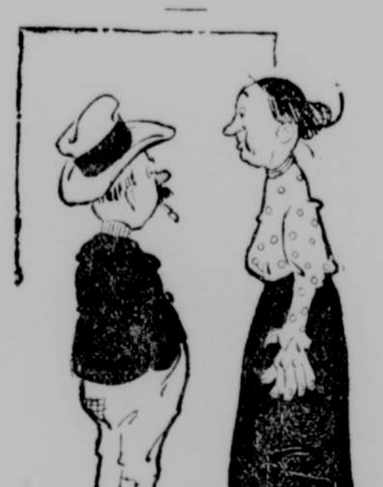
Does Seem Strange.

"We Americans have our oddities."

"How now, Horatius?"

"A man will boast in one breath that all Americans are free and equal, and in the next that he associates only with our best people."

WOMAN'S IDEA.



Bonham—I think women ought to be chloroformed at sixty, as well as men.

Mrs. Benham—I think so, too. Any woman who will admit being sixty ought to be chloroformed.

The Arrival.

Who is that sad and sorry wight
Descending from a train?
Ods-bobs! can I believe my sight?
The umpire's back again!

His Reasons.

"That old miser talks very little."

"Possibly he's afraid of spending his breath."

OPERATION SAVED MIND

MAN LEARNS NAME AFTER FOURTEEN BLANK YEARS.

Condition Due to Attack of Toughs and Being Shanghaied—Recovering Memory of Former Days, He Forgets Former Life.

New York.—S. Chandler Rogers, who was beaten by toughs, thrown into the Hudson river and shanghaied by a British sailing ship on the night of May 10, 1897, and who spent the next fourteen years of his life without the slightest recollection of whom he was or what he had done before he was injured, came here from Seattle the other day to search for his sister. His mind was cleared last October after surgeons in Seattle had removed a fragment of bone that was pressing on his brain.

Rogers, who is now thirty-one years old, told his story to a reporter.

"My principal business in life," he sand, "now is to find the sister that I haven't seen for nearly 15 years. I have reason to believe that she is in Bridgeport, Ct., and I am going there tomorrow. Mrs. Michael Roy, who lives in Bridgeport, has identified, I am told, a photograph of me as that of her brother. Maybe she is mistaken, but I hope not.

"After I was operated on in Seattle everything I had been doing for fourteen years was wiped out and I remembered who I was and what I had been doing before I was hurt in this city at Eighth avenue and Sixteenth street. I remembered that my right name was S. Chandler Rogers and that my home was in New York, although they told me at the Seattle hospital that I had been known as George Kelly for many years.

"I was a newsboy in New York and later a messenger boy. Once in a while I got a chance to box in theaters and made a little money. On May 1, 1897, I got a day off from my work and that evening with a friend and two girls I went to a show. After the show I took my girl home and then started for bed, but at Eighth avenue and Sixteenth street three men stopped me. It was pretty dark and I couldn't see their faces. One of them asked me for a match. I told him I wasn't a match factory, and he made a pass at me. I tried to hit him with brass knuckles I was wearing, but another of the three slugged me with a blackjack.

"When I came to I was trying to keep afloat in the Hudson, swimming desperately and nearly blind from the pain and shock of my hurts. I managed to catch hold of a piece of piling and screamed for help. That's all I recall definitely. I have been told by the doctors that I revealed to them after the operation in Seattle that I was shanghaied that night by a British ship, that I was badly hurt by the mate and that I had all sorts of adventures in the next fourteen years under the name of George Kelly. I suppose they are right, but I can't remember what I did as Kelly.

"There's a young woman out in Seattle who says that I am married to her. If that is true she is in a mean sort of position. She married me as Kelly and I have shed the name and personally of Kelly forever."

Rogers' identity was established by a curious circumstance. As George Kelly he was living last October at Fort Blakely and working in a lumber mill. On the evening of Tuesday, October 10th, Rogers—or Kelly—left home for a trip to Mill Town. He hadn't been feeling well and his wife was worried about him. After ordering groceries at a Fort Blakely store, he disappeared. Three days later he was found naked in a forest near Port Blakely crawling on his hands and knees and barking at dogs that were annoying him. He was taken to the Providence hospital in Seattle and was the doctors found, unable to speak coherently or to see. On October 15th, the operation was performed, which relieved pressure on his brain, restored the power of speech and the ability to see and which gave him back also his former identity.

HAS A USE FOR OLD MAIDS

John Burns Would Make Unmarried Women Take a Poor Law Child to Board.

London.—Replying to parliamentary critics of his administration of the poor law schools, John Burns, President of the Local Government Board, declared that every old maid in England who owns more than two cats or more than one dog should be compelled to take a child from the poorhouse. He maintained that his policy of removing the children from the poorhouse to the care of private families had proven markedly successful.

Referring to the children who have been boarded out Mr. Burns said: "Increasingly both rich and poor are adopting poor law children. If I had my way I would make it compulsory for all women who keep more than two cats and one dog to have a poor law child on which to divert some of the cash and a good deal of the wasted sentiment which many people put upon animals to an extent which is absurd."

What Shall I do, Doctor?

What would you do—you who have no telephone?

It isn't pleasant to think of sickness or accidents, but they do come, often when you're least prepared.

A Bell Telephone would be invaluable then — to get the doctor, QUICK, or to have the druggist rush over with a "first aid."

If you're still without this never-sleeping "watch-dog," call the Business Office and arrange for service, to-day.

The man Who Makes A APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the wearer complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it, too. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

JEHOVAH'S CONQUEST BY LOVE'S POWER.

Time Approaching When Force Will Be Applied.

Election of the Special Class With a View to the Blessing of the Non-Elect, Who Have Ears but Hear Not, Eyes but See Not.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Cleveland, O., June 23. — Pastor Russell had his usual large audience today. He gave two addresses. We report the one on the text, "To present you holy and unblameable and unreprovable in His sight."—Colossians i, 22.

Whatever our creeds have said to the effect that anyone declining the drawing and invitation of this Gospel Age would suffer eternal torture, we are glad that the Bible says nothing of this kind. God's Word holds out a specially glorious reward for those who now renounce the world and become true, faithful, footstep followers of Jesus.

But nowhere do the Scriptures declare the unreasonable proposition that any declining this offer of joint-heirship with Jesus in His Kingdom and its terms in the narrow way must on account of this rejection suffer eternal torture. How unjust would such a proposition be—how ungodlike! How did we ever so seriously blunder?

The Transforming Work.

Note the class the Apostle mentions as undergoing the transforming influences, preparing them for a share in the Kingdom glories. He declares in the context that those to whom he wrote were once alienated from God, enemies in mind by wicked works, yet now reconciled. Ah, as every Christian knows, there is a wonderful, transforming influence in the Message of the love and grace of God. And it is this that St. Paul here declares.

Jesus first of all through His death as a satisfaction of Justice made possible the acceptance of the alienated, condemned ones. Next the Message of Divine Grace, the call to be sons of God, reached the hearts of many and captured them. The Message not only works in their hearts to will, but works powerfully also in their bodies to do, to the extent of ability, the will of God. And it is these that the Apostle declares the Redeemer will present before the Father holy, unblameable.

The transforming work now progresses in their minds, in their hearts, and all the faithful will share in the First or Chief Resurrection—"changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," to perfection on the spirit plane. "We shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." But the Apostle reminds us in the succeeding verse that all this glorious outcome is dependent—it all hangs upon the word if—if we continue in the faith; if we are grounded and settled, and if we be not moved away from the hope which we have received.

The Apostle reminds us that this is not a special, private Message, but the very identical one Message, the one Gospel, the one "faith once delivered to the saints"—and proclaimed for every creature which is under heaven. By this he did not mean to say that the Gospel had been preached in heathen lands. Indeed, although more than eighteen centuries have passed, the Gospel is not yet preached to every creature under heaven. What St. Paul did mean is that the Gospel, which originally was confined to the Jew, was from the days of Cornelius, the first Gentile convert, open to all people of every nationality under heaven—to all who had the hearing ear and appreciative heart. But, alas, how comparatively few are in such attitude of mind as to be appreciative of God's grace! Only the few, "a little flock," have been found, as God foreknew and as Jesus foretold.

The Future Program Different.

But God is interested in our entire race. He did not provide the redemption merely for the saintly ones whom He specially loves and is now drawing. On the contrary, "Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man." (Hebrews ii, 9.) Hence it does not surprise us that God's Plan, which begins with the calling of the saintly few, by no means ends with them. Indeed their calling and election is with a view to the blessing eventually of the non-elect, the unwilling, who now have ears but hear not, and eyes that see not.

These, the Bible tells us, are soon to be dealt with in a different manner. Force is to be used. The power of the Messianic Kingdom will bind Satan for a thousand years and will restrain evil. Divine Power will also let loose all the glorious agencies of Truth, righteousness, light, until the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of God as the waters cover the great deep; and until "none shall need to say to his neighbor, Know thou the Lord, because all shall know Him, from the least of them to the greatest." "In that day the righteous shall flourish," instead of the wicked. In that day evil doers will suffer stripes—and, if they do not repent, they will be cut off in the Second Death; whereas all the righteous shall increase their joys and be received into life eternal.

An Intercepted Proposal

By KATHERINE HOPSON

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

As he turned a corner of the piazza, Frank Bramley saw, with a thrill of joy, that for which all evening he had been vainly seeking.

"The time, the place, and the girl!" he exclaimed.

The girl was sitting on a lawn seat looking out across the bay. The moon shone on her thoughtful half averted face, and lightly touched her brown burnished hair.

"At last I have found you alone, Edith," he said, his voice vibrant with happiness as he sat beside her. "There is always such a crowd of other chaps around you that I hardly get a word with you these days."

"Why, I didn't know that you cared to—"

She looked up in a startled way.

"Cared! Intuition must tell you, dear, that I'm mad about you."

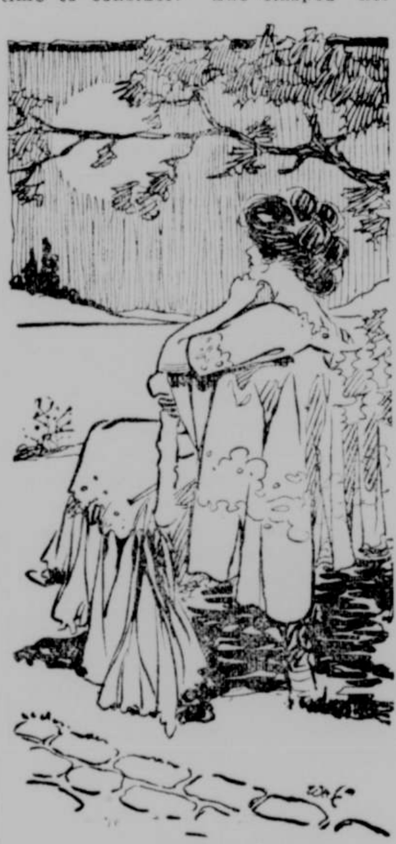
"But I can't understand—we know each other so little."

"Quite long enough to realize if we love." In the subdued light his fingers closed on hers. Then the moon came out from behind a floating cloud, and Bramley saw with a shock of amazement that the girl beside him was not Edith Mead. He dropped her hand as if it burned him.

"I did not dream of your caring this way, in the few days since we met," she was saying in her soft voice so like the other Edith's.

"I—er—always decide things quickly," he floundered. To himself he questioned desperately: "Who is she? Who else looks like Edith, answers to her name, yet isn't she?"

"Really, Mr. Bramley, I can't give an answer yet, I shall have to take time to consider." She clasped her hands and looked up at him thoughtfully. "Yet, strangely enough, the hero of my dreams has always come to me out of the unknown."



Looking Out Across the Bay.

"I never believed in long preliminary courtship."

"When we first met in front of the Waldrons, that afternoon, I judged you were impetuous," she laughed.

Here was a clew. Bramley racked his brain to recall whom he had met that day. He remembered Edith and three college friends had just alighted from a motor as he and Dick Calvin were passing the Waldrons' house, where the girls were to attend a reception. Edith had presented them to the girls, who were swathed in auto veils. He had not caught their names when introduced, nor did they make much impression. For was not Edith Mead there? Where she was nothing else had mattered to Bramley for a long time. Now he had won a near-acceptance from another girl whose name he did not know. He wiped the cold perspiration from his forehead.

"You shall have time to think it over," said he. "I am obliged to leave town for a few days on business, but shall hope to learn your answer when I return." With that he made his escape.

"Well, of all embarrassing scrapes!" he ejaculated, when out of hearing. "After making such a break, I couldn't speak up and tell the girl I'd made a mistake! I must find Dick Calvin and learn her name; then think up some decent way out of it all."

But he was not to solve the mystery that night, nor for many others. Dick Calvin had already gone, and he could find no one else who knew her. The real Edith Mead was dancing with a young millionaire from Pittsburg, and when the waltz was over she was surrounded with an admiring coterie; so there was no chance to speak with her alone.

He had spoken the truth about his projected business trip. He was obliged to catch an early train for Chicago next morning, where his work detained him much longer than he had anticipated.

When he reached home he found an invitation from the Waldrons to attend a dinner they were giving that evening.

"It was there I first met the unknown Edith; perhaps I'll meet her again. At any rate, I probably can learn something about her," he concluded.

He arrived at the same time as another group of diners, and one said: "I suppose you have heard of Miss Mead's engagement?"

"Edith Mead?"

The other nodded. "Yes; to young Dillon, the Pittsburg millionaire, who has been dancing attendance."

"Good match, all around," Bramley found himself saying. All the while he was thinking tensely: "Edith—the Edith I have loved! Well, maybe it's a good thing my proposal went astray, for it has saved us both the mortification of a rejection."

This thought brought him back to the object of his evening's quest. He had no chance before dinner of making inquiries, direct or otherwise, concerning the mysterious girl to whom he had unwittingly proposed. As soon as he reached the drawing-room he was cornered by his hostess' niece, a vivacious bright-eyed debutante, who kept up a running fire of small talk until dinner was announced.

It was not till they were seated at the dinner table that he was able to see who were the guests. Across from him was Edith Mead, radiant, distinguished, with the millionaire's diamond sparkling on her third finger. Searchingly, his eyes traversed the long table. Suddenly he caught his breath. Next their host sat the counterpart of Edith Mead. There was the same sunny-brown hair, the same long-lashed, dark eyes, the same willowy grace. Yet, despite their striking similarity, there was a subtle difference. It was as if this other girl had been cast in a mold which produced less clear-cut beauty, but the slight irregularity of features contained more womanly sweetness than Edith Mead's had ever possessed.

He was roused from his musing by the voice of his hostess asking: "Is your mother going north this summer, Edith?"

Two pairs of brown eyes looked up interrogatively.

"Do you mean my cousin's or mine?" archly inquired Miss Mead.

Mrs. Waldron laughed. "I had forgotten that you and Miss Carson were both named Edith. Isn't it often confusing?"

"Yes, indeed! We have great fun over our similarity of names and appearance. When we went to college it was hard to convince people we were only cousins."

The conversation drifted into other channels, and though he took his part, Bramley was covertly studying Miss Carson as he now knew her name to be. He compared the two girls. And oddly enough, she seemed the real love, Miss Mead the passing fancy.

"Maybe my absurd blunder will bring me great happiness after all—if I can win her," he thought.

At that moment Miss Carson met his glance with an amused, enigmatical smile. Certainly there was nothing lovelorn in her manner.

"Perhaps she, too, was merely trifling like the other," was Bramley's disconcerted thought, and resolved to put the question to a test at his earliest opportunity. It was with great impatience that he awaited the end of dinner, and the time before the men joined the women seemed interminable.

At last he was free to seek her. He asked her to sit out a dance with him, and though the laughing light came again to her eyes, she consented. Resolutely, he led the way to the secluded nook of the piazza where they had met before.

"I am waiting for my answer, Miss Carson," he began, when they were seated on the bench overlooking the bay.

She laughed lightly. "Are you sure it is really I and not my cousin you want?"

Under cover of the sheltering darkness he felt the hot blood rush to his face. "So she knew then!" he thought, but answered quietly: "It is you I want, Miss Carson."

"But I am not the one you meant to ask the other night."

"Why do you think so?"

"I am sure. Something in your voice, a quality of surprise, told me as you turned away. I am quick to detect such a mistake, for my cousin and I are so often taken for each other."

He squared his shoulders manfully. "I acknowledge the truth, Miss Carson. I was mistaken then, but I am in earnest now."

There was no moon tonight, so he divined rather than saw the sudden seriousness of her face.

"I honor your chivalry too much, Mr. Bramley, to expect you for a moment to stand by your declaration."

"But I wish to," he answered, boyishly. "When I saw you together this evening, I realized you were the one I really loved. Won't you give me a chance to try to win you, Edith?"

For a moment there was tense silence. Then their hands met and clung together as she said:

"When you first spoke, I—I knew you were my dream-man come true."

His Status as a Foreigner.

What is a foreigner? It depends on the country. In the United States it is a newcomer who has not yet had time to catch his breath, unpack his kit, and find a job. In India, the case is different. An official at Malabar, South India, lately received a letter from a man whose status he was investigating, and who said: "I am a native of India by birth, but I have claim to foreign origin and foreign blood. A colony of Syrians from Edessa settled in Malabar in A. D. 345. I belong to that sect and as such I have reason to claim foreign origin and foreign blood."

TEMPERANCE NOTES

ALCOHOL IS NOT NECESSARY

Prof. Howard Marsh Gives Telling Testimony Against So-Called Drinking in Moderation.

Speaking at a largely attended conference on "The Uses of Alcohol," held recently by a thriving branch of the C. E. Temperance society at Cambridge, Eng., and addressed by the eminent professors of medicine, pathology and surgery in the university, Prof. Howard Marsh gave telling testimony against the use of alcoholic drink even in so-called moderate quantities.

In opening his address he said that he had been interested in this question for a very long time, and could say with all modesty, for he was only expressing his own opinion, that he had come to very definite conclusions upon it. The first was that even in moderation, and except for medical purposes, alcohol was perfectly unnecessary. The Japs never used it, yet how well they had done in war. A similar illustration was afforded by the brave native Sikh regiment, total abstainers. He had an example a short time ago when he sent a somewhat venturesome invitation to Sir Robert Baden-Powell to come down and inspect the Cambridge Scouts. He first sent his aide-de-camp to see whether it was worth his while to come. He came and lunched at Downing college. He was about twenty-eight years old, five feet ten inches in height, and with as clear a complexion and as bright an eye as one would see, and he knew what sort of young fellow he must be to be Baden-Powell's right-hand man. He was struck by the fact that the young fellow, as splendid a young animal man as one could meet anywhere, proved to be a vegetarian, an abstainer, and a non-smoker. The tennis champion—not lawn tennis, nice as it might be, but the real thing—his old friend, Mr. Neville Lytton, was an abstainer. He (the speaker) used to play golf a great deal, and they were often struck with admiration at the way the great player Taylor played, with marvelous precision. There was no one who could hold him. He specially asked if he was a teetotaler, and the reply was, "Of course he is; if he were not he could not play like that."

He did not believe that alcohol was necessary as a food, although he could not say anything in the presence of Sir Clifford Allbutt about its use as a medicine, though he did say that in some other circumstances it was harmful in a very definite degree. Take the case of contests of physical power. Did they think a man would take a large dose of alcohol and expect to win the king's prize? They might be perfectly certain that if he did he would not be able to "shoot for nuts." In the case of an ordinary social party made up of young fellows from the services, they knew that if they dined heartily with wine overnight they could not shoot next morning. The best shot in England, if he indulged to any extent in champagne overnight, would be unable to hit more than one pheasant out of five the next morning. Alcohol even in moderate amount unfitted him for skilled work. In golf he had known people who showed at once whether they took alcohol or not. A man might play splendidly in the morning, but if he had a couple of whiskies and sodas at lunch, his play would fall off in the afternoon. Another thing had struck him. That among so-called moderate drinkers, young men from twenty-five to thirty-five might drink wine pretty freely, but they would often hear a man say at forty: "I can't drink as I used to do; wine does not agree with me now." That just showed that while in the very prime of their physical life they might seem to find no very serious effects, as soon as any of their organs began to flag they could plainly see the injurious effects.

He was delighted at the changes for the better going on in England now. The other day he was dining at Woolwich and saw at least five-sixths of the young officers present were drinking nothing stronger than lemonade. At least 70,000 men in the army today were teetotalers. He thought that a splendid thing, because with that many teetotalers in the army, the whole would be teetotal before long. He was glad that the opinion formed by intelligent people in an intellectual society today was that alcohol was unnecessary. It was of the greatest assistance to the poorer classes nowadays that they could get a good cup of hot coffee or milk and a piece of bread and butter instead of a glass of adulterated beer. Things had been thrown into beer in the past which increased a man's craving for it. Now that these men could get coffee or milk they said, "That's the thing for me." He believed that was one of the best and most powerful influences at work today. It would be the greatest thing if everybody would make up their minds to start their children afresh and right and bring them up as total abstainers, for he believed that if they were never given wine or beer as children they would never want it. If they did not teach a child that alcohol was necessary they would find that he would never want it.

No Useful Effects.

"There seems no useful effects to be anticipated from the use of alcohol in health."—Dr. Parks.

TWO NOTABLE VICTORIES.

Two notable cases, instituted by the Republican State Committee of Maryland, to enforce rights guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, have been won in the United States Court for the District of Maryland. Some time ago Judge Morris in a decision in what are known as the Annapolis registration cases, assessed damages against the registration officers who refused registration to men on account of race or color, even though a State law directed it. This decision also was a body blow to disfranchising amendments. Last week Judge Rose fined two Democratic Supervisors and a printer for preparing a trick ballot used in Charles county. The Baltimore News in an editorial commenting upon the decision of Judge Rose says:

"The clemency of Judge Rose of the United States District Court in imposing a small fine on two Election Supervisors and a printer for the conspiracy to deprive citizens of their civil rights by means of a trick ballot was doubtless prompted by knowledge that the action of Court would, in all probability, put an end to this particular sort of election knavery in Maryland. The fact that much severer punishment may and doubtless will follow a repetition of the offense ought to be all that is needed to to prevent its commission.

"There has been nothing more disgraceful in the history of the State than the abuse of the election officials. Though aimed at black voters, it disfranchised white men as well as black men. It put into jeopardy the ballot of every man who happened to be opposed to the political powers in control of a number of counties in the State.

"The condition was an intolerable one, and every good citizen will rejoice to know that a way has been found to put a stop to it."

THEY'RE THE GUYS.

Apologies to Goldberg.

Who is Colonel Roosevelt? Oh, he's the man that put the aft into Taft.

And likewise the shun into convention.

To say nothing of the see 'em in Coliseum.

Nor to forget the bull into bulletin.

And, of course, Joseph Johnson is the man in Baltimore who put the gain into Gaynor.

I doubt not, also, that the Sullivans are responsible for putting Tim into Baltimore.

It is an open question whether they will put the wood into Woodrow or into Underwood.

Bryan is the man who put the crazy into Democracy.

Who will be the male specimen of the genus humana to insert a bolt in Baltimore?

Forest Fires.

Garrett county hasn't many forests and what it has should be conserved. Fire is the greatest enemy of the forests and the time of particular danger from forests fires is at hand. Fires are easily started in our mountains. Travelers should not throw ignited cigars, cigarettes, pipe ashes or matches around carelessly. Campers in the mountains should not set their camp-fires on top of ground but should dig holes for them and trenches around them. Don't go away and leave fires burning. Put them out before you leave them. Save the woods.

The law of the state provides a fine for any one setting fire to any woods whatsoever, regardless of whether the fire is set wilfully or through carelessness.

Oakland Normal.

The Oakland Normal is progressing nicely under the instruction of Profs. Bender and Sanner.

Thus far nearly fifty students have enrolled. They are enthusiastic and are doing good work.

Every one who expects to take the teacher's examination or brighten up intellectually should not fail to attend the Normal. The able instruction that is being given affords our teachers an excellent opportunity to better themselves.

In addition to the work of the teachers weekly lectures are given by able speakers.

This is an age of educational as well as political progressiveness. They who are not educational progressives are reactionaries.

HOW WIRELESS WORKS.

Explanation That Can Be Understood by the Average Reader.

During the last few weeks we have heard a great deal about wireless telegraphy, and hundreds of people have confessed their ignorance of this mysterious system of transmitting the messages of mankind. On most any street corner you could find the village oracle expounding and explaining the dark mysteries of wireless, and nine times out of ten he knew nothing at all about it.

It is quite impossible to describe the details of a wireless station so that a novice will understand, but the principle of the thing is easily comprehended. As is known, light and heat move in waves whose lengths can be measured. Thus, the sun gives out in every direction light in a series of undulating waves which may not only be measured, but can be deflected, porarized, and so on. Some idea of this may be gained from the well-known fact that when a stone is thrown into a smooth pool of water a series of circular waves extends in all directions. If any floating object comes within these waves they are oscillated.

It was the lamented Prof. Hertz who discovered that electricity, like light and heat, also moves in waves which may be measured. Just precisely how these waves pass through the atmosphere is not wholly understood, but it is believed that they have some relation to either, which is omnipresent, and which is believed to constitute all matter under different negative electrical conditions.

In wireless telegraphy a series of Hertzian waves are set up by powerful electrical dynamos or batteries, and these are discharged from the top of a high mast or pole. These waves extend in all directions, and unless their force is expended by distance they excite certain effects in the receiver of wireless telegraph instruments within the zone, just as the waves disturb chips on a pool. Messages are sent and received somewhat on the plan of ordinary Morse code by wires, in that electrical impulses are regulated so as to spell words according to a code.

In recent years many kinds of receivers have been used, and the process is now simpler than formerly, but any successful transmission of waves depends a great deal on the state of the atmosphere, electrical storms being disadvantageous. Also when many wireless outfits are working in the same zone much confusion results, and often messages are transmitted with great difficulty and sometimes not at all.

To Marconi belongs the credit of making a practical success of the discoveries of others, but to Hertz belongs the credit of making the system possible.

Tuberculosis Car on the B. & O.

For the past ten days the exhibit car of the Maryland Association for the prevention and relief of Tuberculosis has been at the Mt. Clare shops in Baltimore, where it is being restored to its original freshness by a generous application of soap and water and fresh paint. During the two months which elapsed since the car left Baltimore, it has stopped at about thirty towns between Baltimore and Mt. Airy and between Washington and Washington Junction, and in the neighborhood of thirteen thousand people have visited it.

The car will be ready to start out on its travels again on Thursday, June 20th, and will visit Point of Rocks June 21-24, Brunswick June 25-29, Knoxville July 1-3, Waverton July 5th and 6th, Brownsville July 8th and 9th, Rohersville, July 10-12, and from there will continue on up to Hagerstown, stopping at several towns on the way.

Secretary MacVeigh proposes to begin operating his currency laundry in the treasury at Washington today. This modern invention it is claimed will make dirty money as clean as when it came from the press, and do away with the fear of germs and disease. Unclean money has long been an annoyance to those who are compelled to accept it when offered and if the treasury laundry proves what has been claimed for it the people will be inclined to consider it a blessing. At the same time it is claimed that it will save the Government at least half a millionn dollars annually in the redemption of bills that become unfit for circulation.

Mr. Scott T. Jones, one of the District Delegates to the Republican National Convention at Chicago last week, returned to his home in Oakland Monday morning on train No. 8, having left Chicago immediately after the adjournment of the convention Saturday night. Mr. Jones stood firm for the nomination of Col. Roosevelt, thus carrying out the will of the people of Maryland as expressed at the primaries, and feels keenly disappointed that his efforts were of no avail. His experiences as a member of the convention were varied and Mr. Jones recites some very interesting reminscences of the battle royal between the two great opposing forces in the convention.

THE DEATH RECORD

CHARLES SWEENEY.

Charles Sweeney, one of the oldest residents of Oakland, died at his home here last midnight, aged upwards of 80 years. For about ten years the deceased has been a confirmed invalid, having suffered an attack of locomotor ataxia, rendering him almost entirely helpless. He was born in Germany and came to the United States when quite a young man. During the Civil War the deceased was a teamster with the Union forces. Immediately following the comflict he came to Oakland and was married, being survived by his wife, four sons and one daughter. Mr. Sweeney was until a few years ago a follower of Luther, when he joined the Catholic church. His funeral will occur Saturday morning from the church in Oakland.

Mr. H. Steiding was a business visitor in town Monday.

Mrs. Barker is visiting in Piedmont this week.

The Swanton Cornet Band will soon be able to play for the public.

The hooping cough has found its way into this neighborhood and a number of children have been exposed to it.

A festival will be held in May's Hall June 28th.

E. D. Jackson is on the sick list suffering with rheumatism.

It would add much to the appearance of the town if everybody would take their cross-ties and mine props out of the streets.

GRANTSVILLE

The Lutheran minister, L. P. Young, who has just returned from a three months' tour of the Holy Land, and other points of interest, preached his first sermon on Sunday to a large congregation. During his absence the pulpit was filled by Rev. Stover from Somerset county, Pa.

Married on Thursday last, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dan Maust, Miss Cora Maust, of Springs, Pa., to Mr. Menno Miller, son of Rev. and Mrs. Jacob Miller of Grantsville.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Bender and family spent Sunday afternoon in Salisbury.

The Farmers' Institute held in the school house on Thursday evening was well attended. A woman from Eastern Maryland gave a very interesting and instructive talk on how to prevent diseases. She said in 1909 one million and a half people died in the United States, and six hundred and fifty thousand of those deaths were preventable.

Mr. J. S. Hershberger, of Waterloo, Iowa, was visiting friends and relatives in Garrett county and Somerset county, Pa., this being his first visit in six years. He stopped at Mr. Kuykendall of the Stone House Farm, which place he had managed for fourteen years. Under his management he drained and ditched the swamp land and made a paying proposition of it. Mr. Kuykendall offered it previous to Mr. Hershberger's management for twelve thousand dollars; now he is asking thirty thousand for it. It is a fine old historical place; the Braddock Road runs the entire length of the farm; the Stone House was at one time the home and hotel of the famous Jesse Tomlison, and was erected in the early part of the last century; it was the scene of many gay and festive occasions, as presidents and congressmen and Henry Clay, the Father of the National Road, were entertained there. The latter passed over it many times during his forty-five years of public service. Tomlison died in the year 1840, aged eighty-seven years. His wife died in the same year and both are buried in a family burying ground on the farm.

Have Used Spare Time Well.

On the question of how working people, on the whole, have spent the added hour or hours of freedom from work, an author says that where cynics prophesied more drunken idleness and rowdyism, fairer observers found a kind of regeneration—no sudden mellennium, but wherever sufficient time has elapsed an extraordinary advance in physique and morals.

You Can't Afford to Miss It

A Story of a Thousand Thrills that Starts with a Rush and Goes Faster and Faster

The daughter of a rich, highly respected New York gentleman is the first person in the story to attempt suicide and she is the only one who does not succeed. The lover of her beautiful young sister is determined to discover the reason of her evident misery, and he enlists the services of his friend, a famous post-office inspector, for it is evident that the mails have been used for criminal purposes. The author has made an exceedingly interesting study of the way these two men, both of keen minds and working side by side most of the time, draw widely differing conclusions from the same evidence, and of how the trained man will find clues where the untrained has seen nothing.

TAFT AND SHERMAN THE NOMINEES

Again the Standard Bearers of Their Party.

NAMED ON FIRST BALLOT

The vote for President on the first and only ballot in the Republican National Convention was as follows:

Taft, 561; Roosevelt, 107; La Follette, 41; Cummins, 17; Hughes, 2; absent, 6; not voting, 344.

Vice-President Sherman was re-nominated, after Governor Hadley and Governor Deneen both refused to permit the use of their names in connection with the nomination.

The vote for Vice-President was:

Sherman, 597; Borah, 21; Merriman, 20; Hadley, 14; Beveridge, 2; Howard Gillette, 1; absent, 71; present, but not voting, 352.

The Republican convention adjourned at 10.30 sine die.

Senator La Follette, through his manager, repudiated the standpat platform that was adopted by the Republican Convention, declaring he could not support it.

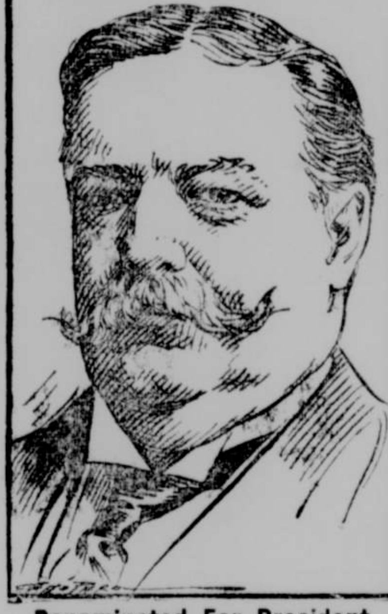
The vote on the platform was as follows:

Ayes, 666; nays, 53; absent, 16. Present, but not voting, 343.

The Progressives, composed largely of Roosevelt delegates to the Republican National Convention, met in Orchestra Hall, Chicago, and gave birth to the Progressive party, nominating Theodore Roosevelt for President. Colonel Roosevelt accepted the nomination in a speech which bitterly condemned the Republican National Convention.

This program of the Roosevelt men was decided upon after an all-day conference of the former President and his leaders.

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT



Renominated For President

So Turbulent Were the Scenes Attending the Vote That it Required 1 Hour and 5 Minutes to Call the Roll.

Convention Hall, Chicago.—With the party admittedly facing the greatest crisis in its history, William Howard Taft, of Ohio, at 9.25 o'clock Saturday night was renominated for President of the United States by the Republican National Convention, the official vote being: Taft, 561; Roosevelt, 107; La Follette, 41; Cummins, 17; Hughes, 2; absent, 6; present, but not voting, 344.

The revolt of many Roosevelt delegates in the convention was open from the moment the permanent roll containing the names of contested delegates was approved. A "valedictory" statement was read in behalf of Colonel Roosevelt, asking that his name be not presented and that his delegates sit in mute protest against all further proceedings.

A great majority of the Roosevelt delegates in the Illinois and all in the Missouri and Idaho delegations declined to follow this advice, but Colonel Roosevelt's sway over the delegations from California, Kansas, Maine, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, South Dakota and West Virginia was all but absolute.

Most of the delegates from these States announced their purpose of helping to give Mr. Roosevelt an independent nomination. At times during the balloting the convention was in great confusion.

West Virginia announced her 16 delegates not voting and was roundly cheered by the Roosevelt supporters. Wisconsin's 26 votes went to La Follette, Wyoming gave Taft 6, Alaska and the District of Columbia each cast 2 for Taft and Hawaii cast 6 for the President. The Philippines and Porto Rico finished the call, each giving Taft 2 votes.

The delegates had kept tab on the voting and realized that Taft had won the nomination before an announcement had been made. The Taft delegates stood on chairs and cheered.

The band played "America" while the aisles were cleared.

The roll of States was called.

Alabama yielded to New York. Olcott comes forward amid applause to name James S. Sherman, of New York, for re-nomination.

Daugherty, of Ohio, seconded Sherman's nomination.

The split in the convention occasioned no surprise. It was but a fulfillment of predictions that had been made during the past several days.

The closing scenes of the convention were marked by counter demonstrations for President Taft and Colonel Roosevelt.

The first test vote after the announcement of the Roosevelt valedictory came on the adoption of the party platform. The affirmative vote was 666. Roosevelt delegates present and not voting numbered 343. There were 53 notes, 36 of them from the La Follette States of Wisconsin and North Dakota.

Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin, was placed before the convention, but Colonel Roosevelt's wishes were carried out by his followers and they remained silent during the call of the States for nominations.

Warren G. Harding, of Ohio, placed the name of President Taft before the Convention for the nomination, and in doing so he referred repeatedly to the internecine strife that almost convulsed the Convention.

Extolling the record of the Taft administration, Mr. Harding declared it would be regarded as "the marvel of progressive accomplishment in one administration" had it not been for the "attack of disloyalty" in the Republican ranks.

"Rejoicing in the gratifying record of things done," he concluded, "confident of the forward movement to the things we are pledged to do; mindful of the spirit of the time and the requirement of poise and patience; glad of the new hopes and higher aspirations of our people and their faith in national progress and the harmony of his purpose therewith; measuring his capacity by the exactions of experience; testing his patriotism by every demand of honesty, courage and justice; knowing his devotion to his country and its people, on behalf of Ohio and 100,000,000 of advancing Americans, I name for renomination our great president, William Howard Taft."

Nicholas Murray Butler, of New York, seconded the nomination of President Taft.

Ex-Representative J. V. Olcott, of New York, nominated the present vice-president, James Schoolcraft Sherman, to be Taft's running mate, consuming scarcely 50 words in the task.

Harry Daugherty, of Ohio, seconded Sherman's nomination on behalf of Ohio. There were no other nominations, except that presented waggishly by a delegate from Pennsylvainia, who suggested Senator Boise Penrose, ex-boss of the Keystone State, "because he could carry his own State." Root disregarded the nomination.

SHERMAN WILL ACCEPT.

Breaks Record For Three-Quarters of Century.

Utica, N. Y.—Vice-President James S. Sherman, at his home in this city, made the following statement when apprised of his renomination:

"I am not unmindful of the honor conferred by the nomination by the Republican National Convention as the party's candidate for Vice-President. To appreciate its full significance one must remember that not for three-quarters of a century has a renomination been accorded to anyone for this office."

CHAIRMAN ROOT

EXCERPTS FROM THE REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

"While we regard the recall of judges as unnecessary and unwise, we favor such action as may be necessary to simplify the process by which any judge found derelict in his duty may be removed from office.

"The Republican party favors the enactment of legislation supplementary to the existing anti-trust act, which will define as criminal offenses those specific acts that uniformly mark attempts to restrain and to monopolize trade.

"We reaffirm our belief in a protective tariff.

"The Republican party will support a prompt and scientific inquiry into the causes which are operating to increase the cost of living and will take necessary steps to remove any abuses which are found to exist.

"The Republican party has always stood for a sound currency and for safe banking methods.

"We reaffirm our adherence to the principles of appointment to public office based on proved fitness and tenure during good behavior and efficiency.

"We favor such additional legislation as may be necessary more effectually to prohibit corporations from contributing funds to campaigns of election.

"We favor legislation looking to the establishment of a parcels post, the postal rates to be graduated under a zone system.

"We approve the action to secure with Russia, as with other countries, a treaty that will recognize the absolute right of expatriation.

"We believe that one of the country's most urgent needs is a revived merchant marine.

"We favor the speedy enactment of laws to provide that seamen shall not be compelled to endure involuntary servitude and that life and property at sea shall be safeguarded by the ample equipment of vessels with life-saving appliances.

"We call upon the people to quicken their interest in public affairs, to condemn and punish lynchings and other forms of lawlessness and to strengthen in all possible ways a respect for law and the observance of it."

SUPREME OVER PRIMARY LAW

Spectator's Imitation of Steam Roller Causes Him to Be Ejected.

Chicago.—The Taft forces in the Republican National Convention Friday further demonstrated their control of that body.

The convention took up piecemeal the contests from many States and in each instance the Taft delegates were declared entitled to their seats by majorities ranging from a high-water Taft vote of 605 to 464 to a narrow margin of 542 to 529. The latter vote was in the California case, in which the convention rules for selection of delegates by Congressional districts came into conflict with the State primary law providing for a State-wide vote on all delegates. Through this technicality the Taft forces claimed the two delegates from the Fourth district. The case was bitterly fought out and the voting was followed with the greatest interest, especially when it was seen that the Taft forces were losing many of the delegates who had been with them in other contests.

When adjournment was taken tonight until 10 a. m. tomorrow the Texas and Washington contest cases still remained to be dealt with and there was likelihood of more bitterness between the opposing forces. After the California case had been disposed of, however, the delegates seemed to be in far better humor and there was much fun and merriment during the late afternoon as the minor contests were pushed through without serious opposition from the Roosevelt people.

There were many humorous allusions to the "steam roller" and frequent choruses of "Choo, Choo, Choo," in imitation of the figurative machine.

Chicago.—Five minutes was the entire duration of the two sessions of the Republican National Convention Thursday, with a recess of four hours between. The first session, convened at noon, lasted four minutes; the second, one minute.

The feature of the noon session was the prayer of the Very Rev. Walter T. Sumner, dean of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral of Sts. Peter and Paul, of Chicago, and the applause which followed it.

The only welcoming applause was for William Jennings Bryan, who is reporting the convention for a number of newspapers. As he moved to his seat in the press section of the platform several persons in the gallery cried, "Speech! Speech!" Mr. Bryan smiled.

The gavel fell a few minutes after noon and Rev. Dean Walter Sumner, of the Cathedral of Sts. Peter and Paul, offered prayer. The prayer was as follows:

"In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

"Almighty God, look down, we beseech thee, and bless the convention here assembled. Grant unto its members self-restraint, cool judgment and all wisdom that their deliberations may insure to the nation civic righteousness, industrial peace and social justice; that all men may have an abundance of life and the mind to serve Thee in godly living, maintaining the sanctity of the home and the integrity of the nation. Amen."

There was a ripple of applause from one end of the vast hall to the other at the conclusion of the prayer.

Floor Leader Watson, of the Taft forces, obtained recognition immediately. He explained that the credentials committee was not ready to report and moved that a recess be taken until 4 o'clock. The motion prevailed and the thousands who still were perspiring from the exertion required to get in, at once began to scramble to get out. The proceedings had lasted exactly four minutes, or from 12.02 to 12.06 P. M.

When the convention took its recess the report was everywhere current about the Coliseum that Colonel Roosevelt would come to the convention at 4 o'clock and make, or try to make, a speech. Nobody really knew whether it was true or not, but it added to the excitement.

When the doors of the Coliseum were again thrown open at 2 P. M. with still two hours to spare before the gavel should fall, the people began to pour in rapidly. At least a thousand never left their seats at all. No man or woman who went through that struggle for admission in the morning could face without a qualm the prospect of repeating it—the same day anyway. So there was a good sized audience all through the long wait, to hear the band, which, in its lofty little box between the big flags upon the north wall, enlivened the interval with popular music.

La Follette enthusiasts during the recess distributed hundreds of little fans, of material such that, rapped with a lead pencil, would make a drum-like noise. One side bore a picture of the Wisconsin man, the other a printed list of the achievements attributed to him. The fans were in eager demand, if only because of the increasing heat.

The rain failed to keep the crowd from coming back and 15 minutes before the hour for reconvening practically every seat in the capacious gallery was filled. Word had been passed around that the convention probably would be in session but a few minutes and then adjourn, a fact which made the large attendance remarkable. Another rumor that Colonel Roosevelt might be present may have had something to do with it.

Senator Root smilingly bowed his acknowledgment when the crowd greeted with applause his appearance on the rostrum at a few minutes after 4 o'clock.

Apparently all the delegates were in their places.

No sooner had Chairman Root called the convention to order than Taft Floor Leader Watson again was recognized to move an adjournment until 1 o'clock tomorrow to allow the credentials committee to complete its labors. The motion prevailed without objection and the crowd, disappointed but good natured, began to file out.

Theodore Roosevelt advised his followers among the delegates to the convention "not to lie down again if beaten by fraudulent votes," but to organize as the real and lawful convention.

Roosevelt suffered his second defeat when the convention, by a vote of 564 to 510, adopted the motion of James E. Watson, Taft floor leader, to table Governor Deneen's amendment to Governor Hadley's motion of Tuesday that the 78 contesting Roosevelt delegates be substituted for Taft delegates.

By agreement with Taft Floor Leader Watson, who made the motion, the Hadley proposition then was sent to the committee on credentials.

In a test of strength at the organization of the credentials commitee the Taft forces elected Thomas H. Devine, of Colorado, chairman over the Roosevelt candidate by a vote of 30 to 18, four members not voting.

The appearance in the convention of Governor Hadley to speak in defense of his motion that the 78 Roosevelt delegates rejected by the National Committee be substituted for the Taft delegates was the signal for an ovation which a woman in white turned into a Roosevelt demonstration, the uproar continuing for 45 minutes.

Chicago.—President Taft won another victory Wednesday in the second great parliamentary battle of the Republican National Convention. He prevented the friends of Colonel Roosevelt from voting 92 contested delegates off the temporary roll of the body or even referring their right to participate in the temporary organization of the convention to the credentials committee.

Today's victory, too, was even more decisive than that of Tuesday, when the Taft people elected Senator Root, of New York, temporary chairman by a majority of 18. The result of today's voting showed that the Taft people are in control of the convention by a majority of 54.

This vote came after a Hadley ovation that was turned into a Roosevelt demonstration and that for a time appalled the Taft people in its volume and vehemence. For 45 minutes the Roosevelt delegates, aided by their alternates and encouraged by the galleries, stormed the convention. Wildly, madly, these partisans cheered for their candidate.

During the height of the uproar Mrs. W. H. Davis, of this city, unfurled a portrait of Colonel Roosevelt in the north gallery of the hall. This inspired the Roosevelt people to another and greater storm of applause. An enthusiast went to the gallery and led the heroine to the convention floor. She was lifted to the speaker's platform, leading the shouts of the throng, but was ordered off the stands by the convention committee. The new Joan of Arc returned to the gallery, where she again waved hysterically to the host below her to keep on and on and ever on.

This tremendous outburst came just before the end of the seven-hour fight over the right of the 92 contested delegates to sit in judgment upon their own cases. Notice had been given Tuesday by Governor Hadley, of Missouri, Roosevelt floor leader, that he would question the right of the 92 to vote in the temporary organization.

Before the parliamentary moves were made, however, the convention listened to debate as to the merits of the various contests. This debate continued for five hours and was carried on for the most part by Taft orators. The Roosevelt people having placed the President's friends upon the defensive, indulged in a few generalities, but left the enemy to do most of the explaining and defending.

Chairman Root pounded the table with his gavel at 11.15 and ordered the sergeant-at-arms to clear the aisles.

Then, pounding the table, Root announced:

"The exercises—I mean the business of this day—will be opened with prayer by the Rev. Joseph Stolz, Dr. Stolz being the rabbi of Isaiah Temple."

The delegates and alternates and every person in the galleries arose and stood during the invocation.

Senator Root announced the unfinished business of the day, the motion of James E. Watson, that the convention proceed to the appointment of the regular committees and the substitute motion of Governor Hadley that the Roosevelt list of delegates be substituted for the temporary roll. He also announced that agreement as to three hours' debate, and asked if there was objection. There was not.

Senator Root was elected temporary chairman of the Republican National Convention, receiving a majority of 56 votes over Governor McGovern, of Wisconsin.

The vote means neither the nomination of Taft on the first ballot nor the defeat of Roosevelt.

It showed that the President will have more strength than the Colonel on the first ballot. The third-termer made inroads upon the President's support in the South, and, if given the opportunity, Maryland, Illinois, Oregon and other States may divide in favor of Taft.

It is believed that the La Follette and Cummins votes will never be given either to Taft or Roosevelt.

The contest over the delegates seated by the National Committee was spectacular, but caused no violence.

Governor Hadley, of Missouri, moved to take from the temporary roll the Taft delegates and substitute the Roosevelt delegates in certain contested States.

Chairman Rosewater, after the question was debated, ruled that it was not within the province of this unorganized gathering to consider credentials and that no credentials, in fact, were before it, and that the motion was out of order.

Justice Charles E. Hughes made it plain that his decision not to permit the use of his name before the Republican National Convention was final.

Chairman Root, in his "keynote" speech, lauded the Taft administration, mentioned Roosevelt twice, praised the Colonel's work as President, but scored some of his policies.

DEFEAT DIRECT PRIMARY.

Hadley Plank Loses But By Small Margin.

Chicago.—The Republican platform committee voted down by a bare majority of one a proposition by Governor Hadley to incorporate a plank favoring the direct primary.

ROOSEVELT NAMED BY PROGRESSIVES

Accepts Nomination in a Stirring Speech.

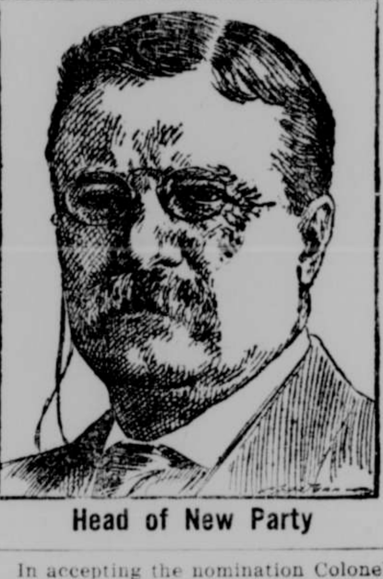
NEW PARTY GIVEN BIRTH

Representatives From 25 States at Orchestra Hall Informally Make the Colonel Candate.

Chicago.—Former President Theodore Roosevelt was nominated for President on an independent ticket in the dying hours of the Republican National Convention, in which he had met defeat.

The followers of Colonel Roosevelt gathered in Orchestra Hall, less than a mile from the Coliseum, and pledged their support to the former President.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT



Head of New Party

In accepting the nomination Colonel Roosevelt appealed to the people of all sections, regardless of party affiliations, to stand with the founders of the new party, one of the cardinal principles of which, he said, was to be "thou shalt not steal."

The informal nomination of Colonel Roosevelt was said to be chiefly for the purpose of effecting a temporary organization. An immediate call is to be issued for a State convention in Illinois, the work of organization will be pushed forward rapdly, State by State. At a later time, probably early in August, it is intended that a national convention shall be held.

Colonel Roosevelt in accepting the nomination said he did so on the understanding that he would willingly step aside if it should be the desire of the new party, when organized, to select another standard-bearer.

The speech nominating Colonel Roosevelt was made by Comptroller William A. Pendergast, of New York, who was to have presented the Colonel's name to the convention. Dean William Draper Lewis, of the University of Pennsylvania law school, who was to make one of the seconding speeches, delivered the address which he had prepared for the Republican Convention.

Representatives of 25 States composed the notification committee which informed Colonel Roosevelt of his nomination, and in a sense stood as sponsors for the movement. The committee consisted of Comptroller W. R. Pendergast, of New York; Meyer Lissner, of California; former Congressman Richmond Pearson, of North Carolina; Frank Knox, of Michigan; Matthew Hale, of Massachusetts; A. R. Garford, of Ohio; David Browning, of Kentucky; Everard Bierer, Jr., of Utah; Walter Thompson, of Vermont; Judge Oscar R. Hundley, of Alabama; Judge Ben B. Lindsey, of Colorado; Andrew Rahn, of Minnesota; Judge Stevens, of Iowa; Judge Lowder, of North Dakota; William Allen White, of Kansas; John C. Greenway, of Arizona; ex-Gov. John Franklin Fort, of New Jersey; Col. E. C. Carrington, of Maryland; Pearl Wight, of Louisiana; Lorenzo Dow, of Washington; Walter Clyde Jones, of Illinois; Frank Frantz, of Oklahoma; Harry A. March and D. C. Henderson, of Ohio; William Flinn, of Pittsburgh, recently resigned from the Republican National Committee; Francis J. Heney, of California; Alexander P. Moore, of Pennsylvania; James R. Garfield, of Ohio, and Senator Dixon, of Montana, Mr. Roosevelt's manager in the pre-convention campaign.

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARIES.

Government Supervision Proposed by Howland's Bill.

Washington.—Government supervision of presidential preference primaries is proposed in a bill introduced by Representative Howland, Republican, of Ohio. A national board of five members would have charge of all primaries of all parties in the United States. Boards of three members would have charge of primaries within the states. Candidates for president would be required to file declarations of candidacy with the national board and pay $1,000 each as filing fees. Penal sections are included to provide against the bribery of voters, as well as delegates and officers of conventions.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. C. E. Bray, Blaine, W. Va., purchased two valuable percheron horses in this neighborhood last week, for which he paid $575 for the pair.

Mrs. Chas. Wilson, of Washington, D. C., is visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. McLain.

Mr. G. E. Linstrom and family are in the Hillis cottage for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Williams, of Clarksburg, W. Va., were here Monday putting their cottage in order. They returned to Clarksburg the same day but will be here with their family in a short time and remain all summer.

Messrs. John A. and Harry Clark, of Fairmont, were here over Sunday with their families.

Mr. George Harvey, who claimed to be healed in answer to prayer two or three weeks ago, died last Saturday.

Miss Grace Callis, clerk in the post office here, has been very ill with quinsy, but is now improving.

Mr. E. E. Kesner has greatly improved his place of business. In addition to his new soda fountain he has added many accessories, enlarged his stock and covered the floor with linoleum. Mr. Dayton Schell is assisting in the confectionery and Miss Agatha Martini has charge of the news stand.

Mr. E. L. Winchel was here over Sunday.

Mr, Levi Echard is still critically ill, with little hope of his recovery.

Hon. George C. Sturgiss and family, of Morgantown, arrived last week and took possession of the U. A. Clayton cottage for the summer.

Mr. Hartman's family are in the Richardson cottage on F street.

A part of Dr. Baldwin's family and a few friends are occupying the large Baldwin cottage.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Speers, of Speers, Pa., are in their cottage and will later be joined by their daughter Miss Jessie.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Sheehy and children, of Washington, D. C., took possession of the Fulton cottage Monday.

Mr. J. M. Crane, of Kingwood, has rented his Loch Lynn Heights cottage to Mrs. Margaret E. Paden, of Parkersburg, W. Va., who will occupy the house this week.

Someone remarked the other day that the worst piece of road in Garrett county is from the station here to the Oakland road.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday morning at 11.00 o'clock by Dr. Chas. Eldred Shelton, and at 8.00 p. m. by the pastor, Rev. P. Z. Musgrave.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mrs. Gwelda Rawlings, relict of Mr. W. L. Rawlings, of Cumberland, formerly a very prominent and influential family of this place, was in town this week, visiting friends and looking up old time acquaintances. Mrs. Rawlings enjoys an occasional visit to her native place and is able, notwithstanding the many changes that have occurred, to pick out many of the old landmarks of her girlhood days and early married life. Mr. Lloyd Rawlings, well and favorably known in social and business circles in Cumberland, is her son.

Hon. Geo. L. Michaels, of Firm Rock, whose name is identified with the business and agricultural interests of this district, was in town this week.

Miss Alma Kemp left on No. 55 on Thursday afternoon, for an extended visit to relatives in Parkersburg and friends in other parts of the state. She was accompanied by her little niece, Bernadine Bonner, of Parkersburg, who has been home with the Kemp family for the past two months.

Mr. Lee Morehead, of this place, who has been ill with typhoid fever, is able to be out of bed a short time daily. Master Clyde Brenlin, is improving nicely. Lloyd Rowe and little Ruth Forbach have developed the disease in the last week.

Mr. Floyd Duckworth, a life long Republican, of the standpat kind, comfortably fixed in this world's goods on a productive farm in the Firm Rock settlement, passed through town this week, en route home from a visit to his friend, Mr. Henry Barnard, of Chestnut Grove.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Price are entertaining a most acceptable visitor, an addition to their household, which arrived via the Stork route on last Monday morning. The youngster is a boy, the first in the family and was happily received by his two little sisters, who together with the parents regard him as the most precious thing this side of Babyland.

"Failures lead the way to success." This old adage was brought forcibly to mind this week when the third attempt to build a road between this place and the mouth of Crab Tree, a distance of about six or seven miles, was commenced by a gang of workmen under Postmaster Stump as road foreman. The first location was made along the banks of Savage river on the railroad side during the time that the Lochiel Lumber Co. flourished in this vicinity as the leading industry in this end of the state, and had to be abandoned on account of the dirt and rocks being thrown from the railroad, obstructing the county road at times entirely—for which the county appropriated some $1,600. The second attempt was made a few years ago, located over the steep mountain side near Bond Junction on the B. & O., to connect with the main county road at Gilbert Warnick's farm, and had to be abandoned on account of its steep grade, and after one man had died of heart disease, who attempted to walk it, this venture cost the taxpayers about $400. Thus we see about $3,000 of the taxpayers money has been squandered for what—all we know for want of road making ability and practical knowledge on the part of the previous county commissioners. The present Board of County Commissioners, profiting by the failures of its predecessors and after a careful survey of the route by competent engineers have selected a location that is said to be the only practical and economical one that could be adopted. We understand it follows the river bottom, bridging the stream when necessary to avoid cut and other obstructions that would add materially to its cost of construction.

Mr. Frank Kraus is back home from the Western Maryland hospital, where he has been a patient for the last four weeks under surgical treatment for a pistol shot wound in the right shoulder, inflicted by his friend, Washington Barnard, who mistook him for a burglar when he knocked at Barnard's door at eleven o'clock at night and failed to respond to the question, "Who comes there." Kraus was taken to the hospital the same night the shooting occured and has been kept under observation awaiting any developements that might arise requiring an operation. The wound is healing nicely and the patient looks in good condition.

We hope that the knockers and kickers who have been beating the jack oaks and howling through the tall timbers of Garrett county over the sins of omission and commissions of the old Board of School Commissioners will now rest in peace, inasmuch as we understand, the old board with its new president, lately inducted in office, has promised the citizens and taxpayers that the accounts will be audited as any other business concern would do when there is a change in its management. This is a simple business transaction and we feel assured when the result of the examination, whether it may be made within the present board or by uninterested parties secured from without for that purpose, is published in the weekly papers throughout Garrett county, that those parties who have gone about the streets weeping and wailing and beating their breasts with fear and trembling over the condition of school affairs in the past will lie down to pleasant slumbers, satisfied that the limelight of a strictly business requirement has dispelled the gloom. So let the audit come.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Howard, of this place, have returned from Winchester, Va., where they have been for a few weeks visiting Mr. Howards mother.

Mr. G. C. Pattison, one of our prominent citizens, is home from a business trip to the eastern cities.

Miss Pleasant Howard of Winchester, Va., is a guest of her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Howard.

Mrs. Viola Connelly, of Piedmont, wife of Mr. Bart Connelly, a B. & O. fireman on the 17 mile grade was brought to this place on Saturday evening on west-bound accommodation train, suffering from typhoid fever and taken to the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Morehead, where she will remain until the termination of the disease.

The Big Vein Coal Co., of near Shaw, along the line of the W. M. R. R., has closed down its works until some time in August. This was necessitated on account of the condition of the coal trade, which holds out no prospects of anything but a very dull time this summer. Many of the miners living at Shaw have moved away and secured employment at other places.

The Mastellar Coal Co. at Hampshire, during the lull in the coal market are making improvements that will add very materially to the economy of the operating department of the plant. A new location of the incline is under construction between the 4 foot and the dump which will do away entirely with the tramway that is now used by the company greatly reducing expenses.

Mrs. William Hartley, of Blaine, a former resident of this place, is visiting relatives in town this week.

On account of the threatening condition of the weather, the out door meeting under Pastor Halpenny of the M. E. church of this place, which was to have been held in the Hampshire Grove, had to be abandoned and the congregation adjourned to one of the vacant buildings owned by the company where the services were concluded. The revival at the M. E. church is still going on.

Mr. Patrick Fahey, of Westernport, was in town on business Monday.

Delegate J. O. J. Green, of Allegany county, an enthusiastic rooter for his Republican constituents and a strong advocate for the advancement of his home town's (Westernport) interests, was a visitor to our place yesterday looking over the route of the new water line, which is designed to supply pure Savage river water in abundance to the residents of Westernport. The dam for the intake will be located a short distance above Middletown, halfway between the town of Bond and Bond Junction, about nine miles from Piedmont. The route of the water mains is located along the river bottoms avoiding grades as much as possible, crossing the stream by means of concrete tunnels nine times before it is delivered into the reservoir, for which the town is bonded for $75,000.

Mrs. James Spencer, of this place, is a patient in the Hoffman hospital for surgical treatment.

Mr. George Warnick, the well known merchant of this town, accompanied by his wife and little daughter, Ada, left on No. 2 over the W. M. R. R. last Monday morning for Baltimore to witness the ceremonies attending the nominations of the Democratic National convention.

Mrs. Michael Mastellar, wife of the president of the Mastellar Coal Co., operating its plant at Hampshire, formerly a prominent and influential family of Barnum, is a visitor to friends and acquaintances in that place.

Mr. William Mickey, Jr., of Beryl, engineer on the W. M. R. R., is confined to his home on account of an attack of rheumatism.

Mr. Edward Notts, of Beryl, is home after a pleasant visit to relatives at Terra Alta and Aurora, W. Va.

The employes of the mines of G. C. Pattison and the Bloomington Coal Co., received their pay on last Monday afternoon.

Miss Alma Love, daughter of Policeman Love, of Westernport, was a visitor to friends in town Tuesday.

Mrs. Gerstell, wife of Dr. Richard Gerstell, of Keyser, is a guest of the Macfarlane family at Barnum.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Everybody's doing it! Going? Going to the picnic at Friendsville on the 4th.

Mrs. Jessie Frazee and daughter, Leonora, expect to pay a visit to Somerset county, Pa., shortly.

There will be a big time in our city on the Nation's birthday. Don't forget it.

F. G. Fox is having his hotel property improved with cement walks and steps.

Semmes Hamill was seen in his big touring car on our streets Monday.

The ladies of the Lutheran church held a festival, which was a great success, Saturday evening. The band gave a concert for their benefit which was appreciated. The weather lately in this vicinity has been very wet with several hail storms. However, after the circus it may change.

A circus will be here Wednesday.

Albert Phillips is on a visit to our borough. We are always glad to see his pleasant face among us.

Mrs. Shaffer and daughter and Gus Frederick and family are the guests of W. Frederick and wife.

Albert Smith and wife are visitors at Ami Frankhouser and family.

John Holman is home for the holiday from St. John's College.

Harry Custer is also home from college to spend his vacation.

Ralph Reybeck, of Alexander, is visiting our town.

Albert Kolb was out fishing and caught a good soaking but no fish.

Charles Taylor and Aubrey Custer are still working at their profession and report business good.

Everybody is heading for the big picnic at Friendsville on the 4th.

The Knights of Pythias held their Memorial services on last Sunday and it was impressive in the extreme. Services were held in the M. E. church at 2 p. m., and then from there they marched to the cemetery headed by the Friendsville Military Band. A large number of the members turned out making an imposing spectacle. Rev. Morris, of Grantsville, preached the sermon which was a masterpiece; a quartette, composed of Misses Laura and Effie Fox and Messrs. Fox and East, rendered some fine selections and Miss Irene Wetstone performed on the organ.

The Band will hold a picnic in Friendsville on the 4th of July when amusemusements of all kinds will be indulged in; able speakers have been engaged; there will be an imposing parade at 10 o'clock after which the day will be given up to enjoyment; the band will give concerts throughout the day and evening. From all report from the vicinity around a large number of people will be in attendance.

PLEASANT VALLEY

Sowing buckwheat is the order of the day, and playing croquet is the order of the evening.

An excellent Children's Day program was rendered at the Pleasant Valley church Sunday, with a large audience in attendance.

Mr. Robert Moomaw is rushing the work on the new road.

Mr. Reuben Gnegy of this place, has moved his sawmill engine to a new location.

Mr. Hollie Sharpless of near Swanton, was visiting Mr. D. S. Davis' over Sunday.

Rev. S. E. Bauman's family are visiting relatives and friends in West Virginia.

Our Christian Endeavor is progessing nicely.

Mr. Freeland, of Mt. Lake Park, was visiting Mr. W. S. Friend Sunday.

A festival and box-supper will be held Saturday evening at Pleasent Valley, under the ausipices of the Pleasant Valley Band. Everybody welcome to come and enjoy themselves.

Preaching in the M. E. church Sunday morning at 11 by Rev. P. Z. Musgrave.

Freedom a Right.

Freedom is not a gift bestowed upon us by other men, but a right that belongs to us by the laws of God and of nature.—Benjamin Franklin.

NORTH GLADE

Children's Day here Sunday, July 14, morning and afternoon. Prominent speakers will be in attendance. A good time is anticipated. All cordially invited. Bring your baskets and have dinner on the ground.

Quite an interesting Children's Day program was rendered at the Lutheran Chapel last Sunday night. A large crowd was present and seemed to enjoy the occasion.

Quarterly meeting was held here on 15th and 16th inst. Rev. Johnson of Gormania, was here instead of Superintendent Reed. He gave us two soul inspiring sermons, but owing to the good rain, which was so much needed, the attendance was small.

Judge Thomas Moon was a welcomed visitor here recently.

J. L. Fitzwater, Jr., is attending school at the West Virginia Wesleyan College, Buckhannon.

Howard Moon has a good position with the B. & O. R. R. at Fairmont.

Messrs. Custer and Bernard are putting in a planing mill. Here's to a good enterprise here.

A. R. Bernard is preparing to erect a new house and barn.

J. Custer is arranging to build a new house.

MORERI II,

20279.

Having lost my Percheron Stallion Herve, I have purchased MORERI II 20279, a Registered Percheron Stallion, bred by R. D. NeGonigle & Sons, of Ashley, Ohio.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. Every care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

CAVE-IN BLOCKS TUNNEL

Greater Part of Sandpatch Bore On B. & O. Closed.

The greater portion of the Sandpatch tunnel on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, Pittsburg division, about 25 miles west of Cumberland, fell in shortly after 5 p. m. Tuesday, just after eastbound express No. 14, due in Cumberland at 6 o'clock, had passed through.

It is stated that months may be required to clean out the tunnel and it is thought doubtful if the railroad company will ever attempt the work, devoting instead its energies to the completion of the new Sandpatch tunnel which parallels the old one.

This tunnel has been building for some time and there is a probability that it can be completed before the work of clearing the old bore could be accomplished.

It is said that blasting for the new tunnel has cracked the mountain, precipitating the fall in of the old tunnel. A number of railroad men conversant with conditions had predicted what occured. The tunnel had long been looked upon as unsafe and the railroad company planned the new tunnel to eliminate danger.

Following the cave-in trains for the Chicago division were detoruend via Oakland and Fairmont all day on Tuesday until late in the afternoon when arrangements were completed whereby the B. & O. was permitted to use the new Western Maryland tracks from Cumberland to Sand Patch.

Sandpatch tunnel was built in 1871.

Lightning Hits a Big Barn.

During the severe storm that raged Friday afternoon, the large barn owned by Charles Frost, nine miles west of Frostburg, on the National Pike, was struck by lightning and almost destroyed. Mr. Frost was severely shocked by the lightning bolt, and Osborne Broadwater and Jabes Wonn also received a severe shock. The storm also did great damage to crops at Hazen.

ROOSEVELT CALL FOR CONVENTION PROMULGATED

"This is a Fight Not a Dress Parade" is Dixon's Declaration.

Reaffirming "Thou shalt not steal," as one of the cardinal principles of this campaign, the National Progressive Provisional Committee Sunday night issued the formal call for the convention, at which it is planned to name Theodore Roosevelt for president. Chicago is the place, and August 5th the date. Here is what Manager Joseph M. Dixon described as the latest "Declaration of Independence:"

"To the people of the United States, without regard to past political differences.

"Who through repeated betrayals realize that today the power of the crooked political bosses and of the privileged classes behind them is so strong in the two old party organizations that no helpful movement for the real interests to the country can come out of either;

"Who believe that the time has come for a national progressive movement, a nation wide movement on non-sectional lines, so that the people may be served in sincerity and truth, by an organization unfettered by obligations to conflicting interests;

"Who believe in the right and capacity of the people to rule themselves, and effectively to control all the agencies of their government, and who hold that only through social and industrial justice thus secured can honest property find permanent protection;

Who believe that government by the few tends to become and in fact has become government by the sordid influences that control the few;

"Who believe that only through the movement proposed can we obtain in the nation and the several states the legislation demanded by the modern industrial evolution;

"Legislation that shall favor honest business and yet control the agencies of modern business so as to insure their being used in the interest of the whole people;

"Legislation which shall promote prosperity and at the same time secure the better and more equitable diffusion of prosperity;

"Legislation which shall promote the economic as well as the honest farmer, wage-earner, professional man and business man alike, but which shall at the same time strike in efficient fashion—and not merely pretend to strike—at the root of privilege in the world of industry no less than in the world of politics;

"Who believe that only this type of wise industrial evolution will aid industrial revolution;

"Who believe that wholesome party movement can only come if there is wholesome party management in a spirit of service to the whole country;

"And who holds that the commandant delivered at Mt. Sinai, "Thou shalt not steal" applies to politics as well as to business;

"To all in accord with these views a call is hereby issued by the provisional committee under a resolution of the mass meeting held in Chicago on June 22 last, to send from each state delegates whose vote in the convention shall count for as many votes as the states shall have senators and representatives in Congress, to meet in convention in Chicago on the 5th day of August, 1912, to nominate candidates who shall be supported for president and vice president of the United States."

In the list of names appended to the call every state is represented with the exception of North and South Carolina, Arkansas, Delaware, Maine, Nevada, Idaho and Mississippi. Among the names are Miriam W. Johnson of California; Ben B. Lindsay, of Colorado; Medill McCormic, of Illinois; Charles J. Bonaparte and E. C. Carrington, jr., of Maryland; Joseph M. Dixon, of Montana; W. A. Pendergast, Oscar S. Straus and Timothy L. Woodruff, of New York; James R. Garfield, of Ohio; E. A. VanValkenburg, William Flinn, Gifford Pinchot, William Draper Lewis, of Pennsylvania; W. M. O. Dawson, of West Virginia.

"I believe that the convention will be more truly representative of the people than any ever held," said Senator Dixon tonight. "It will contain among its delegates mere brilliant and patriotic minds than have ever gathered at a political meeting. We expect to carry every state that Roosevelt carried at the recent primaries and enough more to insure his election as president.

We have in stock a full line of blanks for Justices of the Peace, including deeds, mortgages, leases, etc.

BISHOP JOSEPH F. BERRY WILL PREACH TO-NIGHT

And Also on Sunday Morning at Mountain Lake Park Auditorium.

Bishop Joseph F. Berry, of the Methodist Episcopal church, who has been in active control and charge of the camp meeting at Mountain Lake Park since its opening on the 4th inst., will preach in the Auditorium at the Park this evening beginning at 7.30 o'clock.

On Sunday morning a second sermon will be delivered by the eminent divine, the services to begin promptly at ten o'clock, which is an hour earlier than usual during the camp meeting.

There will be no charge for entrance to the auditorium to any service during the camp meeting and all will find a welcome.

ENTERTAINMENT EXTRAORDINARY

Will Be Given in the Amphitheatre at the Park Tuesday Evening.

The public will be pleased to learn of the concert to be given Tuesday evening, the 16th inst., in the Amphitheatre, Mountain Lake Park, when the Raymore Concert Company, under the direction of Mr. Edwin R. Walker, will present a program exceptionally attractive and entertaining.

Emily Dougan-Moore, contralto soloist, a popular Philadelphia vocalist; Beulah McNemar, the well known reader; Mr. Van Camp, violin virtuoso, and Belle Craddick-Ray, a pianiste of note, are the artists billed to appear at this entertainment.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

Charles F. Frazee Replies to Chairman Bond's Appeal to the Republicans of Garrett County.

To the Editor of The Republican.—I am not criticising Mr. Bond's appeal to the Republicans of Garrett county, but here is the question at stake, shall the Republicans of Garrett county and the United States by voting for the boss stolen candidate for President, come up in November and vote for him and approve of their theft?

If we vote for him it is surely indorsing their high handed robbery from the people.

Had Chairman Root been fair he would not have appointed one of these contested delegates on the Credential Committee, but would have appointed twelve delegates from other States not contested, six for Taft and six for Roosevelt, and allowed them to decide whether those contested delegates had a right to sit in the convention. But no, he appointed twelve contested delegates on the credential committee to sit on their own jury, to seat themselves, of course. When they were trying the twelve contested delegates the one being tried did not vote to seat himself, but the other eleven contested delegates voted to seat him and when he was stated he voted with the other eleven contested delegates to seat the others, and so on until all twelve were seated. Then those twelve delegates sat with the other delegates in the convention and voted to seat all the contested delegates from the different states.

Is this fair? No court of justice will allow a man to sit on his own jury to decide his own case. This was done at the Republican National Convention at Chicago.

Those twelve contested delegates should not have been allowed to be on the credential committee, and I glory in the manhood of Colonel Carrington, of Maryland, refusing to sit in the credential committee when he knew the cards were stacked against him.

The high hand of the bosses was not only detrimental to the Republican party, but was a direct insult to the American people who voted at the Republican primaries for their preference for President.

About 67 colored gentlemen of the South, which has never given a Republican elector to the Republican party, dictated to the whole people of the United States whom we should have for President, to hold their jobs as government employees.

Yours truly,
CHARLES F. FRAZEE,
National Delegate.

Band Concerts.

At the Mountain Lake Park Ampitheatre on Monday night, the 15th inst., and also on Wednesday night, the 17th inst., concerts will be given by the famous Mountain City Band of Oakland. The admission will be fifteen cents to each concert.

WOULD BUILD A MACADAM BOULEVARD

Representatives of Ocean to Ocean Highway Association In County.

While not exactly "blazing a trail" from ocean to ocean, yet pioneers in a transcontinental improved highway development, as important in this modern age of progress and expansion as that which confronted the frontiersman when he sought to pilot his prairie schooner across the continent, along the path of the buffalo, the advance guard of the Ocean to Ocean Highway Association, Col. Del M. Porter, of Clifton, Arizona, national organizer of the association, Judge J. M. Lowe, of Kansas City, president of the National Trail's Road Association; Burt G. Smith, automobile editor of the Los Angeles Times, and John Zak, driver and mechanician of the "Times Special," the automobile in which the party in traveling, arrived in Grantsville Tuesday afternoon to further the cause of a macadam boulevard from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a cause of which they are ardent and eloquent exponents.

The gentlemen were met in Frostburg on their way east and escorted to Cumberland by State Highway Commissioner Andrew Ramsey, of Mt. Savage.

"Our mission is to foster public sentiment and enlist workers in the cause of an ocean to ocean highway," said Mr. Smith to a press representative. "Our plan is to secure an appropriation from the Federal government for half the cost of this improved road, the states through which it passes to bear the remainder of the expense. To that end we left Los Angeles on May 15th, in our car provided by Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, owner of the Los Angeles Times, who bears all the expense of our expedition.

"Leaving Los Angeles, we followed the old Sante Fe trail through New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado and Kansas to Kansas City, where we struck the Boon's Lick trail, following it through Boonsville, Mo., into Illinois. Here we found the western terminus of the Cumberland pike, or as it is better known, the National pike and have followed it through Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Maryland to its beginning to Cumberland.

"In every city we have visited we have paused long enough to effect an organization of workers and the result of our efforts has been most gratifying. We have secured a total membership of 312,000 and will make it a half million when we reach the Atlantic. California has 10,000 members; Arizona 10,056; New Mexico 10,058; Colorado 11,500; Kansas 43,300; Missouri 43,400; Illinois 48,000; Indiana 50,050; and Ohio 50,000. We have started our organization in Wheeling and throughout West Virginia and will hold a meeting in Philadelphia having started the work in Uniontown and Connellsville. Special efforts to enlist workers will be made in West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York and here we propose to recruit our army to half a million to petition Congress in December for federal aid. Each member pays one dollar for membership half of which is used by the district organizations and the remaining sum is employed by the parent body to send out literature and to prepare a bound roster of the members, each of whom will receive a copy. Petitions will be sent to Congress in car load lots and the influence thus concentrated and directed will certainly bring about favorable Federal action. Wherever we have been enthusiastically received, for our project is universally popular."

The gentlemen will continue their journey today via the Baltimore pike and a organizer will be sent back to continue the work of enlisting support for this most commendable project.

Oakland Normal Stars.

The following program will be rendered Friday afternoon, July 12, 1912, by the students of the Oakland Normal:

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis.

CHAPTER II.

Our First Clue.

Louise and I sat at dinner together.

Isn't it strange in this world of ours how the commonplace follows on the terrible, how the usual and the unusual intermingle, how the clock ticks on when the whole universe seems to be tumbling about our heads! In one of the rooms up-stairs lay Katharine, still unconscious, with a doctor and a nurse constantly at her side. The bullet had been removed, and while it had penetrated the brain some slight distance, Doctor Wilcox said there was just a chance—the barest chance—that she might recover. It might, however, be hours, he explained, before she regained consciousness—if she ever did.

In another of the rooms lay General Farrish, more dead than alive. Paralysis had deadened his limbs and tied his tongue. Only his eyes seemed alert. Most of the time since the stroke had felled him he had been slumbering heavily, not with the sleep of health or weariness but with the coma of disease. In the moments when he was awake and seemed conscious his eyes still had the look of terror that we had seen just before he was stricken. Coupled with this look of fear was an indefinable expression of entreaty, as if there was something he would ask and could not. Anxious as Louise and I were to learn what it was that was troubling him, the doctor forbade our making any effort to do so, and made us leave the room, where he had put a second nurse in charge.

While the bustle of caring for the two stricken ones lasted there was little time for thought, and I was glad for the activity that kept Louise's mind distracted. Just at the moment when it seemed that everything had been done and there was nothing left but the anxious waiting—waiting for the worst—the butler had tiptoed in to summon us to dinner. Bravely, at first, Louise and I made pretense of eating, each trying to encourage the other, but the unforgetable events of the afternoon, the missing faces at the table and the sorrow that filled us both made food impossible. Drawing our chairs together, we discussed in whispers the baffling mystery of Katharine's attempted suicide and her father's strange terror.

On the table before us lay the scrap of yellow paper, the sight of which had so agitated General Farrish. As soon as he had been carried into his own rooms I had hastened to rescue it from the floor. I felt that, insignificant as it appeared, it must have some important connection with the events of the afternoon. Yet as Louise and I puzzled over it, there seemed nothing sinister in the fragments of sentences that the flames had left all but indecipherable.

The paper, of a peculiarly yellowish tint, was hardly more than two square inches, the torn corner of a folded letter. On it we could make out these words:

ba
used se a sister t seemed inevita
and disgrace ah
by accident le make good

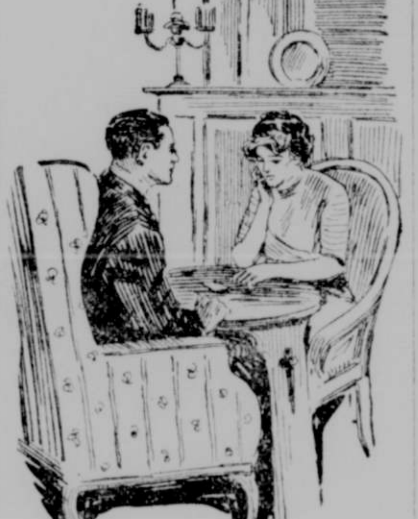
As we studied the bit of type-writing, word by word, we tried to trace in it some hidden meaning, some sinister warning, something or anything that would connect it with poor Katharine's mental distress and her father's poignant terror. That the letter of which this was a part had been in Katharine's possession was evident from the place where I had picked up the fragment. It was equally certain that it had been her purpose to destroy it. On the other hand, General Farrish, too, must have known of the existence of this letter, else why did he show such terror at the mere sight of a scrap of it? It must have been part of some document that had made a vivid impression on his mind. More than likely, we felt, whatever the letter was, it had played some part in the quarrel between Katharine and her father the afternoon before she dismissed Hugh Crandall.

We ran over all the words we could think of that begin "b-a," trying to fit one to the phrases following—back, bar, ban, bank, bankruptcy, basin, barrel, barren, battle—there were too many of them. We gave it up and passed on to the next phrase, "used se—" It proved equally puzzling. We could make nothing out of it, but the third line at least was definite enough for discussion.

"A sister—" said Louise. "That makes it certain that this letter did not apply in any way to father, for he never had a sister. He was an only child."

I was not so positive as she that the letter did not apply to the general. The thought came to me that perhaps even in the proud Farrish family there might have been some girl child of unblessed birth whose existence had been kept secret from Louise. Perhaps some knowledge of this sort had come to Katharine and the letter referred to it. I refrained from suggesting such a theory, for I felt it would be the height of cruelty even to hint such a thing to Louise at a time when the father was helpless to explain. Yet the following phrase, "seemed inevitable," might well fit into some theory such as this, followed as it was in the next line with the word "disgrace."



On the Table Before Us Lay the Scrap of Yellow Paper.

For a moment I felt that I was on the track of the solution of the mystery. Some specter from the general's past had risen to haunt his declining years, to threaten his good name, to worry him into his grave. His elder daughter had discovered it and had been unable to carry the burden of shame. Could this have been the secret that these two shared and kept Louise in ignorance of? A word from Louise all at once upset my theory.

"I wonder," she said, "if this isn't part of a letter about Hugh Crandall."

Both she and I were convinced that in some way Crandall was involved. My theory would not account for his connection with the case and I at once abandoned it, listening intently to one Louise advanced.

"There must have been some connection between his having telephoned her and what she did this afternoon. Before she shot herself she burned this letter, or most of it. Father must have known about the letter, so I am certain that it concerned Crandall."

"Has Crandall as sister?"

"I do not know," said Louise. "I know nothing about his family. It seems strange, too, when for months and months we saw so much of him. I do not recollect his ever having mentioned any of his relatives."

My brain recorded a victory for woman's intuition over man's logic. Her theory seemed infinitely better than mine. After all it was absurd to suspect a skeleton in the life of a man like General Farrish, who had been constantly under public scrutiny for many years. It was much more probable that the letter referred to some incident in the life of Crandall, something so discreditable that the general had been forced to forbid Katharine having anything to do with him. This theory would account for the quarrel between father and daughter, for Crandall's reticence about his family, for Katharine's distress, and naturally the sight of the letter that had caused all the trouble would upset the general. I began to see a plan for action.

"Louise, dear—" How quickly adversity strips off conventionality and puts us where our hearts would have us! "Louise, dear," I said, "it will probably be days before either your father or Katherine will be able to give us any assistance, yet the knowledge that everything has been cleared up, that the specter has been driven away, undoubtedly would hasten the recovery of both. So I feel that we must go ahead."

"Oh, Harding," she breathed. Her hand stole out and sought mine. "What a comfort you are to me! What would I have done this afternoon without you! You're right, dear, we must solve this awful mystery at once. We must."

"The first thing for me to do," I went on, "is to find Hugh Crandall. He can probably tell us all about this letter. Even if he can't he can say why he telephoned Katharine and where she went this afternoon. When we have learned this much we shall at least have made a good start. The next thing will be to trace the letter. If Crandall does not know about it, we will try to learn from whom it came."

"That's impossible," objected Louise. "Haven't we looked everywhere in Katharine's room for the envelope in which it came. I am positive that she burned it. Without the envelope you can never discover where it was mailed or to whom it was addressed."

"I'm not so sure about that. The post office has wonderful ways of tracing mail. One of the inspectors is a friend of mine and we will enlist his help. But first I must find Crandall. Probably he can tell us everything if he will. Do you know where he lives?"

"He has bachelor apartments somewhere along the avenue, I don't know just where. I know his place of business."

"I know that, too, but it is useless to try to find him there tonight."

"Katharine used to send all her notes to one of his clubs where he received his mail—I think it was the University."

"Come into the library," said I, "we can quickly locate him."

I stopped in the hall to examine the telephone book, hoping it might give his home address, but it contained only the office of his firm. However, I had no difficulty in finding in the library the volume I sought—the club directory—and turning to his name I saw that he was a member at both the University and the Harvard.

As I was a member of the University myself I had no difficulty in getting Crandall's address over the telephone. Loath as I was to leave Louise alone, I felt that prompt action was demanded, so I took my departure at once.

"If I find Crandall I will bring him back with me so that you may hear all he has to say. Whether or not I succeed, I will return within an hour. My friend, the post office inspector, lives somewhere out in Jersey, but I will see him the first thing in the morning."

The grateful look Louise gave me as I left imbued me with a new and wholly delightful sense of responsibility. The ten minutes it took me to reach Crandall's rooms were filled with that incoherent bliss that comes to every man who realizes for the first time what it means to have a woman's confidence entirely his.

Crandall lived in one of those remodeled mansions so common in that part of Fifth avenue from which the families have fled before the advance of trade. The basement and first floor were given over to shops and the upper floors to bachelor apartments. I had no difficulty in finding among the door-plates the name I sought, but repeated ringing brought no response. Determined not to leave until I had learned his whereabouts I gave the janitor's bell a vigorous push.

"Where can I find Mr. Crandall?" I asked as soon as he appeared.

His manner made it evident that he considered my question an impertinence, but I had met Fifth avenue janitors before.

"I am a lawyer," I persisted. "I must see Mr. Crandall tonight on an important matter."

"You won't," he replied, almost gleefully it seemed to me.

"Why not?" I demanded sharply. "What do you mean?"

My manner was not without its effect.

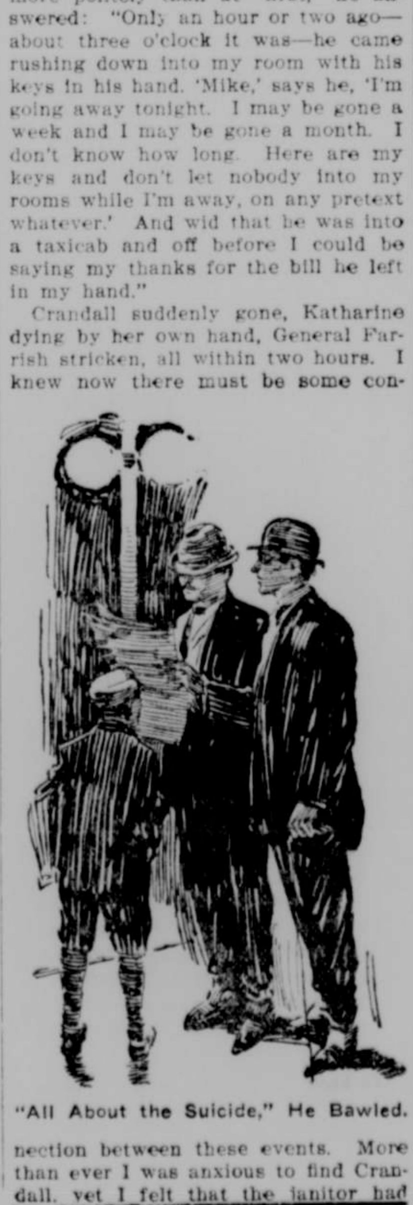
"He's gone away," the man explained a little more respectfully.

"Gone!" I exclaimed. Here was a new mystery, or perhaps the explanation of the first one. It may have been his departure that had depressed Katharine so.

"Where has he gone? When did he go? How long will he be away?" I volleyed.

Exasperatingly he delayed his reply. At last it seemed to occur to him that I was not making these inquiries purely for his amusement. Somewhat more politely than at first, he answered: "Only an hour or two ago—about three o'clock it was—he came rushing down into my room with his keys in his hand. 'Mike,' says he, 'I'm going away tonight. I may be gone a week and I may be gone a month. I don't know how long. Here are my keys and don't let nobody into my rooms while I'm away, on any pretext whatever.' And wid that he was into a taxicab and off before I could be saying my thanks for the bill he left in my hand."

Crandall suddenly gone, Katharine dying by her own hand, General Farrish stricken, all within two hours. I knew now there must be some connection between these events. More than ever I was anxious to find Crandall, yet I felt that the janitor had told me all he knew. I could see in the young broker's departure guilty knowledge of the shadow descending on the Farrish home. Surely his flight was confession.



"All About the Suicide," He Bawled.

There was nothing to be gained by further questioning of the janitor. From the manner of Crandall's departure it would be useless to look for him at either of the clubs to which he belonged. I might try to trace him through the taxicab, which he had probably called from the University Club near by, but that could wait until later. Just now I felt it my duty to hasten back to Louise and tell her of this new development.

As I turned from the door a newsboy with an armful of evening "extras" thrust one at me. Impatiently I waved him away.

"All about the suicide," he bawled as he darted off after another passerby.

Quickly I pursued him and fairly snatched one of his papers from him. Had the reporters, after all, learned of the tragedy in the Farrish home? Doctor Wilcox and I had discussed the matter of notifying the police and the coroner. We both felt that it would be wiser not to communicate with them, for such a course would inevitably bring publicity.

There was enough agony in the Farrish home without having this sorrowful secret blazoned to a curious world in three-inch type, without having a horde of reporters and camera men constantly surrounding the house. Besides, if Katharine recovered, sooner or later she would be sure to learn what the papers had said. The knowledge that her foolish crime against herself had been thus sensationally proclaimed would be a blow from which the sensitive girl—hitherto jealously shielded—would never recover. If she should not recover—Doctor Wilcox and I were trusting to chance to find a way of explaining her death. The servants—all of them trustworthy and long in service—had been cautioned not to talk to anyone about the afternoon's events. The doctor's aides and nurses, of course, had been silent. This is part of their business. How, then, had the papers obtained the news so quickly? I could think of but one possible way. More than likely some telephone girl who had heard Louise calling Doctor Wilcox had given it to the press. Even in the half-darkness of the middle of the block where I stood I could read the word "S-U-I-C-I-D-E" stretched across the page in letters of red. I hastened to the corner where the double globes shed down a brilliant light, anxious yet dreading to read what the paper said. At the first glance I breathed a sigh of relief. The article was not about Katharine Farrish. I had not thought of the possibility of there having been another suicide that day, but there it was:

Mystery in Self-Murder of Aged Lawyer.

Ordinarily I pay little attention to stories of crime. But the afternoon had given me a new and bitter appreciation of the meaning of suicide. Standing there under the light of a Fifth avenue corner I read the hastily written article word by word.

Andrew Elser, the article explained, had lived for many years in a West Twenty-third street boarding-house. Little was known about him there except that he was a lawyer. Several years ago he had given up his downtown office. Most of his income was derived from his fees as custodian of an orphan boy's estate. About four o'clock in the afternoon the landlady had heard a noise in his room like that of a body falling. On entering she had found him lifeless on the floor. She had called a policeman, who sent for an ambulance. The ambulance doctor found that Mr. Elser had taken poison.

It struck me as a peculiar coincidence that two persons so far apart in the social scale as Katharine Farrish and Andrew Elser should have chosen the same hour of the same day to seek death. Was there something in astrology after all? Had the stars decreed that both should die? Had some conjunction of the planets, some evil aspect in the Zodiac driven both of them—the young heiress, in the bloom of joyous youth, and the aged lawyer, in his decrepit poverty—relentlessly, helplessly, to self-destruction?

So deep was the impression made on me by the coincidence that I took the paper with me and read the account of Elser's suicide to Louise. Even as I read it aloud, this inexplicable thought came to me with startling force:

Suppose that these two suicides at the same hour were more than a mere coincidence. Was it possible that the same shadow had fallen on both these lives? Had the same mystery driven them to a death-pact?

It seemed absurd. It was unlikely that Katharine Farrish had ever heard of Andrew Elser. If the family had known him Louise would have mentioned it. And yet—why had these two persons sought to die on the same hour of the same day? The question would not let me sleep that night.

CHAPTER III.

The Second Clue.

"I can't do it, Harding. You are asking an impossibility."

I was sitting in Inspector Davis' room in the post-office building. The first thing in the morning I had gone there to enlist his aid in clearing up the mystery that hung over the Farrish home. With the confidence based on a friendship that had its beginnings in boyhood association I felt sure he would do all he could to help me. I wanted, if possible, to learn through him whence had come the yellow letter.

Davis, though only a year older than I, already had become one of the government's most trusted secret agents. His rise in the service had been phenomenally rapid. The robbery of the post-office where he was employed had given him his start. A little later, with the merest thread to follow, he had run to earth a skilful band of stamp counterfeiters, and three of its members were now serving long terms. Only a year ago, when all the other inspectors had failed to find the flaw in the registry service that permitted a red-striped sack with two hundred thousand dollars' worth of registered mail to disappear, Davis, putting his keen, analytical mind on the case, within a week had discovered the flaw in the system and only a few days later had arrested the ex-convict who had profited by it.

With the natural interest of an old friend I had followed his career and was familiar with most of his brilliant achievements. Even though the scrap which was puzzling me had no envelope and bore no postmark, so confident was I in his far-reaching powers I would hardly have been amazed if he had told me all about it as soon as I showed it to him. Imagine, then, my disappointment at his absolute refusal to take up the matter at all.

"Don't you see how important it is?" I cried. "This little scrap is the key to the whole mystery."

He was sitting with his back to the light—a trick most business men have these days, so that they can see your face in full light, while you have difficulty in reading theirs—yet from his tone I felt that he was inwardly amused at my anxiety.

"I'm afraid you overrate my detective ability and my powers as a post-office inspector," he said. "While I am inclined to agree with you that this bit of paper may have some bearing on the case, there is nothing to show from what post-office it came, through whose hands it passed, or by whom it was received. It may not have come through the mail at all. More than likely some messenger brought it. Before I could undertake an investigation I would have to know, first, that it had come through the mail; second, that there was some evidence that the mails were being used for an unlawful purpose; and third, I would want to be certain before I began the investigation, that I would win out. That's the secret, old chap, of my success, of everybody's success. Don't tackle things you can't do, then you never fail."

Davis' refusal was a greater blow to me than I cared to admit. Louise and I in our final conference the night before had decided that there were three steps that would take us far into the light.

First, I was to try at once to find Hugh Crandall. I was to ask him to explain the rupture with Katharine, the attitude of General Farrish toward him, his knowledge of the yellow letter, and why he had called Katharine on the telephone the afternoon before.

Second, failing to find Crandall, I was to make some pretext for visiting his rooms. His sudden departure and his cautioning the janitor to admit no one had a suspicious look. While neither Louise nor I had discussed what might be there to explain the mystery, I was thinking that in all probability I would find a bundle of letters from Katharine, some of which might furnish a clue.

Third, I was to ask Inspector Davis to help me trace the yellow letter.

I had anticipated little difficulty in ascertaining Crandall's whereabouts. A broker of standing does not vanish overnight without informing his business partners. Before coming to the inspector I had telephoned to Crandall's office. Great was my amazement to learn from one of his partners that they were as much puzzled as I over his sudden going away. They had merely received a telegram saying that he had been called out of town unexpectedly and did not know when he would return. The telegram had been sent from an office near his rooms the night before. There was no business affair that would take him away, so they supposed that it was some urgent personal matter.

While I chatted for a moment with Davis over our boyhood days I was thinking what step I should take next. The problems of learning Crandall's whereabouts and gaining access to his rooms did not seem so simple as they had the night before. A clerk entered with a card for Davis, and I rose to go.

"Don't go yet," he said. "It's only a man from police headquarters. His errand will probably take only a minute."

As I resumed my seat Detective Dowd was ushered into the room. He was the typical police sleuth, thick of head and foot, ready to suspect the suspicious and to see the obvious. In appearance, in speech, in manner of thought, he and the inspector were almost exact opposites. One was a grizzled, bleary-eyed man of fifty whom even the clumsiest criminal could not have mistaken for anything but what he was; the other, young-looking for even his thirty years, might have been readily mistaken for a college tutor or an alert reporter. It amused me to see with what deference the man from headquarters approached him.

"Beg your pardon for disturbing you, Inspector," he said, nervously twisting his hat, "but I've got a little matter here the chief wanted me to put up to you."

He turned toward me with a suspicious glance, but Davis hastened to assure him that he could speak freely before me.

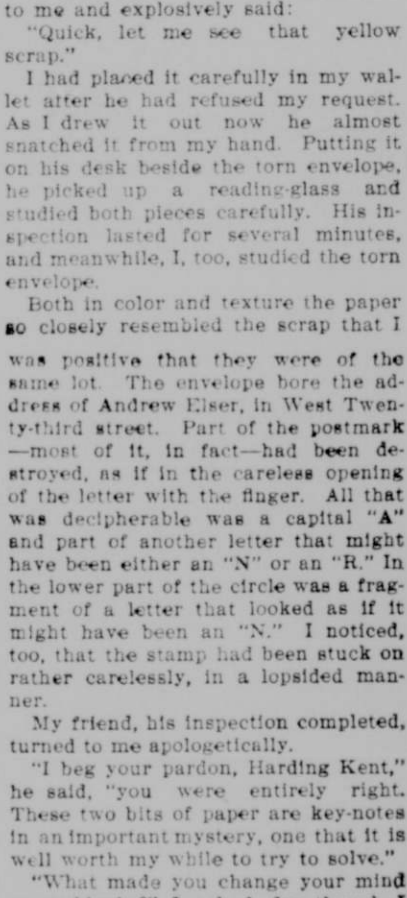
"It's this," he explained, "the old man wants to know about."

As he spoke he drew something from his inner pocket and laid it on the inspector's desk. As my eyes followed his hand I gave a sudden start. With difficulty I restrained an expression of amazement. The object about which he had come to inquire was a torn yellow envelope.

I glanced quickly at Davis. I fully expected to see in his face something of the same astonishment I had felt. I was disappointed. With a casual glance at the envelope he turned to Dowd as if waiting for him to go on.

"It's evidence in the Elser case," the detective went on, "turned in by the man on post who reported the suicide. He was that old party that was found dead in his room up on West Twenty-third street. To my mind, it's just a plain case of suicide—an old man tired of living. The poison bottle was there on the floor beside him. I don't see nothing suspicious about it, but the chief has taken a notion that there's something behind it and wants to know where this letter came from. We searched the room, but this torn envelope was all we could find. The postmark's torn through, but he thought maybe you could trace it anyhow."

"I'll see what I can do and I'll let you know in the morning," said the inspector calmly, dismissing the detective with a nod. From his matter-of-face tone and apparent lack of interest I would not have been surprised if he had refused this undertaking, too, as he had mine, though it seemed to me that the two bits of yellow paper connected the two suicides at the same hour as something decisively more than a mere coincidence.



"Beg Your Pardon for Disturbing You, Inspector."

As soon, however, as the detective had left the room the inspector's whole manner changed. With the glitter of excitement in his alert eyes he turned to me and explosively said:

"Quick, let me see that yellow scrap."

I had placed it carefully in my wallet after he had refused my request. As I drew it out now he almost snatched it from my hand. Putting it on his desk beside the torn envelope, he picked up a reading-glass and studied both pieces carefully. His inspection lasted for several minutes, and meanwhile, I, too, studied the torn envelope.

Both in color and texture the paper so closely resembled the scrap that I was positive that they were of the same lot. The envelope bore the address of Andrew Elser, in West Twenty-third street. Part of the postmark—most of it, in fact—had been destroyed, as if in the careless opening of the letter with the finger. All that was decipherable was a capital "A" and part of another letter that might have been either an "N" or an "R." In the lower part of the circle was a fragment of a letter that looked as if it might have been an "N." I noticed, too, that the stamp had been stuck on rather carelessly, in a lopsided manner.

My friend, his inspection completed, turned to me apologetically.

"I beg your pardon, Harding Kent," he said, "you were entirely right. These two bits of paper are key-notes in an important mystery, one that it is well worth my while to try to solve."

"What made you change your mind so suddenly?" I asked, for though I quite agreed with him, his manner had puzzled me not a little.

He leaned back in his chair and turned it so that he faced me. He had a sharp, explosive way of speaking, biting off his words almost before he had completely enunciated them.

"Can't you see? One footprint leads nowhere. Two footprints start a path. When you brought that yellow scrap to me you were merely guessing that it might have something to do with

The Last Dollar.

When a man has a dollar to spend and knows where to get many more he blows it in heedlessly and then rails at its small buying capacity. To be sure a dollar isn't much, but if it's the last a man has, and he knows not where in the world to get another, and if he turns that coin over and over and thinks and plans how to make every mill of every cent do its utmost, he will make it elastic enough to cover many needs, and then is amazed at its great purchasing power.—New York Press.

Stamp in a Letter.

When sending a stamp in a letter, instead of moistening one corner and sticking it to the paper, moisten a small spot in the center of the stamp and then affix it to your letter. The removal of a small part of the adhesive substance from the center in no way impairs the usefulness of the stamp; whereas it is often torn if the corner is fastened.

WOODROW WILSON WINS NOMINATION

New Jersey's Governor Made Candidate of the Democrats For the Presidency by Acclamation After Withdrawal of Clark, Underwood and Foss

RECORD BREAKING SESSION

Clark's Missouri Men Begged Final Chance to Vote for "Champ"—Bryan a Centre of Interest When Professor's Victory Becomes Assured—New York Delegation Falls in Line for Wilson with a Whoop.

Convention Hall, July 3.—Governor Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, was nominated by acclamation as the Democratic candidate for President of the United States by the National Convention here amid thrilling scenes. The great Convention had paused in breathless silence when, at the beginning of the forty-sixth ballot, Senator Bankhead, of Alabama, rose to withdraw Oscar W. Underwood's name as a candidate. The Convention was almost too excited to cheer at the announcement, which meant that Wilson had won, but there was an effort at a demonstration which soon died away as Senator Stone made his way to the platform and announced that Speaker Clark released his delegates, but that Missouri would stick to him. This brought a burst of cheering.

Woodrow Wilson made gains after Illinois had switched to him in the forty-third ballot. Other States split their vote for Wilson, and he made heavy gains. Following was the result of the forty-fifth ballot:

Clark, 306; Wilson, 633; Underwood, 97; Foss, 27; Harmon, 25.

Michigan came along with 28 ballots for Clark, and then Virginia cast 24 for Wilson. West Virginia next came with sixteen for Wilson.

Illinois led the break to Wilson with fifty-eight votes, cast under the unit rule. Idaho with 1 1-2 votes, Connecticut with 2 votes, Iowa with 1 1-2 votes, Louisiana with 2 votes, Michigan with 8 votes, North Carolina with 2 votes, Virginia with 20 votes and Wisconsin, Hawaii and Washington with 1 vote each, followed the lead of Illinois, and added the total of these net changes to the Wilson list.

The Wilson people made a demonstration in the hall when the result was announced.

When the roll call, without Maryland, showed that Wilson had gained 114 votes and lost 1 on the vote, all eyes went to Maryland.

"We demand the poll of Maryland," called the delegates.

The announcement of the result was the signal for a short spurt of applause from the Wilson side of the house.

Mississippi which had solidly voted 20 votes for Underwood, hesitated for the first time on the forty-fourth ballot.

When her name was called, the voice that had sung "20 votes for Oscar W. Underwood" since the opening of the convention, asked that the State be passed while it held a caucus.

Pennsylvania changed her long-standing vote of 74 for Wilson to a solid one of 76. The change started the applause again. Utah solidified her vote and gave it all to Wilson.

The Wisconsin vote, which had been divided, was also thrown en masse to Wilson. Mississippi's vote was awaited with great interest. When she refused to change and clung to Underwood there was handclapping in the Alabama delegation.

The break to Wilson came with a rush after three ballots, in which Governor Wilson's vote went up with meteoric swiftness. With 633 at the conclusion of the forty-fifth ballot, Governor Wilson's nomination became a matter of minutes.

As the roll of the States started over again on the forty-sixth ballot, Alabama led off as usual with twenty-four votes for Underwood, and then there came a sudden halt. Senator Bankhead, of Alabama, manager of the Underwood campaign, mounted the platform and withdrew the nomination of his candidate.

On behalf of Mr. Underwood he thanked the delegates who had supported him for four days of wearisome ballotting and then withdrew. The tide which had been rising with great swiftness for the New Jersey Governor was now topping the 726 needed to nominate if the Underwood men voted for Wilson, and Senator William J. Stone, of Missouri, appeared to release Champ Clark's delegates.

Senator Stone said that the Speaker released his delegates, but added that Missouri would remain loyal to her favorite son until the last hope was gone. He said Missouri would support the nominee, no matter who.

Mayor Fitzgerald, of Boston, hurried up to announce that Massachusetts' delegates, who had been voting for Eugene N. Foss, voted for Woodrow Wilson. The landslide was on with a vengeance.

Mr. Fitzgerald moved that the roll call be dispensed with and the nomination of Wilson be made by acclamation. The roll, however, was called to record a final testimonial to Champ Clark.

The last ballot resulted: Clark, 84, Harmon, 12, Wilson, 990.

Then came the shouts to make it by acclamation, and cheers shook the armory where the wearied 1,088 had been in session for a week with four days of ballotting.

A demonstration followed the nomination by acclamation. Delegates paraded about in the hall, shouting and throwing their hats into the air, and the most important work of the Democratic Convention of 1912 was done.

The Baltimore Convention was one of those great gatherings which one may witness but once in a lifetime if at all. The kind of a political gathering whose like has never before been witnessed in this, or any other, country.

It was a battle of political titans—two men—William Jennings Bryan, three times the standard bearer of the party, and Charles F. Murphy, the recognized leader of Tammany, probably the most remarkable political organization this country has ever known.

No sooner had Cardinal Gibbons, clad in the rich robes of his churchly office, pronounced the final words of the opening invocation on Tuesday noon, and the battle was on.

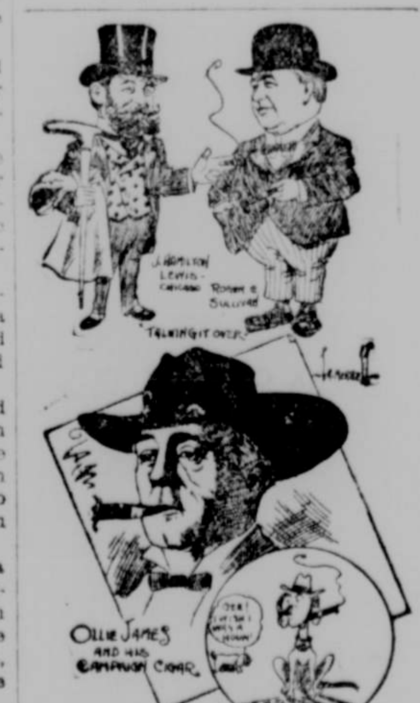
Mr. Bryan's nominaton of Senator Kern for the temporary chairmanship in opposition to Judge Parker, the choice of the national committee, was but a feint. When Mr. Kern, taking the speakers' platform, pleaded for Democratic harmony, and proposed to Judge Parker that they both retire in favor of any one of half a dozen men whom he named, Mr. Bryan scored his first tally. He had the opposition on the defensive for a time at least.

When Judge Parker declined to respond to Senator Kern's proposition the Senator retired and named Mr. Bryan for temporary chairman, a move that was wildly welcomed by the New York delegation, as Mr. Murphy was more than willing to try conclusions with the Commoner on a direct issue.

The surprise of the day was the throwing of the Clark strength to Parker, and it was that incident, happening within an hour after Chairman Mack's gavel had called the convention to order, that produced the deadlock when the balloting for the nominess began early Friday morning.

The defeat of Col. Bryan for the temporary chairmanship was a momentous event for the Democratic party, and the leaders and rank and file of the party knew it when it occurred. It was no longer a contest between candidates. It was to the bitter end between Mr. Bryan and Mr. Murphy. Both had accepted the guage of battle, and there would be no compromise.

The change in the party alignment brought many surprises to the layman. Among them the swinging of Theodore A. Bell, of California, temporary chairman of the Denver convention of four years ago, to the Murphy forces. Mr. Bell led the opposition to Bryan, and did not hesitate in demanding that the Nebraskan, to whom the Democracy had given three opportunities, now step aside, and permit other leaders to shape the course of the party.



After the vote ex-Gov. Patterson of Ohio, expressed the feelings of many of the old leaders who had that day voted against Bryan, when he said:

"The defeat of Mr. Bryan, necessary though it was, was an occasion for tears rather than cheers. He has been and is a great man, but he has had his opportunity, and must now step aside."

That Tuesday night following the defeat of Mr. Bryan, will ever remain a memorable one in Democratic history. The great question of that night was: "Is it to be a bolt."

Among the leaders for the various candidates, the Clark forces instantly realized that if the Speaker was to win he must do so in spite of Mr. Bryan's opposition. The Wilson leaders knew they would have Bryan's support, but would it suffice? Leaders of other candidates were wondering what form the alignment would take when the deadlock between Clark and Wilson should be broken.

THAT ALL-NIGHT SESSION.

Scenes and Speechmaking Preceding the Roll Call.

It was a long night and a wild one. Sunset came and darkened the great east windows of the convention hall with men talking of candidates and party principles. Sun-up lightened the windows again to find men tired but voiceful still, talking of men and principles, and strangest of all, to an audience of fully 5,000 persons, half, it is true, delegates, alternates and newspapermen, but the rest interested spectators, whom neither flow of oratory nor repeated demonstrations, each very like the other, could drive away.

'Twas such a night as old conventioners could not remember. It was probably the most remarkable night in the history of the time-honored Democratic party.

Just when the convention was about to proceed to put candidates in nomination for the Presidency William Jennings Bryan got the floor and offered a resolution which declared in substance that the money power, as represented by J. P. Morgan, Thomas F. Ryan, and August Belmont, was engaged in a conspiracy to purchase the Presidential nomination of the convention. Mr. Ryan was sitting in the convention as a delegate from Virginia and Mr. Belmont as a delegate from New York. Mr. Bryan's resolution practically called upon the convention to expel them, and to declare itself opposed to the nomination of any candidate representative of or under obligation to the Morgan-Ryan-Belmont interests.

Pandemonium does not describe the scene that followed this move on the part of the peerless leader.

The faces of Murphy, Taggart, Sullivan and others of the old line leaders were studies as they listened to the Bryan declaration and quickly decided what action to take on it. The moment that the Nebraskan withdrew the concluding portion of his resolution which would have forced the expulsion of Ryan and Belmont as delegates, the battle was won for Bryan.

One feature of the tense battle between Bryan and the New York and Virginia delegations over the Bryan resolution escaped the notice of most of the delegates and spectators in the convention hall.

Every man who spoke for or against the resolution, except Bryan, showed the tense emotion that gripped him. Their faces twitched, their hands trembled. Most of them were seeing red.

Bryan, on the contrary, was as calm, as steady, as unruffled, as if he were addressing a Chautauqua audience. His jaw was firmly set, but his hand was steady. He had perfect control of his voice and his selection of words was deliberate. Only his eyes showed the strain he was under. These flashed as few people have seen them. But from the galleries he appeared almost unconcerned in the outcome.

Mr. Bryan made the situation even more dramatic by asking Virginia and New York to request a modification of the resolution, and when they scorned the suggestion he took the course himself. From that moment sentiment changed.

The final vote was: Yeas, 889; nays, 196; not voting, 2; absent, 1.

Bryan's fight "to rid the Democratic party of the Ryan-Belmont-Morgan interests" delayed the beginning of nominating speeches at the night session from 8 o'clock until nearly 11.

Then just before midnight the delegates and visitors settled back for what was to be six hours of oratory and noisy demonstrations.

When Alabama, the first State on the roll, was called, the chairman of the delegation, announced that William B. Bankhead, son of Senator Bankhead, would speak. He placed in nomination Oscar W. Underwood. Senator Bankhead concluded his speech at 11.18, and the Alabama delegates leaped cheering to their seats. They were joined by the Georgians and other Underwood delegates. Underwood banners and Underwood pictures were held aloft, and the band played "Dixie." The demonstration lasted 20 minutes.

At 11.50 p. m. Arizona yielded to Missouri, and Senator James D. Reed spoke for the nomination of Champ Clark. This started a great demonstration for Clark that lasted more than an hour.

One of the marchers carried in a big rooster that was held on high by an enthusiast who climbed into the press stand. Meantime, the crowd kept up a terrific din, whistling, cheering, and blowing horns. A score of parti-colored umbrellas were raised, and some of the spectators in the galleries began throwing improvised confetti among the delegates. An attempt was made to carry the Wilson banners to the platform, following the example of the Clark adherents, but the officers of the Convention ordered them down, and they continued their parade about the hall. Quiet was restored at 1.30.

J. T. Robinson, Governor-elect of Arkansas, then took the platform to second the nomination of Clark. Robinson talked just five minutes. California seconded the nomination of Clark. Robinson talked just five minutes. California seconded the nomination of Clark. Colorado was passed. Then came Connecticut, and Henry Wade Rogers of New Haven took the platform to nominate Gov. Simeon E. Baldwin of Connecticut.

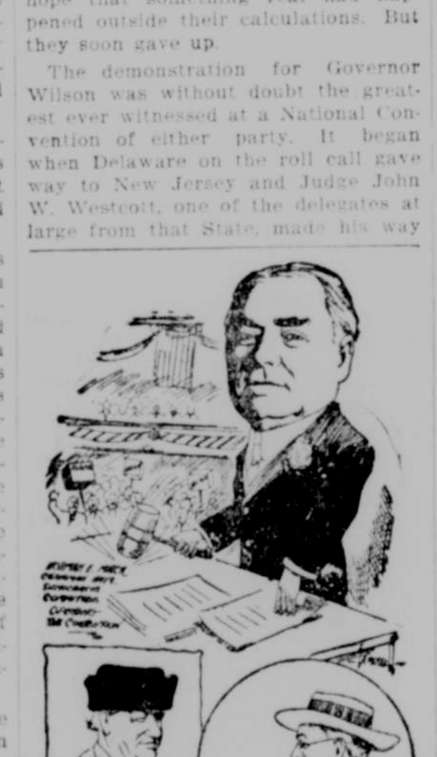
At the conclusion of Rogers's speech the Connecticut delegates began a demonstration for Baldwin. It lasted only a few minutes. The Baldwin adherents were not many, but lusty lunged, and while their demonstration lasted it was quite a noisy one.

The Clark demonstration made the one which followed the nomination of Connecticut's favorite son, seem tame in comparison.

That did not appeal to the spirit of fairness among the newspaper men, so they hastily arranged in honor of Gov. Baldwin a fine rock crystal demonstration, which was attended by many, and at which a good time was reported by all.

It did so well that Connecticut men got to their feet again in the dazed hope that something real had happened outside their calculations. But they soon gave up.

The demonstration for Governor Wilson was without doubt the greatest ever witnessed at a National Convention of either party. It began when Delaware on the roll call gave way to New Jersey and Judge John W. Westcott, one of the delegates at large from that State, made his way to the platform to place the name of Governor Wilson in nomination. That was at ten minutes after two o'clock.



Judge Westcott had just time to bow to the chair and turn to the delegates when bedlam broke. Some one proposed "Three cheers for Governor Wilson," and that was the match that started the fire. The Wilson delegates and their followers were on their feet in a flash. An effort was made by Ollie James, the chairman, to halt the demonstration at least until Judge Westcott got a chance to mention the name of the candidate in whose advocacy he had attempted to speak. It was useless though to even think of stopping the demonstration. In less time than it can be told delegates and boosters were jumping up and down, screaming hysterically, in their efforts to start a demonstration. And they succeeded, for one after another nearly all the delegations, including many who had joined in the frenzied Clark demonstration earlier in the night, had taken up the cry "We want Wilson."

Banners, flags, signs, posters and emblems of every conceivable kind were hoisted into the air and waved vigorously, stirring up enthusiasm. The screaming and yelling increased and so did the number of banners and flags. From the balconies huge signs bearing Wilson mottoes were hung over the American flags that had been used to decorate the hall.

At 3.15 a. m. the Wilson demonstration passed the record made by the Clark people earlier in the session. It had been under way an hour and five minutes. At this time the noise began to subside, and the sergeants-at-arms started in to clear the aisles, the police assisting. At 3.20 order had been more or less restored. Then some one brought an electric automobile horn in the hall and the pandemonium broke loose again.

By the time Westcott was well into his speech a somnolent quiet had settled over the hall, broken every now and then by the rounds of applause that greeted the speaker's eulogy of Wilson. The galleries half filled with both men and women, had subsided into sleepy silence. A few busy boys and men passed about the hall peddling sandwiches and water—for a substantial consideration—to the exhausted delegates and spectators.

Convention Floor Like a Circus.

The Convention floor had taken on the appearance of a circus ground after the performance. The debris of the night of wild disorder was strewn about the place. The State standards, broken and battered, leaned drunkenly above the heads of the delegations. Several of the delegates slept fitfully, head on breast, awakening with a start as each gust of applause swept the room. A highly colored lithograph of Wilson glared down from one of the galleries, where it had been hoisted during the Wilson demonstration. Even the police, on post along the aisles, leaned heavily on the seats or shifted uneasily.

It was four o'clock when Westcott concluded, and his peroration set off another demonstration by the Wilson forces. The lseepy delegates awoke to life, and, aided by the band, they raised a din. Once more the standards were wrenched from the places; the Wilson banners again put in an appearance, and the parade around the hall once more was on.

Five minutes of demonstration found the parade piled in a struggling mass of delegates, marchers, chairs, and banners at the head of the centre aisle. The yelling continued, and the band aided the uproar. Up in the gallery the shrieking automatic automobile horn was again turned loose to add to the pandemonium of sounds.

Chairman James finally decided that it had gone far enough and he pounded his desk, ordered the sergeant-at-arms to clear the aisles, and then ordered that the roll call be resumed.

When Indiana was called Senator Shively took the platform to nominate Gov. Marshall. It was then 4.35 a. m.

By the time Shively had finished at 5.05 dawn and begun to dim the arc lights in the hall. A cheer greeted the conclusion of his speech, and the Indiana delegation swung out a big Marshall banner. For the first time a band appeared on the floor of the Convention and led the parade through the aisles. The Hoosiers marched to the strains of "On the Banks of the Wabash." Senator Kern was prominent in the procession, marching behind the big Marshall banner.

The Marshall band and demonstration served to awaken the few spectators left in the galleries for a short time. The demonstration, however, lasted only five minutes.

Ohio was called at 5.45 a. m., and M. A. Daugherty stepped to the front of the stage to nominate Gov. Judson Harmon of Ohio.

Mr. Daugherty concluded at 6 a. m. The Harmon forces made no attempt at a demonstration.

As a rule the delegates listened patiently to the somewhat lengthy nominating and seconding speeches, seeming to realize that this rhetorical maze had to be threaded before the serious work of voting was begun. After day had broken and the artificial lights in the big armory were giving way before the gray shafts streaming through the windows the pangs of hunger and the fatigue of the long sitting grew upon them and they began to call to the speakers to make what they had to say as brief as possible. The wiser men among the scheduled orators heeded this advice. Others who atempted to make the eagle scream and the flag wave in wordy pictures were treated with scanty courtesy.

Take Test Vote Quickly.

It was 6.43 a. m. when the last state was called and the last speech had been made. Inside the auditorium only a single line of arc lights gleamed where there had been a score before. Outside, the light of day filtered its way through a heavy veil of clouds. But the clouds were no heavier than the eyes of the delegates, and they greeted the beginning of the first roll call with a whoop.

The test vote was carried on with great rapidity and little or no confusion. The galleries were all but forsaken. Strangely enough the women seemed to outnumber the men among the spectators who had spent the night at the hall, and were also much more keenly alert to the proceedings. Two or three of them had collapsed into sound slumber.

It required half an hour to call the roll and figure the results.

Six candidates had been placed in nomination. Oscar Underwood of Alabama, Champ Clark of Missouri, Simeon Eli Baldwin of Connecticut, Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey, Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana and Judson Harmon of Ohio.

Clark	440 1-2
Wilson	324
Harmon	148
Underwood	117 1-2
Marshall	31
Baldwin	22
William Sulzer	2
William J. Bryan	1
Not voting	2

From the fifth to the ninth ballot New York voted "90 for Harmon," and Nebraska voted almost solidly for Clark as instructed by the State convention. Mr. Bryan, as a Nebraska delegate-at-large, following his instructions up to and including the fourteenth ballot. On the tenth ballot New York switched to "90 for Clark," causing a Clark demonstration. The balloting continued without serious interruption until Nebraska was called on the fifteenth when Mr. Bryan arose from his seat on the floor and asked permission to explain a change in his vote.

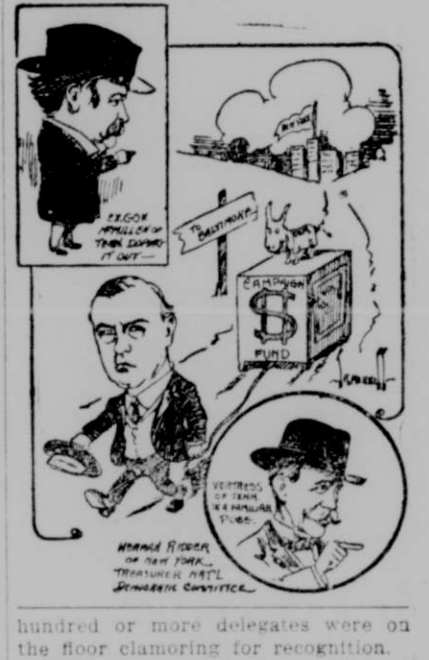
"No! No!" came the cries, and Congressman Sulzer, of New York, who was presiding, ruled the Nebraskan out of order, and instructed him to vote without an explanation.

"Despite my instructions, I will not vote for Clark so long as New York votes for him," yelled Mr. Bryan, and pandemonium was again loose in the great convention.

The unanimous consent which Mr. Bryan had asked was finally granted at the request of Senator Stone, of Missouri.

From the platform Mr. Bryan read a typewritten statement saying he did so for the reason that he did not want to be misquoted. It was a scathing arraignment of Murphy and the interests Bryan claims he represents, and another effort to read Tammany out of the Democratic party. He referred to his resolution which the convention had passed on Thursday night, and said no candidate the party might nominate with the assistance of the votes of the New York delegation voting as a unit under the direction of Murphy would be in a position to carry out the promises of that resolution.

The reading of his statement was interrupted time after time before it was completed, and when completed a hundred or more delegates were on the floor clamoring for recognition.



BALTIMORE

HERMAN RIDDER OF NEW YORK TREASURER NAT'L DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE

"Will you support the nominee of this convention" yelled one delegate.

"I do not expect to bolt," parried Mr. Bryan.

Another succeeded in asking a long hypothetical question, which he refused to answer unless it was made more explicit.

Another asked whether he considered a refusal to support a candidate receiving Murphy's support the same as a refusal to support for President a man nominated with Murphy's support.

"Does not the law make a difference," replied Mr. Bryan, "between the lawyer who defends a criminal after the crime has been committed, and the man who assists in the commission of a crime."

Mr. Bryan then announced his vote for Woodrow Wilson and retired to his seat in the Nebraska delegation, and continued to cast his vote for Wilson throughout the night.

Every strategy known in political generalship was tried to stampede the convention for the different candidates. No convention in the history of this coutry has seen such wild demonstrations as have been witnessed in this one at Baltimore.

While Tuesday's dramatic incident arising over the selection of a temporary chairman was the cause of almost unprecedented turmoil, there was nothing even bordering on a demonstration. It was just plain fight—not enthusiasm.

Even the speech of Temporary Chairman Parker did not arouse the response so characteristic of Democratic conventions of the past, and the convention showed nothing but a fighting mood until after the incident of the Bryan resolution of Thursday evening and the beginning of the nominating speeches.

On Thursday night, when the nominating speeches were being made, at the close of that of Senator Reed naming Clark, the Speaker's beautiful daughter stepped onto a chair in the gallery, and with a big American flag wrapped around her, and another in each hand, led the cheering for her father. She was the only woman who figured conspicuously in the demonstrations.

Great as was the Clark demonstration, however, it did not compare in noise with that led by the Princeton boys when Judge Westcott named the New Jersey executive. For more than one and a half hours the din continued, the lusty youngsters seeming to glory in their ability to keep it up.

Of all of the demonstrations of Thursday night the most amusing was that started by a man in the press stand for Gov. Baldwin, when the name of the Connecticut executive was entered in the race for the nomination. Realizing that the fourteen delegates from Connecticut could not successfully compete with the stronger following of the other candidates the men in the press stand volunteered a noisy assistance which they continued for more than twenty minutes and which subsided only when the chair threatened to clear the press stand if the reporters did not stop. The many star writers of the press stand, men whose reputations for genius are world-wide, led the Baldwin demonstration, and introduced into it all the elements of a first class vaudeville show or a gridiron club dinner. It was the one really spontaneous and amusing demonstrations of the long week.

MARSE HENRY WATTERSON, who for years has supported tickets he disapproved, is not better suited with the latest that has been thrust upon him. He compares the sainted Wilson to the devil and the beatific Bryan to a rattlesnake, but says he will stand for the consequences, being unable as a journalist to take to the woods. Champ Clark, who was within sight of the promised land at one time, says that he lost "through the vile and malicious slanders of William J. Bryan of Nebraska. True the slanders were by inuendo and insinuation, but they were none the less deadily." If this be harmony, make the most of it.

THE KEENEST STRUGGLE IN FORTY-FOUR YEARS.

Not since 1868 has another Democratic National Convention required more than five ballots to nominate a candidate for President.

In 1908 Bryan was nominated on the first ballot. In 1904 Parker was nominated on the first ballot. In 1900 Bryan was nominated on the first ballot. In 1896 Bryan was nominated on the fifth ballot in the most turbulent convention the Democratic party had held since 1868.

In 1892 Cleveland was nominated on the first ballot, and he was named on the first ballot in 1888. In 1884, when he was first a candidate for President, the second ballot determined the nomination. In 1880 Hancock was named by the changes that took place after the second ballot had been taken and before the result was announced. In 1876 Tilden was named on the second ballot, and in 1872 Greely, who had been nominated by the Liberal Republicans, was indorsed on the first ballot.

In 1868 there were twenty-two ballots taken before a nomination was reached. On that ballot Ohio gave twenty-one votes to Horatio Seymour. Those were all the votes cast for him, but before the result could be announced the convention had stampeded to Seymour and he was nominated.

It is an interesting fact that the Baltimore Convention furnished the most protracted contest for a Presidential nomination that the Democratic party has had in forty-four years.

Socialists Name S. V. L. Young as Candidate For Congress.

The Socialists of the Sixth Maryland district at Hagerstown Thursday unanimously nominated Sylvester L. V. Young, of Hagerstown, for Congress. The nomination was suggested by W. A. Chabot, of Frostburg, and 17 local societies seconded the nomination.

The following campaign committee was appointed: Charles L. Miller, of Hagerstown; Charles W. Staub, of Cumberland; J. F. Gore, of Montgomery county; G. A. Heard, of Frederick county, and C. M. Pennington, of Garrett county.

The convention was called to order by Max Foth, of Hagerstown, who delivered the address of welcome. The delegates—40 in number, including several women—sang the Socialist song, "We're Going to Win."

The committee on resolutions was composed of B. W. Deffenbaugh, of Cumberland; H. C. Wright, of Brunswick, and J. E. Gore, of Burtonsville.

The convention adopted the state and National Socialist platform. Several resolutions were also adopted. One denounced a "powerful and laborhating" corporation of San Diego, California, and call upon the Governor of California and the national government to cause the persecution of the labor organizations there to cease. All Socialists everywhere were called upon to join the protest.

A triple Italian wedding at the little mining town of Henry, on the W. M. R., a few miles east of Thomas, on last Sunday drew together one of the largest crowds that was ever seen in the place. Two hundred and fifty invited guests, all natives of the "Sunny Clime," from the neighboring towns of Thomas and Douglass, packed the carrying capacity of No. 2 passenger train to its very utmost, and swelled the crowd away beyond all expectations of the happy brides and grooms. The crowd was orderly and good natured and on arrival marched to the respective homes of the smiling couples, extended their congratulations and later on participated in the festivities that marked this unique matrimonial venture on the wholesale plan. Macaroni fron spigheti, bologna from Bologne, cheeses from Cheeseit, birds from Fowldom, meats from Armourtown and various other good things to eat, served a la Italiienne, washed down by 106 kegs (848 gallons) of beer, gallons of Cumberland's finest liquors, not to mention reservoirs of the best Italian and Spanish wines dealt out with most generous hands, made this the greatest wedding feast of a foreign kind ever witnessed on the Upper Potomac.

Mr. Earl Wilburn, of Elk Garden, accompanied by his wife and daughter, spent the 4th and the week end, as guests of his brother-in law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Tewsing.

Mr. Michael Flynn, of this place, was the main speaker at the Democratic meeting held last week at the residence of Mr. Beamans, Upper Beryl, to ratify the action of the Democratic convention at Baltimore. Mike is organizing a marching club for the approaching campaign this fall, to take part in the local parades and is a most enthusiastic Wilson rooter.

Mrs. Viola Connelly, of Piedmont, who has been quite ill at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Morehead, of this place, with an attack of typhoid fever, is improving nicely and well on her way to recovery.

Rev. Halpenny, pastor of the M. E. church at this place, and son John, are attending the campmeeting at Mt. Lake Park.

Miss Clara Tibbets entertained quite crowd of her intimate friends at dinner on Sunday.

A son, six years of age, of Mr. and Mrs. William Shaffer, of Bond, was bitten by a copper head snake on last Saturday about noon. The wound was opened up and treated by the old fashioned remedy, turpentine, and at last report the boy was doing nicely.

Postmaster Stump of the Bloomington office, was a visitor up the the W. M. R. R. on Monday.

Mr. Elias Carter, one of our old citizens, is confined to his bed on account of an attack of bronchial asthma

Mr. Carroll Pattison, a well known young business man of this place, is in Baltimore on business connected with the coal interests of himself and father.

Mrs. James Spence, of this place, who has been a patient in the Hoffman hospital, for surgical treatment, returned to her home on Tuesday very much improved in health.

Mrs. Julia Borskiski, a widow residing at Upper Beryl, and Mr. John Gaski, both Polish, the latter a descendent of the once royal family of Poland, were married at St. Peter's Catholic church, Westernport, at noon on Sunday last. Two days prior to the time set for the ceremony an open house was maintained by the bride at her home and every one, relatives, friends and acquaintances were received in a most hospitable manner and most liberally wined and dined. The festivities continued for a week before the guests took their leave.

FRIENDSVILLE.

The Great Fourth is past and gone and we are taking a much need rest.

The hottest days of summer are here, and it takes one's time to keep cool.

Dr. Weiner preached in the M. E. Church Sunday night to a crowded house.

Geo. Cover lost a valuable cow last week, it being killed on the railroad.

Mrs. Jessie Frazee and daughter returned from a visit to Pennsylvania Saturday last.

Dr. W. C. Nedrow leaves for Oakland with his wife tomorrow to attend the Allegheny and Garrett Medical Association that will hold its session in Oakland on Wednesday commencing at 2 p. m. He takes along with him in the automobile a young patient.

Noah Bittinger is very ill with pneumonia. He is being treated by Dr. Nedrow.

While cooking some eggs on the 4th, Henry Fike seriously burned his hand and arm.

Mrs. Mary Taylor starts for a visit to Pennsylvania on Tuesday.

Ward Friend took a flying visit to Connellsville on Friday returning on Saturday.

The picnic given on the Fourth of July was a grand success. People came pouring into town from early in the morning until the sidewalks were packed and the streets crowded by the time the parade started. The line of march was from Garey's road, across the bridge up Maple st. to 3rd ave., down 3rd ave. to Walnut st., to Morris ave., to Maple st., to 1st ave., up 1st ave. to Chestnut st., to the picnic grounds. This was one of the events of the year. The Friendsville Military Band headed the parade, discoursing the very latest marches while Columbia and The Red, White and Blue were not forgotten. A line of automobiles that wound from street to street nearly the length of the line of march was one of the features. The prize for the best decorated automobile was given to C. C. Frederick, and the most comical to F. G. Fox. All kind of amusements were indulged in. In the afternoon the band gave a delightful concert, which was listened to by the vast throng present.

The cornet solo by C. C. Frederick, "The Charmer," was something one does not often get the privilege of hearing. Mr. Frederick is a soloist of rare skill and the band is proud in having him enrolled as one of their members.

The speakers in the afternoon were Rev. Dr. Maynard, Rev. Newrich and F. G. Fox. All were listened to with delight and we feel that if we had sent thousands of miles for eloquent speakers they could not have done better.

The rain in the evening caused the adjourning to the opera house which was crowded. A very fine display of fire works concluded the day's festivities.

GRANTSVILLE

On Thursday and Friday of last week this section was visited by two very severe rain storms. Corn and potatoes fields were practically destroyed by the hail. The streams were swollen by rain and quite a few small bridges were washed from their original places.

Misses Pearl Otto and Dorothy Younkin spent Thursday at the home of the former's parents.

Mr. Joe Schell, who is employed on Keyser's Ridge, spent a few days of last week with Mr. P. C. Boucher.

On Thursday evening when Mr. Milton B. Miller was returning from the Accident picnic his buggy was slightly damaged by Clarence Ringer running into it with with his automobile. Mr. Miller was driving a spirited horse and when the auto bumped into the buggy the horse jumped and broke the single tree. Mr. Miller fixed the broken part temporarily and returned home without further accident.

Mr. Uriah M. Stanton was a buisness visitor to Frostburg last Saturday.

Mr. Michael Nathan has again taken charge of the postoffice, and the assistants, Misses Bess and Beulah Engle, have returned home.

Mr. Urius D. Yoder died Sunday of cancer of the stomach. The funeral occurred Tuesday morning from the Amish church.

SWANTON.

The Fourth is past and the jug broken.

If we have county and district officers of the Sunday schools we would like to know who they are. Why can't we have district conventions? If everything is going on well please tell it through the county papers.

Rev. W. D. Herndon, presiding elder of Grafton district, U. B. church, preached to a large congregation at Swanton July 5th.

Miss Olive Jackson is suffering with a sore face.

Mrs. Bess Shank was at Blaine shopping one day last week.

Mrs. V. Fairall is going to Cumberland to attend the the circus there July 10th.

The parsonage of Rev. S. J. Harris was burglarized July 4th, relieving him of $16.79.

The young folks are arranging to go to Walnut Bottom Sunday, July 21st, to a basket dinner. A good time is anticipated.

Church Improvements.

Excepting Sunday school next Sunday morning there will be no services at St. Paul's M. E. church until Sunday, July 21st, on account of the improvements now being made at the church.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The campmeeting started Thursday evening in charge of Bishop Berry, assisted by Dr. Dunham, Rev. Hyde and others, but on account of the gate fees the attendance was smaller than former years. On Tuesday morning the gates were thrown open and at the morning service Rev. Hyde raised $375 in a few minutes from an audience of less than two hundred. The audiences are increasing from day to day and by Sunday there will be the old time crowd of thousands from the surrounding country. Among the especially strong sermons we note those of Bishop Berry Sunday morning and Dr. A. B. Riker Tuesday morning. Rev. and Mrs. Joseph H. Smith arrived Monday evening and may remain to the end. Bishop Berry will preach Thursday evening and Sunday morning.

Dr. and Mrs. J. Sumner Stone and Rev. and Mrs. S. W. Davis are here.

Dr. and Mrs. George M. Brodhead and Dr. T. W. McKinney, of Philadelphia, are attending the campmeeting and are guests at Haydenhurst.

Tho Oakland District Convention will be held here Friday and Saturday, July 12th and 13th.

Mr. E. E. Kesner's store in the postoffice building was entered Monday night by taking out a light of glass and reaching in, unlocking and raising the window. The loss was a few pennies and possibly a small quantity of tobacco, cigars and candy. Mr. Kesner has a clue that may lead to the arrest of the thief.

Mr. W. A. Mallett and family are here, having come from their home in Pittsburg in an auto. The refreshment stand is now open and a good stock on hand.

The annual meeting of the Community of Mountain Lake Park, for the election of officers and the transaction of the usual municipal business, will be held in Assembly Hall next Wednesday, July 17th.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Williams, of Clarksburg, arrived Tuesday evening and are in their cottage with their daughters who preceded them a few days.

Miss Dottie Doman is helping in H. B. Harvey's store during the busy season.

Mr. J. S. Sterling has a position in Leighton & Harvey's store.

Mr. Lee N. Hayden is engaged in H. E. Felty & Co.'s store.

Mr. A. E. Ely, of Oakland, is in the Park drug store.

Mr. G. W. Morris and family, of Ottaway, West Va., spent Sunday in the Park.

Dr. H. M. Kemp, of Bloomington, Md., was here a few hours yesterday evening.

Man's Duty Simple.

The whole duty of man is embraced in the two principles of abstinence and patience; temperance in prosperity, and patient courage in adversity.—Seneca.

THE LATE CAPT. JOHN M. JARBOE

A Brief Sketch of the Life of One of Oakland's Best Known Residents Whose Death Is Mourned.

The death of Captain John M. Jarboe, of Oakland, was noted in these columns last Thursday, dissolution having occurred Wednesday morning at six o'clock, after an illness extending over a peroid of several months much of which time he was confined to his room, going out occasionally when the weather permitted until about two months ago when his condition became such as to keep him in doors constantly.

Captain Jarboe's life was one of extreme activity from early manhood, until his closing days—as architect and builder, as soldier and as postmaster of Oakland, which position he occupied under both Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt.

As a Union Veteran Capt. Jarboe served throughout the Civil War with distinction. With the exception of that of postmaster in Oakland he never held political office, although the opportunity for him to do so presented itself upon a number of occasions. He was always an unswerving Republican.

Capt. Jarboe was born at Romney, West Va., on October 20, 1836. At the age of eighteen he left his native town and with his father's family moved to Piedmont, W. Va., where he remained until 1859 when he came to Oakland and engaged in building and architecture, having erected during his long years of residence here many of the substantial buildings in Oakland and a majority of those in Mountain Lake Park. He left Oakland in July, 1861, and was connected with the Federal Army as a guide or scout until the following April when he enlisted in Company I, Tenth West Virginia Infantry. During the year 1862 and part of 1863 his company and reg. operated in the mountains of West Virginia and Western Maryland. The following year the scene of operations was in the Valley of Virginia, under the command of Gen. Sheridan. In the fall of 1864 his command was ordered and attached itself to the Army of the James and went into winter quarters at Chapin's Farm, six miles below the city of Richmond. Late in March, 1865, the Army crossed the James River and engaged the enemy at Hatcher's Run, an outpost of Richmond.

Capt. Jarboe commanded a company of veterans, men who served one term of three years and re-enlisted for the second, with these he took part in and witnessed the route of the Confederate army at Petersburg and Richmond, from there on to Appomattox where he also witnessed the closing scene of what he thinks a terrible struggle, a war that many have contended, was predestined and could not be avoided yet it seemed to him unatural. "It was at Appomattox," the Captain said, "that I was permitted to gaze for the first time upon the superb form of the great Confederate Chieftain General Robert E. Lee, also other distinguished officers of the Confederate army, among them Gen. Gordon. It was there that the Federal soldiers sat along the edge of the road cheering the Confederates as they started, horse and foot on their homeward march. The Confederates, not to be outdone in politeness made the plains of Appamattox ring with cheer after cheer for that magnanimous, that silent man, Gen. U. S. Grant. There I met and clasped hands with some of my old schoolmates who were soldiers in the Confederate army."

Captain Jarboe was struck with three bullets, one of which rendered him unfit for army service for three months. This was an ugly wound in the right shoulder. In May, 1865, at the city of Richmond he was mustered out of the service and returned to Oakland.

On September 5, 1865, Capt. Jarboe married Miss Virginia Baker, of Oakland, and as a result of this union five children were born, they being Mrs. Charles F. White, of Lonaconing; Mrs. Belle Duvall, Misses Sarah and Nellie and Mr. Max Jarboe, of Oakland. These besides Mrs. Jarboe survive the husband and father.

Capt. Jarboe's paternal grandfather, Ignatius Jarboe, was a soldier in the War of 1812.

For more than twenty years Capt. Jarboe was the Worshipful Master of Oakland Lodge No. 192, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons. He presided with all the dignity befitting his high office and had the distinction of being the first man to be made a Mason in what now constitutes Garrett county. As a member of the Craft he was esteemed for his high ideals of what constitutes Masonry; for his devotion to the Art and the love and affection he bestowed upon his fellow-Masons.

After a short service at his late home on Liberty street Friday afternoon, conducted by the Rev. Dr. A. B. Riker, the interment of Capt. Jarboe's remains took place in the Oakland cemetery where the services were conducted by the Lodge of which he was so many years the brain and sinew.

May his rest be sweet.

A petition has been filed in the Circuit Court for Garrett county by a number of the creditors of the firm of Charles M. Wilson & Bro., both of whom recently died, praying that the real estate owned by them individually and personally be sold to satisfy the creditors named in the bill of particulars. Messrs. Fred. A. Thayer and Renninger & Offutt, representing a number of the creditors, filed the petition, a copy of which is printed in this paper today.

Mrs. Parley DeBerry and Mrs. Chas. A. Miller, of Terra Alta, performed a feat in pedestrianism Tuesday that required more energy than possessed by the ordidary member of the gentler sex. These two ladies started from their town at eleven o'clock, walked the entire distance to Oakland, arriving here about two the same afternoon. With the mercury hovering around the "early eighties," the "hike" was withal an enjoyable one. They returned to their homes on train No. 5 the same afternoon.

THE AUTOMOBILE ORDINANCE

For the Information of Motorists The Law is Published.

For the information of the public generally and those owning and operating automobiles and other motor vehicles particularly, the law governing the speed at which the same may be driven within the corporate limits of Oakland, is herewith published:

AN ORDINANCE

Entitled an ordinance regulating the speed of automobilhs and other vehicles within the corporate limits of the town of Oakland, Maryland.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted and ordained by the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland, That the Ordinance heretofore passed and known as an Ordinance regulating the speed of automobiles and other motor vehicles within the corporate limits of the town of Oakland, Md., be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

Sec. 2. Be it enacted by the Mayor and Town Council of Oakland, That it shall be unlawful for the owners of automobiles and other motor vehicles, and every other person driving the same, upon the streets, lanes and alleys within the corporate limits of the town of Oakland to exceed a rate of speed greater than 12 miles per hour; provided however, that nothing contained in this section shall permit any person to drive an automobile or other motor vehicle at any speed greater than is reasonable having regard to the traffic and the use of the streets, lanes and alleys or so as to endanger the life or limb, or to injure the property of any person.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted and ordained, That all persons violating the foregoing section of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than one dollar nor more than twenty-five dollars, or be committed to the county jail or town lock-up for a period not exceeding thirty days or both.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted and ordained, That this Ordinace shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Passed Sept. 5, 1910.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett, to view the lands through which the Swallow Falls county road is to be re-located, said relocation be a portion of the Swallow Falls road leading from the Sang run road to the Cranesville road a distance of about ¾ miles through the lands of William H. Montgomery and Henry Krug and examine whether the said proposed road should be re-located will meet on the 10th day of August, 1912, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said re-location of said Swallow Falls road, and if so, to locate the same and perform their duty in the premises.

A Will and a Way

When Frank Sheldon left the law school he settled in his old home town. Fairfield was a small place, not far from a large city. Sheldon figured it out that he could live better on a certain income in Fairfield than on a doubtful prosperity in a large city. There was something else. Edith Sawyer lived in Fairfield.

But the Hon. John Sawyer, railroad magnate, could not appreciate an attachment between his daughter and a poor, young lawyer. So the poor, young lawyer studied and struggled along.

He had been struck by a peculiar phase of a great case that was being tried at a nearby city. The law journal which printed his article on the subject commented on his views rather enthusiastically.

Urged by his confidence that he had done a worthy thing, he set off for the Sawyer home, determined to interview Mr. Sawyer. He was very civilly received.

"Quite an interesting article of yours," said the millionaire. "I thank you for the copy."

Frank bowed, then plunged. "Mr. Sawyer, you must have seen that I love your daughter, but I've said nothing until I felt assured of your consent."

"Oh, of course," interrupted Mr. Sawyer. "How much did you get for that article?"

"A few extra copies," said Frank, blushing.

"About what I thought," said Mr. Sawyer. "Now, Sheldon, I like you, but liking doesn't count when a life contract is involved. You've given all your time and trouble for nothing. The only things that count are results." He paused, then added, "I don't think I need say any more."

"I thank you for your candor," said Frank, rising. "Good-night." He rushed out of the house, and down the street almost ran into a stout, elderly gentleman who was toiling up the hill.

"Phew!" said the man. "Why don't you keep carriages at the station? Please tell me where I can find John Sawyer's house?"

"Because I don't keep a livery stable," growled Frank. "The Sawyers' house is the large one on the hill."

The stout man pulled the Sawyer doorbell and said, "Tell Mr. Sawyer that John Hunter wants to see him."

Mr. Sawyer almost ran downstairs. "Why, this is an honor. What brought you here?"

"You've got a young lawyer in this village named Frank Sheldon. Know him?"

"Yes, he was here a few minutes ago. You probably met him." Mr. Hunter chuckled. "Well, well! That's one on me. Asked him why he didn't keep a carriage at the station, and he snapped back that he didn't keep a livery stable. He's the man I want."

"What's it all about?" asked Mr. Sawyer.

"It's about that article the young man wrote. He has struck the right lead on that case of ours. Is he all right, honest, reliable?"

"I think he is," said Mr. Sawyer, slowly.

"Then send a note to him at once, asking him to come."

After the note was sent, Mr. Hunter explained that the discovery of the young man, if known at the beginning, might have saved a hundred thousand dollars in litigation; that now he had it in his power to upset their plans.

Edith Sawyer had heard the conversation. She was standing on the step watching the moonlight when Sheldon arrived. She put her fingers to his lips. She told him of the conversation, and, as he was leaving her, whispered, "If you don't bid high for yourself, you needn't bid for me."

There was a deal of hemming and hawing in the ensuing conversation. Frank saw that they were veering around to an offer. Finally, the proposition came.

Frank smiled. "I suppose you are jesting, Mr. Hunter?"

"Why, certainly not; it is a large offer!"—

"Of course," said Sheldon, calmly. "In order to shorten this interview, I will name my own terms—a fee of $20,000 and an equal share in the contingent fund."

"It is preposterous," cried both together.

"Gentlemen, I bid you good-evening," said Sheldon, rising and walking to the door.

"Hold on there," said Mr. Hunter.

"I shall certainly hold on the terms given," Frank said. "Others will pay more."

Mr. Hunter looked at Mr. Sawyer, who nodded his head. "Well," he said, "give us a few minutes to think it over."

Frank found Edith in the drawing-room. He told her of the conversation. "Did I bid high enough?" he asked. A glance at her eyes was enough. At the end of ten minutes a knock came at the door. Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Hunter appeared in the doorway. Mr. Hunter turned to Frank and said: "Mr. Sheldon, we accept your terms."

Six months after he paid another visit to Mr. Sawyer. He found that gentleman in the library.

"Mr. Sawyer, I—" Frank began.

"Sheldon, my boy," said Mr. Sawyer, "Edith is in the drawing-room. Go to her."

PLANTING THE GARDEN EARLY

Where Season Is Late and Rainy Not Advisable to Get Seeds Into Ground Too Soon.

It is not always advantageous to plant the garden as early as possible. Under certain conditions nature hastens the growth of late planted seeds so that the difference in time of their ripening will not accord with the difference in plantings. This is particularly the case when the season is late and rainy.

Plant for a succession of the different vegetables. A garden in which most of the planting is done at about the same time will not give as good results as where a period of time elapses between the second, third or fourth plantings of the same vegetables. Particularly is this true of peas, says the Farm and Home. Where a number of different varieties were tried the best results were obtained from one or two varieties planted in succession.

In sweet corn, however, this was not so apparent. It was found best to rely on several varieties as well as successive plantings. If the season was backward or the plantings made unusually early, sweet corn seemed to be very slow in growth. On the other hand, the corn planted later would grow very fast under favorable conditions and almost catch up with the first plantings. To overcome this difficulty it was found advisable to rely on the plantings of different varieties.

PAYS TO RAISE GOOD HORSES

Grade Stallions Cheaper to Use, But Pure Bred Colts Sold for Twice as Much Money.

Fifty-five dollars is good interest for the use of $7 for a year. And when the feed of a colt for another year is saved the proposition is all the more attractive.

A stock farmer living in the southeast part of the state has been rearing a number of colts every year, using the services of a grade stallion.

This horseman wasn't very enthusiastic about paying a larger fee for the service of a pure-bred stallion. He had been using grade and inferior sires with a fair degree of success. He saw no reason for changing.

In the season of 1910 he decided to try a good pure-bred stallion just once, to see if it was worth the difference in the service fees.

The second week in this month this stockman held a sale. The three-year-old colts, sired by a grade stallion, sold at an average of $76. The two-year-old colts, the progeny of another grade sire, brought an average of $46. The weaning colts, sired by a pure-bred stallion, sold at an average of $101.

The service fee of the pure-bred stallion was $15, that of the grade $8, a difference of $7. The feed eaten by the older colts was saved, and $55 more was received for the weanlings than the two-year-olds, and $25 more than the three-year-olds.

Raising the Colts Properly.

Most of the colts on the farm get a good start the first six months of their lives from the fact that they are allowed to suckle the dams during that time. Early fall provides them with good pasture and possibly they have been receiving some oats or shared part of the feed of the mare.

Such treatment puts them in good shape for the winter, but liberal feeding must be kept up if a strong, well-developed and matured horse is expected. The colt's system required a considerable amount of bone and muscle building material, and this can be had by feeding nitrogenous feeds, such as oats, a little clover hay.

The feeding of corn, so often practiced, is not desirable for the growing colt, but had better be confined to the matured horses. Access to the straw pile will not hurt a growing colt, but it should not be compelled to rely on the straw pile for a livelihood.

Oil for Incubator Lamps.

Incubator manufacturers always recommend purchasing the best kind of oil to use in the incubator lamps, and this is good advice. But sometimes the oil will smoke. A remedy for this is to take a cupful of fine salt and put into each quart of oil. Let it settle for a few days, then pour into the lamp and put in a small piece of gum camphor, letting it remain there. Of course the wick must be properly trimmed, rounded at each side, otherwise the lamp will smoke, no matter what kind of oil you have.

Gentleness With Stock.

The sheep know their master's voice—there is no doubt about that; but it is more important to know what they do when they hear it—whether they flee in fear or come with expectancy.

Sheep, like other animals, are creatures of habit and should always be handled by the same attendant, who should move among them gently and give notice of his approach by speaking to the flock.

Moving Sheep About.

It is the custom in Wyoming for owners of land who rent their fields in the winter to sheepmen, to stipulate in the agreement that the sheep are not to be bedded in one place more than two or three nights, so as to spread the manure.

Superfluous Cockerels.

One vigorous male to each ten hens is sufficient for fertility and any excess is waste of feed and labor. The male can be dispensed with entirely in small flocks that are kept for eggs alone.

FATTENING VALUE OF PEAS

For Use With Cattle Crop Probably Is Unexcelled—Make Good Food for Horses at Work.

(By PROF. THOMAS N. SHAW.)

There is no kind of live stock on the farm to which peas cannot be fed with positive advantage when they are to be had at prices not too high. They are not commonly fed to horses, since they can seldom be spared for such a use, but they make a good food for horses at work, and for colts during the period of development, if given as a part of the grain food.

As a food for fattening cattle, peas are probably unexcelled. Much of the success which Canadian feeders have achieved in preparing cattle for the block has risen from the free use of peas in the diet.

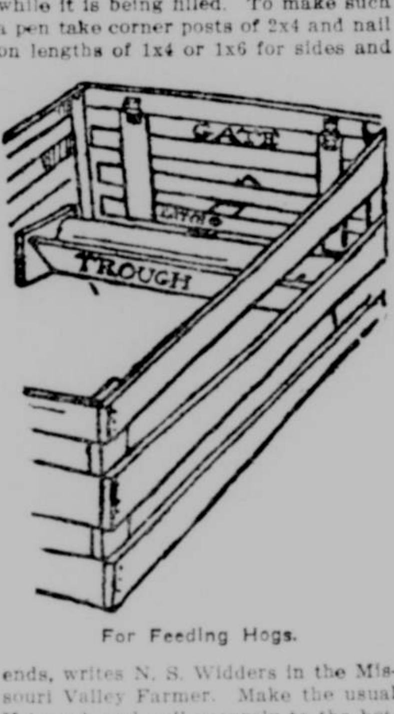
During the first part of the finishing period they will be found peculiarly helpful in making beef, owing to their relative richness in protein, but they are also a satisfactory food at any stage of the fattening process. During the first half of the finishing period peas will be found superior to corn, but toward the close of the same, corn could probably be fed with greater relative advantage.

Peas with oats or bran make an excellent grain food for cattle that are being fattened. Speaking in a general way, peas should form about one-third, by weight, of the meal fed, but, as every feeder knows, the relative proportions of meal used should vary somewhat as the season of fattening progresses.

MAKES SLOPPING HOGS EASY

Pen so Arranged That Animals Cannot Get at Trough While It Is Being Filled or Cleaned.

I have a hog pen with trough so located that the hogs cannot get at it while it is being filled. To make such a pen take corner posts of 2x4 and nail on lengths of 1x4 or 1x6 for sides and ends, writes N. S. Widders in the Missouri Valley Farmer. Make the usual V trough and nail securely to the bottom board at one end of pen. Instead of boarding up the pen tight at the trough end leave an open space the length of trough, with a board across top and bottom, then make a gate and hinge to the top board on the inside. Take a short length of stout wood for a latch and bolt to the second board of gate, with one bolt. When you want to fill the trough turn the latch until it misses the trough, push the gate in till latch is beyond trough, then turn latch to upright position again. The hogs cannot bother you while you are cleaning the trough or pouring in the feed.



For Feeding Hogs.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

A hog simply will not be responsible for poor fences.

There is no better place to raise pigs than in a good pasture.

Even the hogs like a variety of feed and will do better if they can get it.

There is no animal that responds so quickly to good feed and treatment as the pig.

How much per bushel can be made from wheat by feeding to hogs? In what way should it be fed?

Almost every wrong act of the horse is caused by fear, excitement or mismanagement, said a great horseman.

The individuality of each horse should be studied, and the feeds supplied to meet individual requirements.

Feed roughage to the stock before giving them grain, as it invigorates and excites the digestive apparatus to action.

The pure-bred sire and a dam of the same type of as good blood as it is possible to get will usually bring a desirable colt.

Be sure to have some disinfectant to use on the young colt's navel when he arrives. A half minute at this time may save the colt later.

In eight years out of ten the hog feeder will make money, in one year he will lose and in one break even. This is the year of the even break.

Twenty acres of corn put into a silo is said to be worth more than 30 acres put in the crib. This is quite an item, especially when feed is so high.

Begin to break the colt early if you would have an easy time with the work and a well-broken horse. A two-year-old is easier to break than a four-year-old.

When pure-bred swine are kept for breeding purposes they should be given every opportunity for bone and muscle development, rather than the production of fat.

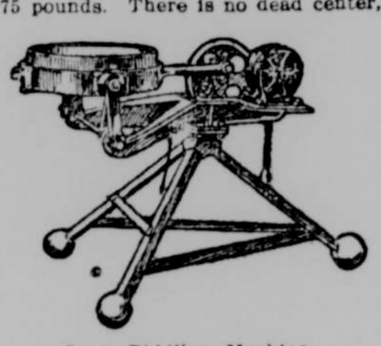
The ELECTRICAL WORLD

SAND SCREENED BY A MOTOR

Labor-Saving Machine Will Do as Much Work in One Hour as Two Men Can in Ten.

The tedious method of riddling sand by hand has been superseded by the electrical method at the foundry of a Cleveland manufacturing concern.

The electric riddle oscillator is a small, compact machine weighing but 175 pounds. There is no dead center, so the motor is not subjected to shocks nor overload and will run from the ordinary lamp socket.



Sand Riddling Machine.

The machine will riddle as much sand in an hour as two men will in ten hours. It accommodates the ordinary 18-inch foundry riddle and when in motion it is interesting to watch it, as it operates with the same graceful and effective motion of the molder riddling sand by hand, but with the steady and untiring energy of a half horse-power motor.

ALARM FOR THE JEWEL BOX

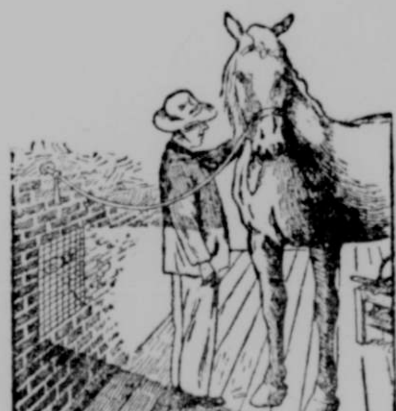
Pendulum, Hanging Perpendicular, Closes Electric Circuit, Giving Warning to Owner.

A jewel box provided with an electric alarm has recently been patented and has already been placed on the market in Paris. In the bottom of the box is a dry battery, a magnet, and a system of levers, the whole forming a device not unlike a telegraph instrument in appearance. In the center of the bottom of the box is a small opening in which a pendulum is suspended. As long as the box is stationary this pendulum hangs perpendicular, and does not close the electric circuit, but the slightest movement of the box causes it to close the circuit and sound the alarm. Once the pendulum drops down the alarm cannot be silenced except by opening the lid of the box and shifting a lever.

LIGHT FOR THE BLACKSMITH

Accompanying Illustration Shows How an Enterprising Man Provides Illumination for Shop.

The accompanying illustration shows how an enterprising blacksmith provides illumination in his shop so that the light will fall where most needed, says the Popular Electricity. Recesses in the wall contain each an incandescent lamp. The wires for these are run in conduit laid in the wall. It was necessary to place a wire netting over the wall recess to keep the horses from biting and breaking the lamps.



Arrangement of Light.

Determine Longitude.

Several determinations of longitude have of late been made by means of wireless messages, but the most ambitious attempt of this nature has just taken place between Paris and Tunis wireless signals connecting two clocks, one at the Eiffel Tower and the other at Bizerta, Tunis, the comparison of which decided the longitude. The signals traveled the whole distance in .007 second, which works out at nearly 200,000 miles a second.

New Task for Electricity.

Every day electricity is set some new task. Now it is asked to magnetize a great steel disk to be used in conveying a cargo of nails from the bottom of the Mississippi; or it must supply power to dredge the Alaskan sands for gold, or to drive the huge mechanical shovels to dig a new and better canal across the Empire state.

Wireless Intelligence Tower.

An agreement has been reached by the Italian government and one of the largest Italian wireless companies for the erection of a large and powerful station in the suburbs of the city of Rome for the transmission of intelligence. It will have six towers, two of them being 240 feet high.

GREAT IS WIRELESS SYSTEM

Conversation Successfully Carried on Between San Francisco and Island of Hokushu, Japan.

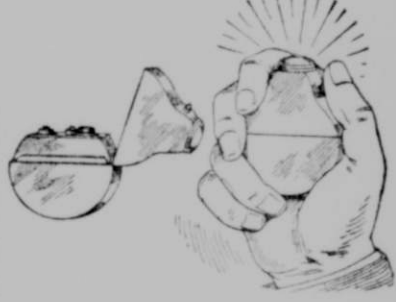
Marconi rejoiced when, in 1897, he succeeded in sending a wireless message a distance of three miles. By 1907 he had established regular wireless communication across the Atlantic. Since then vessels have been "picked up" at sea from shore stations at distances of from 2,000 to 4,000 miles. In November last Marconi sent a message from the Coltano station, in Italy, to the Glace Bay station, in Nova Scotia, 4,000 miles. The San Francisco operator, a month earlier, conversed for a period of 15 minutes with the Japanese station on the island of Hokushu, a distance of 6,000 miles.

Wireless communication, it is expected, will be opened up between Italy and Argentina, says the American Review, with the completion of the new station at Buenos Aires. The air-line distance between these stations will be 7,000 miles. The installation of wireless apparatus on ships is being gradually extended. Until recently few vessels outside of warships and steamers of the liner class have been so equipped. Now various countries are, by legislation, compelling many smaller passenger-carrying craft to install such apparatus. Great Britain is reported to be planning the establishment of a chain of wireless stations to encircle the globe. There is to be a subsidized system under the control of the postoffice department. Such a chain of stations would give England wireless connections with her colonial possessions in various parts of the world, making her independent of cables, which are liable to be cut in time of war.—Exchange.

SMALL BATTERY RUNS LAMP

Vest Pocket Arrangement Has Just Been Placed on Market in France—Actuates Toys.

What the inventor claims is the smallest practical storage battery in the world has just been placed on the market in France in connection with a vest-pocket electric light. The battery which actuates the light weights 1⅝ ounces, is but two-thirds of an inch thick, two inches high and 2½ inches wide, and has current sufficient to provide light for six hours continuously and for a much longer time, if used intermittently, says the Popular Mechanics. The battery and light are placed in a receptacle that is not much larger than an ordinary watch and can be carried in the vest pocket. The battery can be used to actuate small mechanical toys as well as to light the pocket flashlamp.



Vest Pocket Lamp.

ELECTRICAL NOTES

Over 50 lightships are stationed around the English shores.

Forty thousand wireless telegrams reached the coast of Great Britain last year.

Ball bearings for every movable part feature a new electric automobile.

Weather reports are sent from Gibraltar to London daily by wireless telegraphy.

Through telephone service between New York and Los Angeles is promised by November.

London has 200,000 telephones and the daily number of calls averages one and a quarter million.

An electrically driven machine that weighs less than 50 pounds has been invented to scrub floors.

Austria-Hungary has the least telephone service, in proportion to population, of any European country.

Electric lighting has been vastly improved. New lamps have been produced and old processes improved.

More than 11,000 of the 50,000 passenger cars in use on the railroads of the United States are now electrically lighted.

The government of New Zealand is replacing its wooden telegraph poles and letter box posts with reinforced concrete ones.

The electric zone of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad is to be extended, indicating that its operation has been successful.

No task is too little or too large for electricity and no man can truthfully say what it will yet perform when we have learned it better.

Wireless telegraphy has been developed until messages are being received between San Francisco and Japan, or across the Pacific ocean.

A bill has been introduced in the New York legislature to provide for co-operation between New York and Ontario in the matter of illuminating Niagara Falls.

Acetylene automobile headlights have been provided with an attachment with which the gas may be lighted by short circuiting the sparking system with a switch from the driver's seat.

GOV. MARSHALL VICE-PRESIDENT

Marshall Gets Nomination on the Second Ballot.

AN ARMY OF CANDIDATES

THE BALLOTS FOR VICE-PRESIDENT.

First ballot for Vice-President taken at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning:

MARSHALL	378
BURKE	307 2-3
HURST	77
PRESTON	51
CHAMBERLAIN	157
McCOMBS	18
SULZER	3
WADE	25
OSBORN	8

The second and final ballot stood:

MARSHALL	645 1-2
BURKE	387 1-4
CHAMBERLAIN	12 1-2

Marshall Nominated After Two Ballots.

The Democratic National Convention nominated Gov. Thomas R. Marshall, of Indiana, for the Vice-Presidency, adopted the most progressive platform in the history of the party and then adjourned just before 2 o'clock A. M., after the most remarkable series of sessions in recent political history.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL.

The balloting for the Vice-Presidency continued through two roll calls. Then the Indianan was selected by acclamation. Governor Burke, of North Dakota, had been a promising candidate for two hours, but his strength failed him in spite of the support of William J. Bryan.

ISSUES SET FORTH IN BALTIMORE PLATFORM.

Immediate downward revision of the tariff, putting on the free list trust-controlled products and articles sold more cheaply abroad.

Enforcement of criminal as well as civil feature of Anti-Trust law and enactment of laws to "make it impossible for private monopolies to exist."

No central bank, but currency reform in the interest of the people instead of the financiers.

Election of Senators by popular vote and Presidential primaries in every State.

Valuations of railroads, telegraph and telephone lines and express companies, to make Government regulation efficient.

Publicity in campaign expenditures, including nomination contests.

Prohibition of holding companies and "stock watering."

No infringement by Federal Government on the rights of the States.

YEAR IN JAIL FOR McFARLAND.

Minister Guilty Of Causing Death Of His Secretary.

Pittsburg.—Rev. Dr. T. D. McFarland, a prominent educator, who was found guilty of causing the death of his Secretary, Elsie Dodds Coe, by an operation, was sentenced to serve one year in jail and fined 6 1-4 cents with costs. In submitting its verdict the jury recommended McFarland to the extreme mercy of the court, which passed the minimum penalty in both, the old common law of the State requiring that a fine must be more than 5 cents.

AUTOS KILLED TWENTY-SIX.

Vehicle Accidents On the Increase In New York.

New York.—Fifty persons were killed and 275 seriously injured in June by vehicles in the streets of New York city. Automobiles killed 26 and injured 153; street cars killed 10 and injured 99, and wagons caused the death of 14 and the injury of 23. In June, 1911, automobiles caused the death of 12 persons; trolleys killed 7 and wagons 14.

TRINITY'S ONLY BIBLE PROP A FORGERY.

Interpolated Parts Expunged In Revised Version Bible.

Pastor Russell, In Remarkable Discourse, Points Out That After All, the Spurious Words Really Make Nonsense—Directs Attention to the Scriptures.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Syracuse, N. Y., —In one of Pastor Russell's discourses here today he spoke from this text: "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in Him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by Him."—I Corinthians viii, 6.

Pastor Russell declared that for centuries Christians have been overlooking the real doctrine of the Trinity, set forth in the Bible, and have been perplexing their minds in an endeavor to believe and understand the mysterious theory of the creeds on the subject, which so persistently ignores the laws of mathematics, by declaring that three ones are one; or at times varying the declaration and asserting that one is three.

Any one questioning this fabulous statement, even to the extent of asking an explanation, was branded a heretic and assured that the matter is a mystery which cannot be understood, but that if denied the penalty would be eternal torture; and in numerous instances zealous persons had anticipated the torture by burning the inquirer at the stake, as, for instance, was done by our good brother John Calvin to Servetus.

Doctrine of Trinity Traced.

There is no unreasonable mystery connected with the doctrine of the Trinity as presented in the Bible, said Pastor Russell. On the contrary, it is very simple, very reasonable, and very honoring to God the Father, Jesus the Son, and to the Holy Spirit.

The Pastor traced the doctrine of the Trinity, as presented in the creeds, to its source. It was not the teachings of Jesus and the inspired Apostles, and surely not the belief of the Israelites, and those who for more than four thousand years had been God's people before Jesus' day. After the death of the Apostles, the Bishops erroneously claimed to be their successors vested with Apostolic authority, and these formulated the creeds with their various inconsistencies and Bible contradictions.

The Trinity of the creeds was introduced to offset the agnostic influences of the Greeks, who became interested in Christianity as a philosophy, but who denied its teachings respecting the prehuman existence of Jesus, the necessity for His death as a sin-atonement, and the doctrine of the resurrection.

In proportion as the Grecians denied many Christians would combat their theory, and they advanced claim after claim until they reached the climax represented in our creeds of declaring that Jesus was His own Father and His own Son at the same time, that one God, equal in power and glory, prayed to the other part of Himself with strong cryings and tears to be delivered from the power of the tomb, was heard and was raised from the dead by the power of the other part of Himself.

Indeed, said the Pastor, some have carried the matter so far as to claim that when Jesus died the world was for three days without a God, that He then raised Himself from the dead. Others, considering this an unreasonable view, claimed that Jesus never really died, but merely pretended to die—that all of the experiences of the cross were a mere farce, a pantomime, performed for the effect upon the people—that merely the body of Jesus died after crying, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" and that the real Jesus, the real God, stepped out and watched the proceedings and connived at the deception, including the further deception respecting the resurrection from the dead.

All of this must be abominable to the Father. All Christians are perplexed with this man-made mystery. Now, as Bible students are waking and are studying the Bible, they find that its teachings are very different from that of the creeds, that it is very real, very logical, very beautiful, very harmonious.

Trinity Supported by Forgery.

Before we come to the examination of the Bible's testimony respecting the Trinity, I remind you that the word "trinity" does not occur in the English Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and that no passage approximating such teaching is found there, except one, and that one is an interpolation, as all scholars, including Trinitarians, admit. The Revised Version expunges the additions (evidently added about the seventh century), because they are not found in any manuscripts of earlier date.

The spurious passage is found in St. John's first Epistle, 5:7. Those sufficiently interested will read the passage in its proper form in the Revised Version, and we ask them to note that the additional words of the forgery really make nonsense. In that they tell us that the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit go about heaven amongst the angels proclaiming to them that Jesus is the Son of God—just as though the angels are not aware of the fact!

Forgery Made No Doubt by Some Zealot.

That forgery was evidently made by some zealot wishing to make it appear that the Apostle taught a Trinity similar to that of the creeds. Quite to the contrary. The Apostle taught that the Heavenly Father is Almighty, above all, supreme, and that our Lord Jesus Christ is His greatly honored and special Son, whom He sent into the world to save sinners, but who, previous to His becoming flesh, was a spirit being higher than the angels and next to the Father. The Bible teaches further that the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of truth, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ, the Spirit of wisdom, and the Spirit of a sound mind, which exercises the mind, the will, is in contradistinction to the spirit of error, the spirit of Satan, the spirit of wrath, etc.

The oneness between the Heavenly Father and the Son is not a oneness of person, but a oneness of harmony, of will, of purpose, of plan and of operation. And this is the testimony of Jesus Himself, who prayed for His Church that they might be one in harmony, in sympathy, in co-operation, even as He and the Father are one in these respects (John xvii, 21). Hence, as the Heavenly Father's Spirit or disposition is holy, truthful, righteous, a Divine energy, so also is the Spirit of Christ, who in all things seeks to do the Father's will.

Similar also must be the spirit of holiness in the true followers of Christ, because holiness is one, righteousness is one, truth is one, God is one; therefore, the Holy Spirit of God, of truth, of righteousness, must be of the same kind, whether emanating from the Heavenly Father Himself, or from the Lord Jesus Christ, or from the followers of Jesus: "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of His," because Christ has the spirit of the Father.

"Only Begotten"—"First and Last."

Before hearing the testimony of the Apostles we should hear the words of Jesus, of whom the Father said, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased:" "hear ye Him."—Matthew xvii, 5; Luke ix, 35. His testimony was:

"I came not to do Mine own will."—John vi, 38.

"Of Mine own self I can do nothing: as I hear I speak."—John v, 30.

"My Father is greater than I."—John xiv, 28.

"My Father is greater than all."—John x, 29.

"No man cometh unto the Father but by Me."—John xiv, 6.

"Whom the Father sanctified and sent into the world."—John x, 36.

He was called a blasphemer, not because He said He was the Father, nor because He said He was equal to the Father, but because He said, "I am the Son of God," thus attesting His Divine relationship.

On the cross He cried, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" And after His resurrection He said to Mary, "Touch Me not, for I have not yet ascended to My Father. * * * I ascend to My Father and to your Father, to My God and to your God."—John xx, 17.

Surely there is nothing in our Master's teaching which supports the view of the creeds respecting His being His own Father, but everything is in full accord with the teaching of the Scriptures, that He came from above, to do the Father's will, to redeem mankind, and that the Father raised Him from the dead, not to a fleshly nature, but to the divine nature, far above angels and every name that is named.

Jesus had the glorious distinction of being the very beginning of God's creation, as the Apostle declared (Colossians i, 15-17). He was "the First-Born of every creature;" "the First and the Last;" "the Alpha and Omega;" "the Beginning and the End" of Jehovah's creation, because subsequently the Father did all of His mighty works in, through and by the Son. In harmony is the testimony of our text, "All things are of the Father (He is the Fountain); all things are by the Son" (He is the Divine Agency).

"The Logos Was a God."

Most explicit is the presentation of John's Gospel (John i, 1-5). Some of the force is lost in our English translation, especially in the first verse, which should read, "In the beginning was the Logos, and the Logos was with the God, and the Logos was a god. By Him were all things made that were made, and without Him was not one thing made. * * * And the Logos was made flesh and dwelt amongst us, and we beheld His glory as the glory of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." How beautifully simple is this record!

The Heavenly Father, the Fountain of all life, never had a beginning, but "from everlasting to everlasting He is God." In due time His first creation took place, and this was the Logos, most honored of all His creatures. Thenceforth every creation was performed by the Logos, in the exercizing of the Divine power—"of the Father, by the Son."

The Scriptures assure us that after Jesus had finished His redemptive work the Father raised Him up by His own Divine power and rewarded Him with the highest position—glory, honor and immortality, next to Himself (Philippians ii, 8, 9; Revelation iii, 21; John v, 23). And oh, wondrous thought! The invitation of the Gospel Church to be the Bride of Christ includes a share in His glory, honor and immortality, His divine nature, at His right hand or place of favor, as He is at the right hand of the Father.

SCRAPS of HUMOR

Natural Curiosity.

He had been calling on her twice a week for six months, but had not proposed.

"Amy," he said, as they were taking a moonlight stroll one evening, "I—er—am going to ask you an important question."

"Oh, George," she exclaimed. "This is so sudden. Why, I—"

"What I want to ask is this," he interrupted. "What date have you and your mother decided upon for our wedding?"—Answers.

His Concern.

"I was awfully sorry, old chap," said Dubbleigh to Wilkerson, "when I heard that your chauffeur had taken your car and run off with your daughter."

"Thanks, old man," said Wilkerson, returning the other's sympathetic pressure of the hand. "It was a brand-new car, too," he added, his voice trembling with emotion.—Harper's Weekly.

Auto Suggestion.

"To show how unconsciously a man's business may be in his mind at all times, I took a financial operator to a fancier's to select a dog, and what kind of a dog do you think he asked for at once?"

"What kind?"

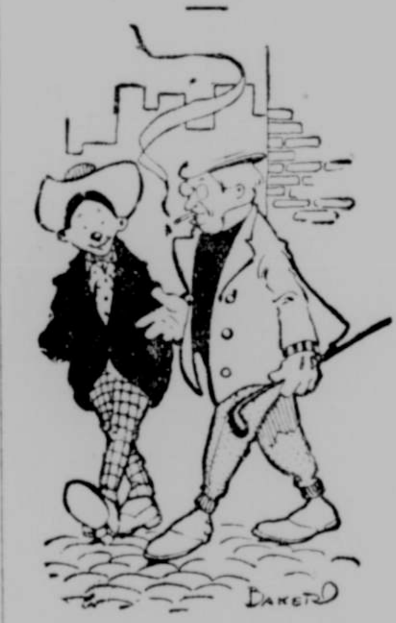
"A water dog. Said he had heard it was a good stock proposition."

Logic of the Situation.

"Don't you actors get disgusted with so many matinee girls at your performances?"

"Not a bit. It gives us professional encouragement. You see, when we hit a miss, we are sure we'll never miss a hit."

AND SHE GRABBED HIM.



"I'm surprised to hear of Gruet's engagement. I didn't think he was a marrying man."

"He wasn't until he met a marrying woman."

We Wonder.

We wonder, on
That other shore,
If people still
Ask, "What's the score?"

Her Limit.

"I went out to speak to your cook while she was making up her bread, and she was so glum and silent that I felt compelled to leave. I thought she was so sociable."

"So she is, as a rule, but unlike the majority, she does not care to have anyone around in her hour of knead."

Married Life Like an Opera.

Oldtimer—Is your married life one grand, sweet song?

Newlywed—Well, since our baby's been born it's been like an opera, full of grand marches, with loud calls for the author every night.—Tit-Bits.

Quicker the Sooner.

Chauffeur—Is there an ordinance limiting the speed of autos in this town?

Native—Gawsh, no! You fellers can't git through Squashville any too quick fer us."

Deeply in Love.

"She's dreadfully in love with him."

"That so?"

"Yes. He's spoken sharply to her four or five times now, and she hasn't threatened to sue for a divorce."

Some Time.

"How long have you been out of work?"

"Ever since I lost my poor mother."

"Is that long ago?"

"She died when I was born."—Rire.

Temperance

DECREASE IN ALCOHOLIC USE

Sir Victor Horsley Says Impossible to State Any Given Minimum Amount of Drug Harmless.

The decision of all medical experts at home or abroad, meaning thereby such as have especially made a study of the effects of alcohol on the human body in health or disease, is that alcohol is a poison in any form, in any quantity, at any time, under any condition, in health or disease, either as a beverage or as a medicine. This view practically eliminates alcohol in any relation to the human economy, writes L. D. Mason, M. D., in the Temperance. Sir Victor Horsley, F. R. C. S., the celebrated neurologist and surgeon of London, England, sums up the whole situation in a few words: "One conclusion emerges from the recent investigation of the whole alcohol question, namely that it is quite impossible to state that any given minimum amount of the drug is harmless to our tissues," and we may add, this statement holds good either in health or disease.

Alcohol is a protoplasmic poison. "The organism is not an individual but a social mechanism, always bringing us at last to cells."—Virchow.

The most remarkable evidence of the increasing disuse of alcohol in disease is found in the "records of supplies" in the London Metropolitan Hospitals. In the comparative consumption of spirits, wines and malt liquors in a period of fifty years the liquor bill is three times less and the milk bill three times more. There has been a steady decrease and increase in these particulars and it is more marked every year along the lines of economy and medical practice. In Europe and this country there are special hospitals known as "temperance hospitals" in which alcohol is not used at all. In the London County Asylum the comparative consumption and decrease in the use of spirits, wine and beer is remarkable in a period dating from 1880 to 1905 and 1906. In 1889 the amount of spirits and wine consumed was 1,902 gallons; in 1905 and 1906, 205 gallons. Beer consumed in 1899, 255,468¼ gallons; in 1905 and 1906, 1,281½ gallons. From these facts there can be no doubt as a universal, world-wide fact that the hospitals of the world (for the fact applies in a measure to all civilized countries) are eliminating alcohol as a remedy in medical practice; and hospital practice regulates as a rule, and determines general medical practice.

The effects of alcohol on the intellectual faculties and higher brain are best shown in the words of Dr. Clouston, the celebrated neurologist and mental specialist of London, England: "From the medical and scientific point of view we have this great physiological fact before us—that the first thing that alcohol does in 99 cases out of 100 is to effect the mental working of the brain of the man who imbibes."

The lunacy statistics of England and Wales as shown in the sixty-third report of the commissioners contains among other interesting and important facts the following statement: "Taking a survey of the last fifty years it is seen that lunacy has increased from 36,762 cases in 1859 to 128,787 cases on January 1, 1909, an increase of 92,025. This is not merely an actual increase keeping pace with the increase of population. It is a vast proportionate increase, for whilst population has increased by 81.5 per cent., lunacy has increased 250 per cent." Dr. Clouston in the report of Morningside Asylum as early as 1903 says: "Alcoholic insanity steadily goes up and now it has doubled." All neurologists in this country and in Europe agree that all nervous diseases and insanity are at the present time largely on the increase and the use of alcohol is a prominent basic factor in this increase, to say nothing of other forms of disease not specifically affecting the nervous system.

Whether we consider alcohol as a drug to be used in medicine or as a beverage in daily life, we can only say of it after a consideration of the highest scientific and medical expert testimony in all centers of civilization, that it has no place in the human economy as a drug or beverage in disease or health; that its action "is evil and only evil and that continually." One has only to read the proceedings of the American Society for the Study of Alcohol and Other Narcotics, the American Journal of Inebriety and the numerous articles in the American medical press as well as the papers read in the various medical societies and the active interest taken by many prominent American practitioners, to know the attitude of medicine in America towards alcohol as a drug. The same holds true of special journalism in Great Britain and on the Continent, as represented in the British Journal of Inebriety and the large influential society of medical men it represents, and the general attitude of the influential medical public to the cause, and practice of medical or scientific temperance, so-called, and a growing conservatism in the use of alcohol in disease, and its gradual elimination from medical practice.

Liquors Not Needed.

"Fermented and distilled liquors are never necessary for any purpose, except in certain persons in whom the habit has created a need of them truly morbid."—Royer-Collard, M. D.

NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS!

This is to notify the taxpayers of Garrett county that the Annual Levy for 1912 has been made and published, and to call their attention to the following abstract Section 45, Chapter 566, Acts of 1890, relating to the discount to be allowed and the interest to be charged on all tax bills.

"All county taxes shall be due and payable on the first day of September next succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and on all county taxes paid on or before the 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. will be allowed and after the first day of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid. The Treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes regularly in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon the books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid. But the discount shall not be allowed unless the whole amount of state and county taxes are paid when same is made.

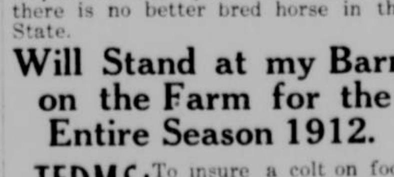
MORERI II,



20279.

Having lost my Percheron Stallion Herve, I have purchased MORERI II 20279, a Registered Percheron Stallion, bred by R. D. NcGonigle & Sons, of Ashley, Ohio.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

vs.

Thomas E. Markwood, Administrator of Charles M. Wilson, deceased, and also as Administrator of Milton O. Wilson, deceased, L. Blanche Wilson, widow of the said Charles M. Wilson and William L. Wilson, Robert Wilson, Hollis Wilson, Harry Wilson and Virginia Wilson, children and heirs at law of the said Charles M. Wilson, Stella T. Feeley and W. A. Feeley, her husband, A. I. Wilson, Jr., John T. Wilson, Bessie Homan and H. C. Homan, her husband, brothers and sisters and heirs at law of the said Milton O. Wilson, Michael Boyle, Maria Watson, Gilmor S. Hamill, Hugh G. Hamill, Marmaduke Best and Charles I. Best, mortgagees, Defendants.

No. 1808 Equity In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this bill is to procure a decree for the sale of the real estate of Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson, both late of Garrett County, deceased, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay and discharge the claims of their several creditors

1st. The Bill states that the said Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson were during their lifetime engaged in the mercantile business in Garrett county, under the name of C. M. Wilson and Brother, and became indebted to the above named plaintiffs in various sums, and to numerous other creditors.

2nd. That being so indebted, the said Charles M. Wilson departed this life on or about the day of , 1912, and the said Milton O. Wilson departed this life the day of , 1912, both dying intestate, the said Charles M. leaving a widow, L. Blanche Wilson and the following children, William L. Wilson, Robert Wilson, Hollis Wilson, Harry Wilson and Virginia Wilson (the children being infants) as his heirs at law and that they reside in Garrett county, that the said Milton O. left the following sisters and brothers as his only heirs at law: Stella T. Feeley who was intermarried with W. A. Feeley, A. I. Wilson, Jr., all of whom are of full age and reside in Tucker county, West Virginia, Bessie Homan, who intermarried with H. C. Homan and J. T. Wilson, all of whom are of full age and reside in Mineral county, West Virginia.

3rd. That letters of administration was granted by the Orphans' Court of said Garrett County to Thomas Markwood, both on the personal estate of Charles M. Wilson and the personal estate of Milton O. Wilson.

4, 5 and 6. That the said Charles M. Wilson had executed three separate mortgages on his real estate one to Michael Boyle, Hugh G. Hamill, Maria Watson and G. S. Hamill; the second to Marmaduke Best and G. S. Hamill, and the third to Charles I. Best and G. S. Hamill, all of which are unpaid and are liens on the real estate of which said Charles M. Wilson died seized and possessed.

7th. That both the Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson were seized and possessed of valuable real estate at the time of their respective deaths.

8th. The Bill then charges that the personal estate of the said decedents is not sufficient to discharge all of the just debts due and owing by them at the time of their decease, and in order that said creditors may be paid in full, the real estate or a part thereof, will have to be sold.

9th. The Bill then sets out in part the real estate owned by the said decedents at the time of their respective deaths, or so much thereof, as may be necessary to pay that portion of said indebtedness as may remain unsatisfied after application thereto of said personal estate.

The bill then prays for general relief and states that the said Stella T. Feeley and William A. Feeley, her husband, A. I. Wilson, Jr., Bessie Homan and H. C. Homan, her husband and J. T. Wilson are non-residents of the State of Maryland.

It is thereupon this 10th day of July, 1912, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett County, in equity, that the plaintiffs by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett County aforesaid, once in each of four successive weeks before the 9th day of August, 1912, give notice to the absent defendants of the object and substance of the bill, warning them, and each of them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 26th day of August next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS NO LONGER A PROBLEM

Dr. E. Marion Wynkoop, Founder of Marion Cure, Has Established Branch In Kitzmiller.

Dr. E. Marion Wynkoop, founder of the Marion Cure for drunkenness and drug addictions, of Washington, D. C., was in Oakland yesterday on business, the most important being that of taking upon himself the vows of matrimony, his bride being Miss Edna Cole, a handsome Baltimore city lady, the bridal party having driven over to Oakland from Kitzmiller earlier in the day, accompanied by Mr. J. E. Chappel, where Dr. Wynkoop has established a branch of the Marion Home. The wedding ceremony was preformed in the parlors of the Frantz Hotel by the Rev. Dr. Riker.

Dr. Wynkoop has achieved both success and fame in his work of effecting permanent cures of persons addicted to the use of drink and drugs. He is an acknowledged authority on the subject and has made signal success in solving the problem that has confronted medical skill and science in the matter of permanently eliminating the desire for strong stimulants and the indulgence of insidious drugs. In his research he has traveled extensively and studied the subject thoroughly until he has mastered the proposition. The result has been that chemistry has given to the world a cure that repeated tests, under most difficult circumstances, has proven infallible.

Before undertaking to publicly proclaim the virtues of the cure Dr. Wynkoop spent months in the large cities of the country at police headquarters, police courts, investigating the various cases that were brought in of confirmed users of drink and drugs. At his own expense and without hope of financial return he obtained the consent and the authorities turned over to him for treatment several of the more helpless cases. The proposition was at first ridiculed, but nothing daunted he undertook the task in which he had every confidence. In less than two weeks the results were simply short of marvelous. Men that had been identified by the police as habitual drunkards and generally worthless characters, were restored to normal conditions. They at once became rejuvenated and took a new lease on life; obtained positions and in every instance have changed from the life of vagadondage to that of respectable members of society.

The Marion Cure has received the unqualified endorsement of the highest medical authority, state and municipal officers as well as of the federal government.

An appealing feature of the treatment is that no hypodermic injections of poisonous drugs are used, and patients are seldom required to lose any considerable length of time from their business duties.

The branch of the Marion Home established at Kitzmiller by Dr. Wynkoop is in charge of Dr. H. Straughn and Mr. Chappel, where a number of patients are already under treatment.

May Take Six Months To Clear Sand Patch Tunnel.

A. W. Jones, chief engineer of the Carter Construction Company, contractor, who built the Western Maryland Railway extension, visited the wrecked Sand Patch tunnel on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Mr Jones expressed the opinion that it would take at least six months to clear the tunnel. That the undertaking is a stupendous one is now recognized on all sides. It is said the only solution is an open cut 600 feet wide at the top and 300 feet deep.

ROOSEVELT'S BATTLE MAY SOON BE STARTED

Campaign Carrying Him Into Nearly All States is Probable.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., July 12.—Within less than a fortnight Col. Roosevelt probably will begin the campaign trips which are to carry him into almost every state of the Union before the November election. Although he has not reached a final decision, he expects to leave Oyster Bay week after next. Kansas, Iowa and Michigan are tentatively on the program. He may also attend the Chicago convention of the new progressive party.

The purpose of Col. Roosevelt's trip if it is made, will be to tour states in which primaries will soon be held to nominate Republican presidential electors.

"I've been asked to go to the three states to take part in the primaries campaign," he said "I have not definitely made up my mind. Both the Roosevelt and Taft forces are going to make a fight at the primaries, and each of them has announced in advance that it will not abide by the result in case it is beaten. The fight will be to see which side will have to name its candidates for presidential electors by petition instead of having them on the Republican ticket.

"The primaries in these states will be held before long, and if I make the trip, I shall leave in ten or twelve days."

Col. Roosevelt is not eager to leave Sagamore Hill during the heat of midsummer. There is much to be done at home, moreover, in the way of superintending the organization of the third party and reducing to working basis his ideas in regard to economic and social reforms which he wishes to use in his campaign. With what he regards as the greatest fight of his life ahead, however, he has decided to put aside other considerations if he deems it necessary and begin his personal campaign this month.

Col. Roosevelt indicates that during the campaign he expects to speak to more persons than almost any other candidate in the history of the country. He says he will campaign in the south as vigorously as in the north. It is largely through this personal appeal that Col. Roosevelt hopes to carry the day.

"This is a crusader's fight," he said. "I have told men who offered to go with us that they should not do so unless the fire was burned into their souls."

To Oil State Roads.

Chairman O. E. Weller, of the State Roads Commission, announced that contracts for oiling state roads had been awarded the United Gas Improvement Company of Philadelphia and the Standard Oil Company. The work is to be completed by August 15. The commission has also decided to try out concrete on roads, macadam having failed in some instances to return satisfactory results. The first experiment will be made at Point Branch on the Baltimore and Washington Boulevard. Here the road is often washed away by the stream during high water, and concrete is about the only material to hold the fill.

In speaking of macadam roads Mr. Weller said they are quickly worn out where the automobile traffic is heavy, and he thinks concrete would be very much more servicable.

The chairman and Engineer Shirley have recently completed a tour of the road system. The work under way is being pushed, and where the progress has not been satisfactory the contracts were abrogated.

Silver Tea.

The Civic Club of Oakland will give a silver tea on the lawn at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Sliger, on Second street, Wednesday afternoon, July 24th, from three to six o'clock, and extends a cordial invitation to the general public.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis.

CHAPTER II—Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life.

---

the strange happenings in the Farrish home. There was no way in which you could have positive knowledge, nor could I. You were only guessing."

"Indeed, I wasn't!" I exclaimed indignantly. "What drew my attention to it was General Farrish's exclamation of terror at the sight of it just before he fell, paralyzed."

Davis shook his head determinedly. "That meant much—or nothing. It may have been mere senile hysteria superinduced by the great shock. At some time in his life he may have had some unpleasant experience which was associated in his subconscious memory with a yellow document. Wrought up as he was by the news of his daughter's attempt to kill herself, the brain cells called into action were those that had recorded other disturbing experiences, perhaps a month ago, perhaps forty years ago. No impressions in the brain records are ever lost. The sight of the yellow paper probably recalled some other yellow paper. There was then no evidence whatever that it was this particular piece of paper that so agitated him."

"But you think so now," I suggested.

"The situation has entirely changed. There was nothing to show that this piece of paper had ever come through the mail. There was nothing to connect it with suicide. Dowd comes in here with a similar piece of paper that plainly has been mailed. We now have not one footprint, but two—the beginning of a path. Once started on the path, we can solve the mystery."

"Then you think there is some connection between the two bits of paper?"

"I know there is," said Davis. "These bits of yellow paper are of the same quality and texture—to all appearances the same paper. Two persons in whose possession they were, attempt suicide on the same day. The same person, or at least the same typewriter, wrote both the address on the envelope and the contents of the letter. This envelope came from a country post-office in either New York or New Jersey within a month—some post-office the name of which begins with 'Ar 'or 'An.' There are not many rural offices that will fit in all particulars. In two days or sooner, I can tell you exactly from what office they were mailed."

"Letters—you think there were two? Might not this be the envelope in which this paper came?"

"That presupposes an acquaintance between Elser and Miss Farrish, at least a connection of some sort. Did she know him?"

"I don't think so. Her sister and I were talking of the Elser suicide last night after we saw the evening papers. Louise surely would have known it if her sister was acquainted with him."

"Perhaps," said Davis doubtfully. "There isn't a human being over ten that has not a secret that they keep from some one. It looks to me, though, as if in all probability there were two distinct letters. That is what makes me suspect a plot. It convinces me that the mails are being used for an improper and more than likely a criminal purpose. This brings the case or both cases properly in my domain as a post-office inspector."

"And I can count on your assistance, after all," I said joyfully. "When can you begin work?"

"I have begun," he said tersely, pushing over for my inspection something he had hastily scrawled on a pad lying on his desk. It was an order addressed to the superintendent of the railway mails, which read:

"Have all railway clerks on New York and New Jersey routes report from what rural office within the last month they have received large quantities of letters in yellow envelopes. If letters have been discontinued, when? DAVIS."

"Large quantities!" I gasped. "Were there more than two?"

"Of course," he snapped, in a way that showed me he did not wish to be questioned further. Then he reached for his hat and coat, and with an abrupt "Come along!" led the way to the elevator.

"Where are you going?" I asked as he rushed me hurriedly through Park place to the Sixth Avenue Elevated.

"To Twenty-third street," he replied, "to find out what the police have not."

In the "L" train I told him in low tones of Crandall's apparent connection with the case and of his sudden disappearance. He sat silent, his whole bearing indicating such abstraction that I doubted if he had heard a word I was saying, but suddenly, just before we left the train, he startled me by asking:

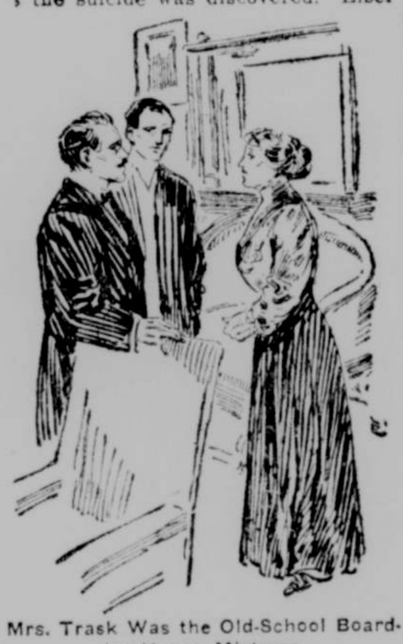
"Do you know Crandall? What color are his eyes?"

I regretted that I had to say no to the first question, and that I did not, to the latter, which query amazed me greatly. What connection the color of a man's eyes could possibly have with two attempts at suicide and a lot of mysterious yellow letters from a rural post-office was entirely beyond me. Curious as I was, I hesitated to question him on the subject, for experience had taught me that he was better at asking than answering.

Instead of going directly to the boarding-house where Elser had killed himself, he took the other side of the street and turned abruptly into a house, beside the door of which was a doctor's plate.

"Is Doctor Berner in?" he asked of the maid, and on being shown into the physician's office, introduced himself as "Inspector Davis" and began questioning the doctor about the Elser suicide.

Though the papers had made no mention of Doctor Berner, the statement being that a policeman had called an ambulance from Bellevue Hospital, it now appeared that the landlady had summoned him as soon as the suicide was discovered. Elser was dead, so he had withdrawn as soon as the policeman arrived.



Mrs. Trask Was the Old-School Boarding-House Mistress.

"Did you ever have Elser as a patient?" asked the inspector.

The doctor reflected.

"Only once—about two years ago. I gave him something for insomnia. He called here at the office and I wrote him a prescription. He was to return in a few days for further treatment, but he did not do so. Another time—"

The doctor hesitated.

"There was another time I had almost forgotten, a year or two before that. He met me in the street one day and asked what my office hours were on Saturday. He explained that he was the guardian of a boy who was in a boarding-school. The child had some slight throat trouble and he wished me to make an examination. On the following Saturday he brought the boy here, a bright little chap about ten."

"Do you know the boy's name? What school did he attend?" The inspector fired this question rapidly, but it was quickly apparent that the doctor had nothing more to tell, so we left.

"What a wonderful man you are!" I exclaimed as the doctor's door closed behind us. "How did you learn that Doctor Berner had been called in after Elser killed himself?"

"There is nothing wonderful about my knowledge," answered Davis with a laugh. "What is the first thing that people do when anything happens? They run for the nearest doctor. Doctor Berner is the nearest doctor. Could anything be simpler?"

The simplicity of his logic amazed me. It was like a conjurer's trick after it has been explained, or like one of those puzzle pictures with hidden faces. You work hours trying to find them, and after you have found them you wonder how you ever happened not to see them.

We now arrived at Mrs. Trask's boarding-house—one of those dingy ex-residences that proclaimed its retrogression by a white slip of paper on the door frame. I had supposed that here, too, my friend would introduce himself as "Inspector Davis" on account of the prestige it would give him in searching the rooms, but to the slattern maid who came to the door wiping her hands he merely said:

"Tell your mistress a couple of gentlemen are inquiring about room and board."

Mrs. Trask was the old-school boarding-house mistress fast disappearing before the inroads of the family apartment hotel. "Better days" was written all over her, though somewhat obscured by years in boarding-house grease. Eying us sharply through her spectacles, she inquired how much we were willing to pay, meanwhile debating with herself whether it was necessary to ask for references.

Davis' "not more than twelve dollars a week each" apparently convinced her that references were unnecessary, for she at once led the way to what she described as the second floor front, the room in which Elser had killed himself only the day before. Probably she had no intention of telling us this, but garrulity overcame her caution. She had been expatiating on the advantages of the room—Heaven knows it needed an eloquent advocate!—when suddenly she lowered her voice to a mysterious whisper.

"One gentleman has occupied this room for fourteen years—ever since I've had the house, and a fine old gentleman he was, too. I wouldn't have the room vacant but what happened to him yesterday." She let her voice sink still lower. "If it was a couple of ladies looking at the room, I wouldn't be telling it, but I know you gentlemen won't mind. It was in this room yesterday Mr. Elser killed himself, not on the bed, but right here on the floor. It was poison he took—cyanide of mercury, the doctor said."

"You don't say!" exclaimed the inspector, as if he had heard the news for the first time. "Why did he do it?"

"It's more than I can say," said Mrs. Trask, evidently well pleased to talk about the tragedy. "I did everything I could to keep him comfortable and happy. He spent all his time here since he gave up his office downtown. He read the papers every morning in the parlor. Every afternoon he took a walk. He was always on time to his meals and there never was a complaint out of him. On Saturdays he used to go up to Westchester to see a boy that he was guardian for. Every Saturday night regular he paid his board, that is, up to last week—that's still owing."

"Did he have any visitors?"

"No, I don't recollect that there was ever any one here to see him, though occasionally he used to bring the boy down here to lunch on Saturday or Sunday. He hasn't had him here, though, for the last three years."

"Did he receive any mail?"

"Ain't it queer, now, that you speak of that! The first letter he had in months came only last week. The police found part of the envelope on the floor beside him. Them and me both looked through all his things, but never a trace of the letter could we find. I can't for the life of me think what he could have done with it. I know the letter must have had some sort of good news for him, for after he received it, for several days he was as bright and chipper as could be, more like himself than he had been for years. Then yesterday somebody telephoned to him—I don't know who it was, for I was out marketing—and he never had any 'phone calls before that I know of. Right after lunch he went out and was gone until after three. Soon after he came in he killed himself in this very room."

To my mind things were beginning to look blacker and blacker for Crandall. The parallel between the cases of Katharine and Elser was entirely too strong for it to have been mere coincidence. We knew it was Crandall who had telephoned Katharine. It must have been he who had called Elser. There was much to be explained. What it was that had driven them both to seek death was still a mystery to me. My mind reverted to my original theory that there was a child, whose existence had been kept from the world, that was in some way connected with the Farrish family. Old Elser was the guardian of a boy. Suppose this boy was the child. It would establish a possible connection between the two suicides. It would explain why Katharine might have known old Elser yet never have mentioned the man to Louise.

I took it for granted that Davis would ask the landlady further about the child. Of course, he would want to know the boy's name and the name of the school where Elser kept him, but he made no further inquiries. Telling the landlady he would let her know in a day or two about the room, he turned to me with:

"Come on, Kent, it is time we had some luncheon."

"We must find Crandall," I said as we left the house.

"We must find who wrote the yellow letters," Davis responded.

"It must have been Crandall," I asserted with conviction.

"It may have been Crandall," the inspector replied. "Was Crandall left-handed?"

CHAPTER IV.

Katharine Speaks.

If I had been alone I would have gone directly to the Farrish home. I was anxious about Louise. I had not seen her since the night before, though I had telephoned her early in the morning—I greatly regretted having to leave her so much by herself in such distressful circumstances. I thought it wiser now to prepare her beforehand for the inspector's coming. I wanted him to see the Farrish home. I felt that if he met Louise and realized the luxury and comfort in which the family lived he would better appreciate the mystery and my determination to solve it.

I suggested luncheon at Martin's and Davis assented. As soon as we had obtained a table I excused myself and hastened to the telephone. Louise told me that the condition of both her father and Katharine was practically unchanged. I briefly summarized my morning's work and asked if I might bring the inspector after luncheon.

"By all means," said Louise, "bring him right over. I want to meet him and there may be some things I can tell him which will aid him."

When I returned to the cafe on the Broadway side, where I had left the inspector, I found him abstractedly rolling little pellets of bread and placing them in various positions on the cloth. So absorbed was he in his occupation that he hardly seemed to note my return. His flying fingers would hastily mold three or four pellets in as many seconds. Placing them in a row, he would eye them intently. Occasionally he would swoop down on some unoffending pellet and sweep it to the floor. Two or three times I tried to interrupt him to learn what he wished to eat, but each time he waved me impatiently away. Finally, not desiring to delay too long over luncheon, I gave the waiter the order without consulting him. Mechanically he ate what was put before him, all the while keeping up his game with bread balls.

Knowing him as well as I did, after studying closely his eccentric movements, I felt sure that the array of pellets was closely allied with the mental process by which he was seeking to solve the Farrish mystery. The larger pellets, I decided, must be the various theories about the yellow letter or letters and their origin. The smaller pellets were the different persons connected with the case. One by one he pushed the larger pellets from the table until a single pellet remained. The smaller ones he kept arranging and rearranging until at last he seemed satisfied. The single surviving large pellet stood directly on a crease in the cloth. On one side equally distant from the crease, but close to each other, he had placed two of the smaller pellets. The rest were in three groups on the other side of the line. For perhaps five minutes he carefully studied their position without shifting them, and then with a quick motion of his hand swept them all to the floor.

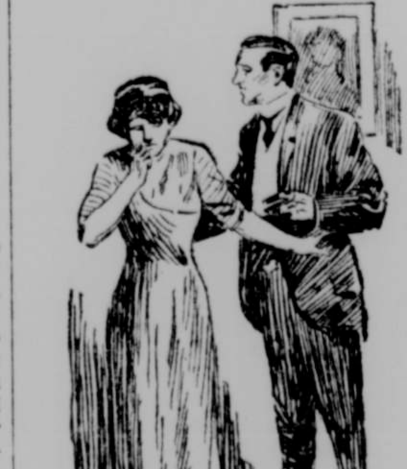
"There was some purpose distinctly criminal connected with the yellow letters," he said, as if for the first time aware of my presence, and becoming as loquacious as he had before been silent. "When we have run this mystery to earth we will find that there are two of the criminals—only two guilty."

"Guilty of what?" I asked in amazement.

"I haven't the slightest idea as yet," he replied with such apparent frankness that I suspected he was not telling me all his thought. "Evil ideas are of three kinds—the solitary, the pair, the group. Crimes are merely the physical expression of evil ideas and bear the same classification. The solitary evil idea manifests itself in a variety of crimes. In this class belong defalcations, poisonings, crimes against women and generally the assassination of private individuals. These are the hardest crimes to discover and punish. The evil idea is not communicated. This sort of criminal seldom has confidants. Often, in fact almost always, he masks his villainy behind the cloak of respectability. Most of these offenses are due to mania, to blood-lust, to a desire for revenge for real or imaginary wrongs.

"Evil ideas of the pair are generally attributable to money-lust. In such crimes as burglary, highway robbery, blackmail, you will find two persons equally guilty, always the pair. Sometimes it is the man and the woman, sometimes the strong man and the weak man, sometimes two women, though seldom, for women have little of the inventive or creative faculty, even in crime. Notorious women criminals, just like all other feminine celebrities in literature or art, have much of the masculine in their make-up.

"The third kind of evil idea, that of the group, is responsible for the strike, the mob, the conspiracy. It is the contagion of crime. The Black Hand is a typical example. The members of this notorious organization, while they profit financially by their misdeeds, care little about that end of it. Their greatest pleasure is in the torture of their victims, in the agony they suffer from the time the nameless dread of the Black Hand first seizes them until finally they are put to death for refusing the society's exactions. It is this evil spirit that kills kings, burns witches, destroys property and lynches negroes. The Farrish mystery, however, is of the second class—the crime of the pair. I am certain of it."



"Don't, Please Don't!" She Said Coldly.

"The important thing then for us to do," said I, trying to bring him from the abstract to the concrete, "is to find Hugh Crandall and also to discover who was his closest associate—man or woman."

"Do you think so?" he asked enigmatically, adding a second later, "Can't you take me to see Miss Farrish?"

Hardly another word passed between us as the taxicab whirled us up Madison avenue to the general's home. I was thinking about Davis' strange theories of crime and his opinion that this was a crime of the pair. I felt sure that he, as well as I, must be convinced of Crandall's connection with the matter and surely his flight did not argue innocence. But if this was a crime of the pair, who was the other guilty person? Whom did Davis suspect? He had said that it might be either two men or a man and a woman. A woman? Could it be that he suspected Katharine Farrish of sharing Crandall's guilt?

No, no it was impossible, too absurd. Yet certainly the yellow letter seemed a link between her and Elser. It was she who for a long time had been Crandall's closest associate. That association apparently had been recently renewed in secret. Was it possible that back of the mystery there was some crime and that Katharine was guilty?

For a moment I was tempted to order the chauffeur to stop. It seemed almost desecration to take this heartless analyzer of crime into the home where death stalked so close. Suppost Katharine was—No, I had pledged my word to Louise that I would solve the mystery and I would keep my promise, no matter where it led me. After all, the important thing was my beloved one's peace of mind. As long as the shadow hung over her father and sister, her happiness must be marred. Better the knowledge of evil than the terror of mystery.

Davis wasted little time in ceremony. As soon as I had introduced him to Louise, he said abruptly:

"I'd like to see the room where it happened—alone."

As Louise called one of the servants to escort him upstairs I was rejoicing at the opportunity to be alone with her. The cold formality of her greeting would have troubled me had I not attributed it to the inspector's presence. As soon as he had left us, with the memories of the evening before glowing in my mind, I turned to embrace her.

"Don't, please don't!" she said coldly.

"Why, dearest!" I stammered in amazement.

She offered no explanation but said in the most matter-of-fact tones—too matter-of-fact to be natural, I thought—"Tell me, Mr. Kent, what you learned at the place where Mr. Elser lived."

I was dumfounded. What had come over her? What could have happened to make this sudden change in her attitude toward me? Could this cool, distant young woman be the same girl who only a few hours before had clung so desperately to me and had wept out her sorrows in my arms? Had she overnight forgotten the kiss with which we pledged our joint efforts to solve the mystery?

"Tell me, Mr. Kent," she persisted quietly, "is there a yellow letter in that case, too? Do you believe there can be any connection between Mr. Elser and—and what Katharine did?"

Greatly perturbed, yet trying to convince myself that her attitude was only a girl's natural reaction as she recollected the events of the evening before, I was just beginning to rehearse what little we had learned in the boarding-house when Davis came running down the stairs.

"Tell me," he said abruptly to Louise, "what color are Mr. Crandall's eyes?"

"Blue," said Louise, "gray-blue."

"Humph!"

I could see she was as much puzzled at his question as I had been, but he offered no explanation and made no comment.

"Was Crandall left-handed?" he snapped.

"I don't think so," said Louise after a minute's thought. "I never noticed that he was."

"Humph!" he repeated, his eyes roving about the room. "Take me in to see General Farrish."

The young doctor whom Doctor Wilcox had left in charge happened to be passing through the hall, and stopped as he heard the request.

"It can do no harm," he said, in reply to Louise's look of inquiry.

The four of us—the doctor, Davis, Louise and myself, in the order named, tiptoed into the general's room. I was prepared for a great change in him, but his appearance was really terrifying. Perceptibly thinner, aged as by many years, all shriveled and shrunken, he lay chained to his bed by his affliction, unable to lift leg or arm, his lips fallen nervelessly apart, his tongue lolling uncontrollably—dead, dead, dead, save his eyes.

As Louise and I approached the bedside it appeared to me that he recognized us both and I could detect the same pleading look I had noted the night before. He seemed to me struggling with his deadened senses to ask us something. While I did not know whether or not his hearing had been impaired I thought he might be worrying about Katharine's condition, and carefully and slowly I began to enunciate something about her, hoping that I had guessed what it was he wished to ask. But even as I spoke I saw that his eyes had left my face. Into them returned the same acute terror he had exhibited at the sight of the yellow letter. If those eyes could have spoken, their shrieks would have filled the room. I followed the direction of their glance. He was staring in terror at the one strange face in the room—the inspector's.

Seeing how much his presence disturbed the invalid, Davis turned quickly and left the room. Louise and I followed, leaving only the doctor and nurse.

"I wonder what made him look so?" breathed Louise.

"He's afraid of something—for some one?" I said, hurrying to overtake Davis, hoping to learn from him his opinion as to what caused the patient's fears.

"I was right. It's just as I thought," I heard him mutter as he hastened to the hall and reached for his hat and coat. I saw that he was making preparation for instant departure and I was in a quandary what to do. I felt it my duty to accompany my friend for from his manner I was convinced that he was on the track of the mystery. Yet I did not wish to leave Louise until I had gained some explanation of the barrier that she seemed to have raised between us. I was conscious of no way in which I could have offended her, yet there was a marked difference in her attitude toward me overnight. While I was still debating the question and Davis had all but reached the door, seemingly indifferent to whether or not I accompanied him, a nurse came running to Louise.

"Miss Farrish," she said, "I think your sister is recovering consciousness. I thought you would like to know it and to be at her side in case she speaks."

Though Davis was some distance away his acute ear must have caught her words. He turned and was up the stairs in a flash. Louise convulsively caught my hand. The barrier between us was swept away. I knew then it was only fear that she had been forward in showing her affection. Hand in hand we raced up the stairs after the inspector, and ranged ourselves on the other side of the bed from him.

Between us, her long hair in braids, only the white bandage around her forehead to suggest her wound, lay the silent figure of Katharine Farrish. The pallor of her face seemed only to enhance her beauty, and though her eyes were closed, her long dark lashes still gave expression. As we watched, she began stirring restlessly and her hands twitched nervously. Suddenly her eyes opened wide, not with the light of intelligence, but with the brilliancy of hysteria or the excitement of fever. She made an ineffectual attempt to rise in bed, but she was too weak. Sinking back on the pillow she shrieked: "Promise me, Hugh, promise me, you'll do it at once."

After that one sentence she relapsed into unconsciousness. I feared for a moment that she was dead. The doctor hastened to her side and began to feel her pulse and listen to her heart. It seemed many minutes before he turned to us with a reassuring whisper:

"It is nothing serious—a relapse to be expected after that outburst. Her heart is stronger than I expected. She will not likely regain consciousness for many hours, but there is no immediate danger."

His manner, rather than his words, invited us to go, so Louise and I followed Davis from the room.

The inspector seemed to have forgotten his haste to depart. He sat down abruptly on a divan in the upper hall, with his face resting in his hands, and gave himself up to intent thought.

Louise and I stood a little apart, discussing in whispers Katharine's strange outcry. What could she have meant?

"She meant Crandall, of course," said Louise. "She mentioned Hugh—did you hear it?"

I nodded assent.

"Probably she was repeating a conversation she had with him just before she shot herself," I suggested. "What do you suppose she wanted him to promise her?"

Louise shook her head. I racked my brain in vain for some theory to fit her words to her own desperate act, to Crandall's flight, to her father's terror. I judged from Davis' abstracted manner that he, too, was similarly engaged.

"Everything," I said to Louise, "every single thing we have learned points to Crandall's connection with the mystery that has hung over your father and Katharine. When we have found him we shall learn what it was. I am more and more convinced that he is guilty of some crime, something terrible, something that your father and sister knew."

The inspector laughed aloud.

We turned toward him, I in indignation, Louise in astonishment, to find him looking at us with an amused smile.

"Don't be too sure," he said quizzically. "Crandall doesn't seem to have been left-handed."

Fined for Coquetry.

A young woman applying for a marriage license at Geneva, Switzerland, substracted three years from her age and was fined $6 on the charge of "coquetry."

A Winner.

"Do you object to your wife playing bridge?" "No. She's a champion at the game. My only fear is that her suffragette meetings will interfere with her card parties."

Hardly a Benefit to the Race.

A young New England student has succeeded in developing live caterpillars by means of sulphuric acid. The scientists are excited over the feat, but the country at large will not be wildly enthusiastic over the prospect of being able to multiply caterpillars at will, and may even be clamoring for laws to prevent ambitious young scientists from increasing by scientific means flies, mosquitoes and kindred nuisances to the human race.

VERY IGNORANT.

Shortly before his death the late Chief Justice Fuller presided at a church conference. During the progress of a heated debate a member arose and began a tirade against universities and education, thanking God that he had never been corrupted by contact with a college.

"Do I understand the speaker thanks God for his ignorance?" interrupted the chief justice.

"Well, yes," was the answer, "you can put it that way if you want to."

"All I have to say, then," said the chief justice, in his sweetest musical tone, "is that the member has a good deal to thank God for."—Hampton Magazine.

Regrettable.

"I can't tell you how sorry I was to hear of your husband's death, Mrs. Nurich. It is too bad that he had to go that way."

"Yes; I j-just c-can't get over it. If it had only been appendicitis or something fashionable; but plain conjunction of the brain! It makes me feel so bad on the children's account."—Judge's Library.

Comparison.

"Six quarts of oats seems a heap for that old horse," said Farmer Corntossel.

"You ought to treat your horse as well as you treat yourself," replied his wife.

"I know. But if I was to eat six quarts of breakfast food every day, you'd say I was mighty extravagant."

Busy at Bridge.

"Miss Mabel, I should like to speak to you."

"Just a minute."

"I should like to ask you to be my wife."

"You are interrupting the bridge game, Mr. Wombat. Wait until I'm dummy."

Woman.

A gentleman sat down to write a deed and began with "Know all women by these presents."

"You are wrong," said a bystander, "it ought to be, 'know all men.' "

"Very well," answered the other, "if all women know it, all men will, of course."—Life.

Exaggerated Expectations.

Caxton, Life Guard

By June Gahan

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Why don't you call her if you want her?" Wally asked, digging a fresh tunnel in the wet sand where the life guard's heel had smashed through. "Don't call Miss Ashton. Call her first name."

Caxton smiled moodily down at the little chubby figure lying flat on the sand.

"I don't know her first name, Wally."

"First name's Dorothy. That's what mother calls her. Kenneth does, too, when she isn't around."

"Who's Kenneth?"

"My big brother. Maybe she's gone with him some place. This was an afterthought. Wally sat up to consider it, and swept the curving shore line with his calm glance. Back of the pine fringe above the beach the great hotel nestled between tall bluffs. Stretching from it like arms were shore front cottages a mile in each direction. It was late afternoon. The air seemed heavy and tense. The sea lay with hardly a ripple, dull gray, with long saffron high lights from the low storm clouds.

"You had better run up to the cottage, kiddie," Caxton advised. "There's a thunder storm on its way."

"I don't want to yet," coaxed Wally, "I've got to finish this roller coaster. If there's a storm will you have to swim after any people?"

"If there are any foolish enough to stay out," Caxton returned.

Wally stared up at the tall, tanned figure in the red and gray swimming suit. There was no one else at the beach that summer he admired so intensely as the life guard. Miss Ashton liked him, too. They had talked it over between them often, and agreed that he was a real hero, and every morning Wally would watch for him to come along the long stretch of beautiful firm silvery sand on his coast patrol duty.

One morning he had waded in too far after stray shells and strands of sea weed. Caxton came on a run and gripped the drenched little figure securely and bore it back to its governess. A white faced, girlish governess she was, too. Clad in white from toe to throat, she had run down into the water after her charge, and Wally had sobbed so, there had been no chance then to talk. But he had remembered her, and watched every morning for the two.

She was Miss Ashton, governess to Walter Devereux's boy. That much he found out easily. The Devereux cottage was most imposing. Wally was the youngest hope, and tall Kenneth, fresh home from his last college year, was the eldest. And the cottage was to be closed in two days, Wally had told them, when the family left for a Canadian trip. That meant she would go out of his life forever.

He had tried to get a chance to speak to her alone for the past three days, but young Devereux was her shadow. And now, suddenly, while he was giving up his last hope, she came hurrying down the path from the bluff.

"We forgot the camera, and left it way up on the hill. I had to go back after it," she told him.

"We thought you had run away with Kenneth," Wally informed her gravely.

"Kenneth is out on the bay, dear, in his knockabout."

"He'd better come in then," Caxton checked himself. If the cub was idiotic enough to venture out under such a gale what was it to him? He bent over her and spoke half roughly. "Can't you send the boy in and give me half a chance?"

"For what?"

"To tell you what I want to. It's my last chance. Here, Wally, listen, if you'll run up to the cottage, and stay there on the veranda until Miss Ashton comes, I'll make you a life boat."

"With life savers all sitting in it, rowing?"

"Run along, dear, I won't be long," Dorothy whispered. She watched the little figure stalk slowly up the broadwalk to the cottage, and turned her fact up to Caxton. "Now, what is it?"

Caxton's eyes were half closed. He saw the knockabout half way down the little bay, its two sails sagging in the hot calm. The squall might come beating up any minute. He turned to the girl.

"Nothing much after all," he said bitterly. "I thought I had a great deal to tell you, but I hardly think it is worth while. Not if Devereux's after you."

Her clear, gray eyes met his, then fairly, defiantly.

"You have a splendid opinion of my judgment, haven't you?"

He shrugged his broad shoulders.

"Life's life. I'm the volunteer coast guard here this year. Devereux's the best catch in the summer crowd. There isn't much choice, is there?"

The color rose hotly in her face. "I wonder if you imagine you are making love to me?" she said very slowly. "You may be an excellent life guard, Mr. Caxton, but you do not know the very first rules of this other game. When one truly loves, he first places all trust and honor in the keeping of the one he loves. I think you are a terrible coward at this."

"Dorothy——"

"How did you know that was my name?" haughtily.

"Wally told me so. It is a darling name, too. Dorothy, will you——"

The words were drowned in the rush of wind and swirl of sand that swept about them in a wild midsummer fury. He held her close in his arms, as the first patter of rain fell, and the lightning gashed great glittering rents in the low-hanging sulphurous clouds.

"I must go to Wally!" she exclaimed. "Let me go. I can make my way alone. Please—please let me go!"

"I won't. I'll carry you up to the cottage."

"Oh, but look there!" He swung about as she pointed. Through the darkening gloom, he saw the knockabout had turned turtle. Devereux was a good swimmer, he knew. It would be play to him to beat it in on those waves, but there was no sign of him. Dorothy's hand had clasped his shoulder in a quick grip of dread. The wind whipped her fair hair about her face, and she shrank close to him.

"Kenneth has gone down," she cried. "Why don't you do something? Why on earth do you wait here with me?"

He smiled down at her grimly. "I'll get him, dear," he promised.

The next instant she stood there alone, barely able to keep her footing against the full fury of the gale that beat down at her from the sea.

Caxton was racing full tilt down the landing pier, she saw. The knockabout was drifting in with every wave, nearer and nearer. There was no sign of Devereux. Somehow, she made her way up to the cottage. His mother was there, kneeling by the veranda railing, her arms around Wally, her face hidden on his curls. Already the alarm had spread, and people were running down from the hotel and the cottages. She heard some one say they were putting the lifeboat out after both of them.

It seemed a lifetime to Dorothy, standing beside the sobbing, half-fainting mother, soothing her, and quieting Wally. It was too dark to see a hundred yards from the cottage. The air seemed filled with hurtling limbs of trees, and leaves. Above the roar of the wind she could catch the shouts of the men, and finally she knew they were bringing back the two, Devereux and Caxton, the life guard. One was unconscious, they said.

"And I sent him," she told herself over and over.

Then, suddenly, leading the line of men, there tramped up the broad steps Devereux, drenched to the skin in his white yachting suit, and thinking only of his mother.

"I'd have gone under if Caxton hadn't gripped me," he told them. "When she turned turtle I was caught in the rigging and couldn't free myself. He dived under and set me free, and was struck on the head in rising. Then I brought him in until the boat met us."

Dorothy's eyes were closed as she listened. And she had called him a coward!

That evening after Wally had slipped away to dreamland, she stole down the stairs and out into the stillness of the night. It was beautifully peaceful and fresh after the storm. The full moon rode high above scattered shreds of clouds, and the sea broke in long, low waves on the beach below.

Caxton and Devereux smoked together in the low steamer chairs in one corner of the veranda. Devereux rose at her approach.

"Bob's been telling me a lot of things, Miss Ashton," he said simply, extending his hand to her. "I'm sorry I've been such a cub as to even hope I stood any show. He's a great old boy. We two were mates at college. He was the greatest captain New London ever saw at the races, the finest chap that ever bossed a crew. I am just going up to mother. Good night." He leaned over Caxton's shoulder and added: "And good luck."

Dorothy was silent. His hand reached toward her and she slipped her own into its grasp.

"But I called you a coward."

He kissed her more than once before he answered.

"You called me a coward—at this," he corrected. "As I was about to say when the infernal storm broke will you marry me, Dorothy?"

Legend of Saint Dymphna.

Some 1,300 years ago, so runs the tale, the beautiful daughter of a heathen king of Ireland fled from her father's court and, crossing the seas, took refuge at Gheel. Dymphna had been converted to Christianity by the teaching of a monk named Gerebern, and it was under his protection that she sought deliverance from her unnatural father who strove to force upon her an incestuous union. The infuriated king followed the fugitives and discovered their retreat. Gerebern was cruelly put to death by the savage soldiery, and the king himself, regardless of his daughter's pleading for mercy, seized her long hair, and with one blow cut off her head; then, without waiting to give his victims burial, he returned to Ireland. After a time, it began to be rumored that strange miracles of healing from sickness and disease were wrought on the scene of this horrible crime and, curiously enough, it was those afflicted mentally who derived especial benefit. The spot came to be considered holy ground, and soon a church was built, and dedicated to Saint Dymphna, within which the bones of the martyrs were laid to rest in a vault prepared for their reception beneath the high altar.—Alice Isaacson, in Atlantic.

BREEDING THE SHIRE HORSE

Character, Symmetry, Style, Constitution, Soundness and Type of Mare Are of Importance.

The first thing a farmer must try to get is a mare or two of just the right sort to begin with. The age to buy is not of so much importance; by buying fillies at one or two years old, they have the full length of their breeding life before them, but at the same time there is the risk of their proving non-breeders, or inferior breeders, while by buying a mare that has bred a foal or two successfully we discount the risk, but have to pay a higher price, and lose as much of her life as has passed. The mare that has begun to breed is the safest speculation.

Horses Always in Demand.

In selecting the brood-mare the character, symmetry, style, constitution, soundness and type are of even greater importance than pedigree. It is well to have a type of perfection in one's eye and to get as near that as possible.

The head and eyes should betoken docility, intelligence and courage. It is only by close observation that any one can acquire the art of recognizing character in a mare. No amount of descriptive writing can teach one how to judge these characteristics in horse or man. The loin, of course, should be strong, and the tail well set up, in line with the back, not drooping. In a brood-mare a strong, healthy constitution is of the utmost importance.

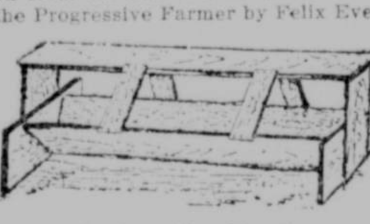
As for size, a mare standing 16 hands high, and built in proportion, is big enough. Color may be selected according to taste, but a brown or bay colored animal is always more salable than a black or any of the lighter colors.

When buying, every precaution should be taken to insure soundness—that is, absence of all hereditary disease, and a few dollars extra should not prevent a bargain being made if the mare approaches anywhere near the ideal above described.

SANITARY TROUGH FOR HOGS

One Constructed in Such Manner That Animal Cannot Get Its Feet in or Crowd Others.

This plan of a hog trough which the hog cannot put his feet into, away from which he cannot crowd the other hogs, and which is protected from the sun and rain, is sent to the Progressive Farmer by Felix Eversole of Tullahoma, Tenn. It can be made any size desired, and of such lumber as may be handy. If ends are made long, it cannot be turned over. Looks to us like a good idea.



Sanitary Hog Trough.

Raising Horses.

Men who are raising scrub horses and using grade sires of any breed are very foolish. Plug horses and those which fit nowhere may sell low in the future, but horses that have a trade will sell high. Any sound saddle horse or any light harness horse or big draft horse or coach horse, any good chunk, any stylish Southern horse, any express horse and, we might say, any cavalry horse, will sell well, while the unclassified horse will grade at the tail end and sell for the plug that he is.

Cure for Stumbling.

If a horse stumbles, give him his food on the floor, instead of in the manger. The position necessarily taken in feeding strengthens the muscles of the knees, and so removes the cause of the stumbling. A horse just brought from pasture does not stumble.

Pasture for Horses.

Have plenty of pasture for the brood mares and colts. If the mares work during the week, let them graze on Sundays. Pasture is a cheap feed for all classes of stock, but don't pasture too closely.

SNUBBED BY EMPRESS

BEAUTY RUSHES FROM COURT BALL AND LEAVES CITY.

Newly Rich Discovers That Fine Gowns and Personal Beauty Are Only Part of the Qualifications Required at Royal Courts.

Berlin.—The emperor's wife always scrutinizes with jealous eye the list of German women ambitious to attend the court balls. An instance of her watchfulnes has become known.

A Berlin hostess not of noble descent, but who is extremely anxious to figure in court circles, obtained, through a wealthy friend who has long been a favorite with the empress, an invitation to the trial dance given by her majesty's mistress of ceremonies, Countess von Brockdorff. At such a rehearsal the countess selects the women to be invited to the second dance, which the empress attends.

Having been invited to the first trial ball, the hostess, one of the newly rich, felt confident that her triumph was secure, and gossiped with friends about the kind of gown that would please the crown prince and the other princes, believing her personal beauty would command attention. To her surprise no invitation came to the second trial dance. Presuming that a mistake had been made, she asked her friend to intercede with Countess von Brockendorff. The mistress of ceremonies was highly indignant, but sent an invitation.

When the time came for the empress to look over the guests, Countess von Brockendorff lowered her eyes gently as the hostess was being inspected, a sign which was understood. The empress chatted quietly with the others, but swept majestically by the noueveau riche without a sign of recognition or greeting.

The beauty glared in fury at the countess, then rushed from the house, and the next day left the Riviera. As she dashed out of the ballroom a young lieutenant of the guard who admired her appearance more than her intellect, said aloud: "There goes another social democrat."

GARLIC IN CAR; MAN FAINTS

John Jones Just Can't Stand Its Odor, He Tells the Ambulance Crew.

Cleveland, O.—Ambulance men sniffed curiously as they boarded a St. Clair avenue car at St. Clair avenue and East Ninth street the other night to carry forth the limp form of a man who had fainted. Then sniffed with greater vigor when they got to the man who had frightened the passengers and crew by suddenly toppling to the floor as one dead.

At Lakeside hospital they didn't know what to make of the case. Some thought that maybe the man was overcome by the heat. Finally he came to.

He was John Jones, he said, and lived at 1460 East Ninety-third street.

"And what was the matter with you?" they asked him.

Jones' lip curled weakly in disgust.

"Didn't you smell it?" he inquired. "It was that darn garlic. A woman had a lot of it in the seat in front of me, and I just can't stand garlic."

Hospital for the Wounded.

London.—The charity commissioners are about to avail themselves of the gift of $500,000 made in 1910 by Sir Ernest Schiff for the establishment of a "Hospital for the Wounded," the legal time for objections to this charity having expired. This unique hospital is at Knowle Hill Park, Cabham, Surrey, and is reserved for poor persons of either sex who are suffering from wounds, the result of accident or operation, which still require surgical supervision or nursing, and who have been under treatment for the accident or operation as inpatients at seven of the London hospitals. The managing committee, however, has discretion to extend the benefits of the scheme. No person is to be received who is suffering from an incurable, malignant disease or any other disease that the committee shall from time to time determine to exclude.

Wants Policewoman.

Greeley, Colo.—This city may add a woman to its police force as the result of the suggestion of many mothers, who declare a woman could best deal with girls and all matters pertaining to the welfare of the children. The suggestion was made at a meeting of 60 Greeley mothers, following a talk given them at their request by Chief of Police Camp.

Greeley women have been quietly conducting a public welfare investigation and this meeting was one of a series.

Walks 6,000 Miles.

St. Clairsville, O.—Carl Leipple, graduated with the class of 1912 from the local high school, has walked nearly 6,500 miles to and from school during the four years of his course. He resided at East Richland, four miles from here, and was forced to walk to and from school each day. During that time he never missed a day nor was he ever tardy.

Burns to Death in Cellar Window.

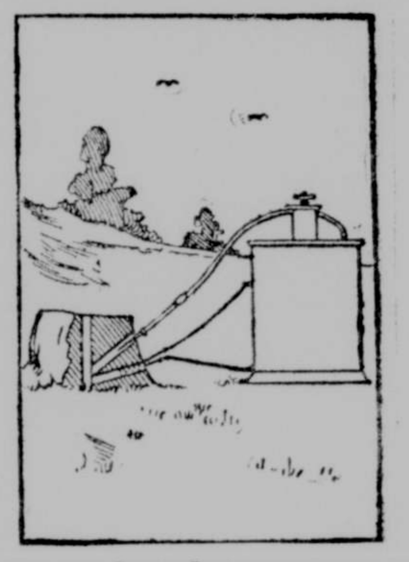
Clio, Mich.—Falling down the cellar steps with a lamp, Mrs. Matthew Hudson set fire to her clothing. She became wedged in a cellar window, trying to get out. Douglas Meek, passing by, tore her burning clothes from her, in an unsuccessful effort to pull her through. She died from her burns.

FARM AND GARDEN

STUMP DESTROYER IS NOVEL

Solution of Problem of Clearing Land Appears to Be Solved by Washington Genius.

The problem of clearing away unsightly stumps appears to have been solved by a man in the state of Washington. Heretofore this has been done chiefly by blasting, but the apparatus shown in the illustration burns the stump down close to the ground. A vertical hole is drilled through the stump and two lateral holes, reaching to it. The reservoir is then wheeled up to it and two sets of tubes connected with the two side holes. Burning liquid fuel and air under pressure is injected through one hole and an inflammable liquid is injected through the other. When the two meet in the center hole the liquid is ignited and spreads through the entire stump, devouring it until it is eaten through down to the ground, leaving a level surface instead of the torn remains that follow dynamiting.



Stump Destroyer.

GIVING PLENTY OF DISTANCE

Common Mistake Made by Many Gardeners Is That of Crowding Plants Too Close.

Many gardeners make the mistake of crowding garden vegetables too close in the drill. Vegetables require rapid growth and quick maturity to give quality and flavor to the plants when served. Unless the soil is exceptionally rich, and there is plenty of soil moisture available during the growing season, the plants are apt to be dwarfed and the quality of the vegetables impaired.

In producing vegetables for the market, the grower will endeavor to grow plants of high quality and desirable flavor, and he cannot afford to take any risk. It is far better to produce fewer products and gather vegetables of better quality than to have an abundance that do not command fair prices.

The safest plan is to sow plenty of seeds in order that a good stand may be secured. If the plants are tender and the spring is favorable for the insects, diseases, cold nights, etc., leave about twice as many plants as you desire to grow. When the weather is favorable for the growth of the plants, thin promptly, leaving the required number of plants. Be sure that the plants have sufficient distance to produce vegetables of extra quality.

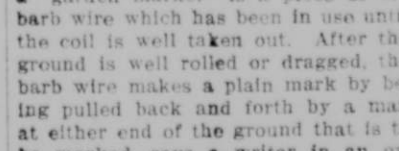
DUMP SLED IS QUITE USEFUL

Can Conveniently Be Used for Hauling Manure During Both Summer and Winter Months.

(By J. G. GORDON.)

A dump cart for summer and a dump-sled for winter can be used very conveniently on the farm for hauling manure.

A box body may be adjusted to any sled. The pivots that swing the body should be located so as to make the top the heavier, and a pin should be run through the hind bench of the sled into the end of the body to hold it in an upright position while loading.



A Dump Sled.

As soon as a part of the load has been placed in the body this will hold it in position, then when ready to dump the load, pull out the pin and give the top of the body a push and the weight of the load will turn it over.

Barb Wire Marker.

The best device I have yet found for a "garden marker" is a piece of old barb wire which has been in use until the coil is well taken out. After the ground is well rolled or dragged, the barb wire makes a plain mark by being pulled back and forth by a man at either end of the ground that is to be marked, says a writer in an exchange. This is quickly done, and does away with stakes, lines and unnecessary tramping back and forth over the ground.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1912.

WHILE Mr. Wilson seems for the time being to be the candidate of a harmonious democracy, he will not rally to his support the people of the country who are interested in its progress and prosperity. Mr. Wilson is an avowed free trader of the worst class, that is, he is an economic free trader who is opposed to every vestage of protection to any American industry, who stands upon a platform which, like the platform of 1892, declares that a protective tariff is unconstitutional. This alone should result in his defeat without considering that in the past few months he has changed his mind almost weekly if not daily upon the great questions of the day. To bolster up some of his present views he admits that he has been wrong all his life and has taught wrong doctrines, but for the sake of expediency he is willing now to accept the socialistic and populistic doctrines of the day in his hopes of gaining a presidency.

A FREE TRADE CHALLENGE

The Baltimore platform says flatly:

"We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the Federal Government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties EXCEPT FOR THE PURPOSE OF REVENUE, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of government honestly and economically administered.

"We denounce the Repubilcan pretense on that subject and assert that AMERICAN WAGES ARE ESTABLISHED BY COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS AND NOT BY THE TARIFF."

Nothing could be clearer than this unequivocal oath of allegiance by the Democratic party, subscribed in its platform, to absolute Free Trade.

Never mind whether American mills must be closed; we shall not have a tariff to keep them open—only a tariff to get revenues.

Never mind whether American wages must fall; we shall not have a tariff to protect the American wage-earner against the competition of cheap foreign labor.

Never mind whether the American workman's bread and butter shall be forfeit to our policy; we shall not have a tariff to assure either the bread on his table or the butter to spread on its slices.

The Democratic party couldn't if it would, for the Constitution, it holds, gives it no power and no right to make a tariff for the protection of American industries and American wage-earners. And the Democratic party wouldn't if if it could, for it will not yield its decree that American wages must be governed by the usual conditions of other countries, however povertystricken is their labor.

There is the challenge to all wage-earners working in American industries that could be thrown wide open by that Free List for which the Baltimore platform declares.

And back of it, as the Democratic candidate for President, is a man who is a free Trader from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. A college professor. Not a producer. Not a payer of wages out of products made and sold by him and his employees. Not a receiver of wages, his share, big or little, coming out of what he produces or helps to produce for sale in competition with other producers—perhaps, under the Free List, pauper labor producers. No. Not even a practising Free Trader up against the actual conditions of producing in competition with your own people or the people of the world. No, not even that. A scholastic Free Trader. A Free Trader working out the problem, not with machinery, raw materials and men, but in books, in lectures, in epigrams.

Yes, Woodrow Wilson is a Free Trader. Not in the mill, not in the factory, not in the market place; at the blackboord in the schoolroom. And he believes his doctrine. He believes it with all his heart. He believes it as the deeply earnest clergyman believes his Gospels. And, if he can, he will give his doctorine to the American people to practise.

Well, before they vote on it the wage-earners of the United States have four months to think over this program of Woodrow Wilson and the Democratic party striking clean home to their bread and butter.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

The Johns Hopkins University Technical School.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Dear Sir:—

The enclosed circular presents the first announcement the University is making concerning the new Technical School established by the General Assembly. In view of the great interest in this new work, will you kindly publish the statement in full?

Yours truly,
E. F. BUCHNER.

Baltimore, July 12, 1912.

Although the Act of the Legislature providing for the creation of a School of Advanced Technology in connection with the Johns Hopkins University did notcontemplate the opening of the School prior to October, 1913, the University is anxious to show its appreciation of the trust committed to it by beginning the preliminary work of techincal education at the earliest possible moment.

While it is clearly impossible to organize and open the School of Technology in October, 1912, the University authorities have decided to take the first step at once. There are now in the University courses of instruction which are essential to technology. Properly qualified students planning to enter the School of Technology, when it is organized, will be admitted in October, 1912. They are advised the regular entrance examinations of the University. Those unable to meet the entrance requirements in full, but who pass satisfactory examinations in English, in Mathematics or Latin and in French or German, will be admitted to such courses as they are prepared to enter. (See catologue of the College of Arts and Sciences, 1912, page 60.) In order to enable worthy and deserving students to enter the courses preliminary to technical education this year, the University has also determined to offer to a limited number of young men in Maryland temporary or special scholarships providing free tuition. The temporary scholarships will be purely vountary on the part of the University and will not be the scholarships provided by the law establishing the Technical School. The holders of these special scholarships, however, may be eligible to compete later on for the regular scholarships as provided in the law. The special scholarships will be good for one year. It will be obviously difficult to apportion them on any systematic basis. It is suggested, therefore, that any young man in the State whose preliminary education is such as to qualify him to take the special courses referred to, and who desires to enter the University in the fall of 1912, shall communicate with the Registrar of the University and receive from him the necessary blank form of application. In case the candidate wishes to apply for a scholarship, he should give his reasons and state all the facts bearing upon the matter. In September the application will be considered on its merits.

The Spraying of Tomatoes.

The growing of tomatoes for canning purposes seems to be on the increase in many sections of the State. The crop is a profitable one when properly grown and cared for. It does not pay for the trouble of handling when only three or four tons are produced, per acre.

The blighting of a large amount of foliage of the plants just before ripening of the fruit is very common and causes severe losses in many patches. This disease is common through out the State, its rapid development being depedent upon favorable conditions.

As Blight may be expected to develop in any patch, precautions should be taken to prevent it, as far as possible.

All patches should be sprayed once or twice with Bordeaux Mixture, (4 lbs. Stone Lime, 4 lbs. Copper Sulphate (Blue Vitrol, to 50 gal. water). This is a safe preventive and is a very inexpensive remedy.

It has been shown time and again that this treatment is very beneficial and will prevent tomatoes from being badly attacked by this disease. Spray now. It is too late after the disease appears.

The Maryland Agricultural College and Experiment Station will be glad to conduct some demonstration spraying for this disease in any part of the county. All persons who would desire to cooperate in the treatment of this crop, should immediately communicate with the undersigned. It is also desired to conduct demonstrations in packing of apples, peaches, etc., and in spraying of late potatoes for Blight.

No Fiery Hell for the Wicked.

To the Editor of The Republican.

By unanimous action of July 8th the International Bible Students' Association, in convention in Washington, D. C., adopted a resolution unreservedly repudiating as thoroughly unscriptural the teaching of a place, state or condition of "hell fire and brimstone for the torment of the wicked."

The 4,000 delegates resolved that the vast majority of Protestant ministers have privately repudiated the "hell fire" theory, but hesitated fully to inform their congregations, thus driving thousands into skepticism.

The convention appealed to every minister to publish over his signature whether he believed the Bible taught the doctrine of a literal "hell fire. The question was brought up by Brig.-Gen. William P. Hall, U. S. A. The resolution was presented by Dr. L. E. Smith, Louisville.

HAVE ARRANGED THE PROGRAM.

For Biennial Epworth League Convention at Elkins Next Week.

The program for the biennial Epworth league convention to be held at Elkins July 23 to 25 has just been completed by Rev. Sterling J. Miller, president of the organization, of Parkersburg, and Jesse Shimp, secretary, of Mannington. A large number of Epworth league workers from different parts of the state are expected to attend the convention.

The program includes Bible lectures by the famous Bible scholar, Dr. J. E. Turner, president of the American Bible University, of Rossmoyne, Ohio, and by Dr. Carl G. Doney, president of the West Virginia Wesleyan college, Buckhannon. Prohibition addresses will be delivered by Dr. T. M. Hare, of Charleston, and Judge A. Z. Blair, of Portsmouth, Ohio. The music for the three days session will be conducted by Rev. Claude E. Goodwin, of Mannington, the greatest pastor singer in West Virginia.

All of the district superintendents, many pastors and a number of prominent laymen will take part on the program, including the following:—Revs. S. K. Arbuthnot, G. D. Smith, L. E. Resseger, F. S. Townshend, J. W. Engle, W. D. Reed, G. W. Bent, Sterling J. Miller, W. B. King, O. M. Pullen, S. B. Hart, Roy McCuskey, Arthur Lazenby, L. B. Bowers, J. E. Bird, J. E. Wells, Samuel C. Jones, B. H. J. T. Hickman, Ex-President N. F. Kendall, Messrs. T. S. Boyd, Jesse Shimp, W. C. B. Moore, J. B. McMillen, Ira W. Davis, S. T. Spears, John Warner, Kirk King and Mrs. S. J. Beall, Wheeling.

There are 70 senior chapters and 55 junior chapters in the conference making a total memership of 9,027. Each chapter is entitled to one delegate for each 40 members, and one additional delegate for every two-third fraction thereof. There will be large delegations from each district, especially from the Wheeling, Morgantown and Oakland districts.

Elkins leaguers are preparing to give a royal reception and offer delightful entertainment to all delegates and their friends.

Plans for New Lutheran Church at Grantsville.

The plans for the new Lutheran church of Grantsville are now under way. At a business meeting to be held at the close of the next church service in two weeks, a building committee will be appointed by the congregation to procure the services of an architect and attend to all the preliminary business of the church building plan. Forms will be sent out by the pastor this week to be filled in by each member stating just what amount each one can give toward the new church, plans for the raising of funds will be adopted and everything done in their power by the members to raise the necessary funds for this worthy cause. When the requisite amount is raised the names of all contributors whether members or not, will be printed with the full amount given by each. While no outside assistance has been solicited as yet, several contributions have already come in from interested parties, and the proceeds of the oyster supper and lawn fete amounting to over $125 is drawing interest at the First State Bank. A careful estimate of the kind of church the Lutheran people want will bring the cost in the neighborhood of $6,000, and as, aside from the late Mrs. Sarah Broadwater's bequest of $1,5000 and the few afore-mentioned contributions, there is no ready money in the treasury, it is needless to say that there will be something doing among the Lutheran people of Grantsville in the way of raising money within the next eighteen months, the time stipulated in the will of the deceased benefactress. One finds, however, that "where there is a will there is always a way," and God willing, with a few years hard work and some sacrifices, of course—for anything that is worth gaining is worth making a sacrifice for—and the hearty cooperation of all the members, what has long been a cherished dream of every Lutheran heart will become a beautiful reality, a credit to the town and a lasting memorial to its builders.—Meyersdale Republican.

NATIONAL ROAD BEING REPAIRED

That Portion From Johnson's to State Line Being Put in Good Condition.

Concerning the improvements now being made on the old National Road from Johnson's, four miles west of Frostburg, to the Pennsylvania State line, a distance of about eighteen miles, the Frostburg correspondent of the Cumberland Daily Times contributed the following to his paper on Monday of this week:

"No more important improvements to the old National Pike have been undertaken in recent years than that now in progress from Johnson's to the State Line beyond Grantsville. The work is being done under the supervision of Mr. George G. Townsend, a most competent engineer of this city and road-builder, whose excellent work is to be found in many sections of the county. Mr. Townaend has secured the services of Mr. James Crump, also an experienced road builder, who has a large number of men making the road ready for the laying of the macadam. The work will be pushed as rapidly as the weather will permit. Many teams are employed in the work and Mr. Crump is increasing the force of men as fast as they apply. Culverts and small bridges, of which there are many, are being placed ahead of the grading and surfacing gangs.

"From Cumberland to Johnson's, four miles west of Frostburg, the old National highway has been put in splendid condition under the State Road Commission, but the long stretch of mountainous road between Johnson's and the Pennsylvania State Line beyond Grantsville, has been in a most shameful state of repair for many years. It was almost impossible at certain seasons of the year for farmers west of Frostburg to reach this city with their farm products without accident often entailing great expense in repairing their wagons. Autoists using the road say it is the worst public road in the country. Its neglected condition has been the subject of severe criticism since good roads have become such a great public necessity. That this old National highway between the East and the West, with its traditional history, so closely connected with that of the Nation, with its beautiful scenery and attractive towns and cities through which it passes, should be allowed by Maryland to fall into such disgrace, was beyond the understanding of those passing over this section of the road from other States where good roads are the rule and not the exception.

"This is the age of good roads and the old National pike with its treasured memories will in time not far distant come into its own as a favorite overland route between the great East and West. It is bound to become the great pleasure highway of the future. By the improvement of this section of the old pike Maryland is completing its claim to the best good roads system in the United States, taking it all in all."

Urias D. Yoder.

Urias D. Yoder, a well known farmer and highly esteemed man in the community, died at his home near Grantsville, Md., on Sunday, July 7th. Death was due to cancer of the stomach after a long period of suffering. He was born near Summit Mills, Pa., about 59 years ago, but the greater part of his married life was spent near Grantsville. He is survived by a widow and six children—three sons, Saul, Albert and John U., of Grantsville, and three daughters, Mrs. Lydia Petersein, Mrs. Lena Hostetler and Mrs. Susan Zook, all of near Meyersdale.

He is also survived by six brothers—Solomon D., Moses D., John D., Daniel D., Jacob D. and Jonas D. Yoder—all sons of the late David Yoder who was one of the prominent farmers of Elk Lick township for many years. Urias D. Yoder was a man of noble character and one of the best farmers in Garrett county. He was sometimes known as the "Apple King" on account of his large and well kept orchard. He also specialized on throughbred poultry and Jersey cattle. In fact he had few equals in this section as a horticulturist, poultry fancier, stockraiser and general farmer. His death so soon after the prime of life is a distinct loss to the community.

Mr. Yoder had been complaining of intestinal trouble for the past year or two. Last fall he and his wife went tn Lancaster, Pa., where both took treatment of some eminent specialists. Mr. Yoder returned home feeling better, but soon relapsed again and his condition grew steadily worse until death relieved his suffering.

He was a lifelong faithful member of the Amish Mennonite church. The funeral service was held at the Niverton church at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning, Rev. Lewis M. Beachy of Aurora, W. Va., officiating. Interment was in the Niverton cemetery.

Rev. T. D. Richards, of Germantown, Md., a former director in the Mountain Lake Park Association, spent a few days this week at the Park, coming to Oakland Tuesday afternoon and leaving for his home at Germantown the same evening.

Rev. Shaw, a few years ago rector of the Parish of St. Matthew's, with his residence in Oakland, but at present stationed in Mount Savage, Allegany county, is spending a few days in Oakland, being joined here yesterday afternoon by his son, Mr. Harry Shaw.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ellithorpe, of Bittinger, Md., were in Meyersdale Monday in Mr. Ellithorp's new Ford automobile that he purchased from Diefenbach & Son. George Diefenbach accompanied them as chauffeur. Diefenbach & Son have sold five Fords so far this season.—Meyersdale Republican

At Mannington, West Va., fire on Monday morning destroyed about $150,000 worth of property, among the losers being Mr. Fred. Barlow, brother of Mrs. J. M. Stanton, who is remembered by many Oakland people when he conducted a cigar factory here a few years ago. Mr. Barlow's loss amounted to quite a sum.

Mr. Thomas Harne, for many years past engaged in the express business in Oakland, was taken suddenly ill several days ago and fearful that he was about to be stricken with typhoid fever, he was compelled to relinquish his business and take to his bed. At present he is somewhat improved and hopes to be out by the end of the week.

Mr. Frank E. Rathbun, who will actively assume the duties of his new position, that of County Superintendent, on Thursday, August 1st, went to Accident yesterday where he is conducting the teachers' examination. The examination here is being conducted by Mr. Browning, while Capt. R. R. Sanner has charge of the examination at Grantsville.

Prof. George M. Perdew, of Cumberland, well known to a large number of Garrett countians was on Monday of this week unanimously chosen assistant county superintendent of the Allegany county public schools by the School Commissioners of Allegany county. Prof. Perdrew has been connected with the Allegany county schools for a long number of years and is at present principal of the Centre street public school at Cumberland.

Last Sunday, the closing day of the great campmeeting at Mountain Lake Park, was a day long to be remembered by those who attended the services that were held throughout the day. In the morning at ten o'clock Bishop Joseph F. Berry, the ablest exponent of Bible truths in the Bishorpric of the Methodist Episcopal church, preached to a vast throng of people who had gathered from all parts of the country to hear him. In the afternoon at three o'clock District Superintendent W. D. Reed of Oakland, preached to a crowed house, which was followed an hour later with a song and praise service. At night the meeting closed amid general rejoicing.

PORTION OF OAKLAND WAS INUNDATED THURSDAY NIGHT

Which Caused Condierable Loss to Merchants and The Municipality.

Wilson Creek, the little stream that flows through Oakland, passing under Third and Second streets on its way to join the Little Youghiogheny, did damage amounting to fifteen hundred or two thousand dollars last Thursday night, when the flow of water was augmented to such an extent as to overflow the banks and force the water up over both Second and Third streets to a depth of two feet or more in front of The Republican building on Second street, while on Third street from the plant of the Oakland Dairy Association to Green street the road way was turned into a raging torrent, washing out the bridge leading across the stream on Wilson street, besides tearing out the boardwalk in front of the creamery property and flooding the building to a depth of four feet or more, doing considerable damage to the stock and fixtures of the plant, and washing away a number of ice cream packers and other property that was stored alongside the building.

On Second street the water rose to a depth of eighteen inches in the Oakland Bakery and in the store of Messrs. Bolden, Brown & Weimer, as well as in the restaurant of Mr. W. G. Hinebaugh. In the store room of Messrs. Dixon & Kelso the water was about six inches deep. In the Garrett National Bank building less than two inches of water found its way inside the doors as the banking officials were in the building when the water started to rise. Quick work on their part in calking the openings prevented any great volume of water entering.

The loss to the Oakland Bakery amounted to about $500 Messrs. Bolden, Brown & Weimer's loss is estimated at about $1000, while that of the others affected will amount to little or nothing.

The loss to the municipality amounts to about $500 in the washing out of the streets, damage to bridges and other property.

The cause of the sudden rise of water is attributed to a cloudburst which occurred about two miles north of Oakland. The water came down with a tremendous rush, reaching its highest level within ten minutes after the rain ceased to fall.

NOTICE TO DELINQUENT TAX-PAYERS.

Taxpayers who are delinquent for their 1910 and 1911 taxes are notified to make settlement of the same at once, otherwise I will be compelled to advertise and make the money in the manner prescribed by law, much as I may regret to do so. Orders are coming in daily from the County Commissioners' office which must be met and in order to do so I must have the money on hand. Attorneys and agents for non-residents and those having any interests in the unpaid taxes due upon lands and property are also notified to look to their interests.

This is positively the last notice to delinquents. ROBERT L. FRIES, Late Treasurer.

WANTED—Salesman for Oakland, Md., and Bayard, W. Va., and surrounding territory. Permanent position for a reliable party. Address, Grand Union Tea Co., 25 Baltimore St., Cumberland, Md. 20-3t

The automobile owned and driven by Mr. Stanhope Scott, of Terra Alta, was upset at the base ball grounds in Mountain Lake Paak last Sunday afternoon when the machine failed to negotiate the sharp turn at the corner of the ball grounds. The machine contained besides Mr. Scott, Mrs. Scott and their children, one of whom was slightly injured by its head striking a stone when the machine turned over. An hour's work on the part of the owner and a number of others who gathered about placed the car back on the road. It was but slightly damaged.

In the happenings of forty years ago the Cumberland News on Tuesday reproduced an account of "a brakeman named Wilson who was found missing from his post on the rear end of a westbound train. The following day the missing man was picked up about five miles from Oakland in an insensible condition, and unable to give any account of himself, but it was supposed that he was struck by a bridge as the train passed under it. The man was from Prince George's county, in this state, and had only been employed on the road for a few weeks."

WANTED—A young man who is a hustler, sober and reliable as a partner in the hotel business. Have finest property proposition in Western Maryland. No competition in the hotel business; have a fine cafe and an up-to-date hotel. I have too much business for myself and must have somebody to take part of the the responsibility. I am doing a $35,000 per year business and would prefer to have a man from the country as a partner. One-half interest in the business and the property $3,200. If have not all cash, would consider property or farm land. (Guarantee your money back in one year.) Write Owner, Box 7, Hancock, Md.

TYPHOID LURKS IN WELLS.

United States Geological Survey Issues Reprint of Report on "Underground Waters for Farm Use."

The rural sections, long considered ideal so far as concerns the health of their inhabitants, have been dealt a blow by physician investigators who maintain that two-thirds of the cases of typhoid fever in the city owe their origin to insanitary conditions in the country and to polluted water supplies.

Farms, which are generally remote from towns, cities, or other areas of congested population, would seen to be almost ideally situated for obtaining pure and wholesome water, but in reality polluted water is exceedingly common on them and typhoid-fever rates are usually greater in country districts than in cities. Typhoid fever is now almost universally believed to be transmitted solely through drink or food taken into the stomach, and is especially liable to be communicated by polluted waters obtained from shallow wells near spots where the discharges of typhoid patients have been thrown upon the ground and subsequently carried down through the soil and to the wells, and it is doubtless principally this fact that accounts for the disease being so common in farming regions.

On a great many farms the well is located at a point that may be convenient to the dwelling, without any regard for the possibility of the pollution of the well water through seepage from barn or cesspool or through the circulation of water underground. Information relating to the underground movement of water is particularly valuable, and on this account the United States Geological Survey is distributing a report on the subject—Water-Supply Paper 225—"Underground Waters for Farm Use," by Myron L. Fuller. The demand for this publication has necessitated a third reprint. A copy of the report may be obtained by addressing the Director of the Survey at Washington, D. C.

ST. SWITHIN'S DAY "IF IT DOTH RAIN"

For Forty Days It Will Remain, According To Ancient Legend.

St. Swithin was a Bishop who lived long years ago,
They buried him as he had wished, with common folks and low.
But when they dug him up again, the weather it got shockin'
The sky grew black and a rain came on that was 40 days in stoppin'.

So, as Monday was St. Swithin's Day, if it rained before 12 o'clock you can put it down that all danger of a drought during the rest of the summer is over.

That is, if you believe in old legends and portents. The story that it will rain for 40 days if a single drop falls on St. Swithin's Day has been handed down from generation to generation for centuries, and so firmly is the legend embedded in the life of English-speaking people that has been dignified by being classed with Anglo Saxon folk-lore. Doubtless there are as many who confidently expect 40 days of weepy skies after a rain on St. Swithin's as there are those who entertain no doubts as to six weeks of bad winter weather following the terror experienced by the ground hog at the sight of his shadow on the day he wakes from his winter nap.

St. Swithin was an Englishman, so the myth affirms, who lived in the Ninth Century, A. D. In 852 he was made Bishop of Winchester, which, after Canterbury, is the most ancient see in England. During the reigns of King Egbert and King Ethelwolf Bishop Swithin held the chancellorship, but despite his high office and with extraordinary modesty he made a request that when he died he be buried with the rank and file, rather than in the chancel of his church, which he considered too holy for his bones to rest in.

Well, at last the Bishop passed away; his wish was followed and he was buried in Winchester Churchyard. But later on the body was disinterred (971) and buried in the chancel. At this disregard of the good man's request nature got her back up and a storm came on that showed no signs of abating until 40 days had passed.

Thus the legendary account. Historical records of that remote period make no mention of this unusual state of affairs, and there is nothing to show that the weather sages of the day either predicted the phenomenon or made a note of it, like Cap'n Cuttle, after it had happened.

But, that, who wants any dry, unimaginative old historical facts flung into his face when there is a nice, picturesque legend at hand?

INJURY FROM HESSIAN FLY

Dates for Sowing Wheat in Different Parts of State.

The Hessian Fly has caused more or less severe injury in all parts of the State the past season. In some cases it has reduced the crop of wheat from 25 to 50 per cent.

The general increase of the pest makes it necessary for farmers to exercise every care in preventing, as far as possible, severe injury another year.

The insect passes the summer in the wheat stubble. Where not interfering with clover the stubble should be burnt over. No volunteer wheat should be allowed to grow during the summer. Rotation of crops is very beneficial.

On farms where the pest has been serious, narrow plats of wheat should be sowed in late summer about September 1st to 10th, depending on locality, as baits for the Fly. Later, this can be plowed down.

From observations and records, considering the latitude and altitude at the various points, wheat should not be sowed in the surrounding country of the following cities and towns of the State before the dates given:

Oakland	Sept. 12th-19th
Hagerstown	Oct. 1st-7th
Frederick	October 3rd-10th
Westminster	Sept, 28th-Oct 5th
Rockville	October 2nd-8th
Germantown	" 2nd-8th
Ellicott City	" 2nd-9th
La Plata	" 9th-16th
Cockeysville	" 3rd-10th
Bel Air	" 2nd-9th
Elkton	" 2nd-9th
Chestertown	" 6th-13th
Easton	" 9th-16th
Salisbury	" 10th-17th

Dates of sowing for adjoining sections to the above can be figured by moving forward the date of sowing one day for each one-quarter degree latitude North, and one day for each 100 feet gain in altitude from a given point.

A wet August and September may cause an early disappearance of the Fly. While a protracted fall droth and warm weather may cause a later disappearance.

The adoption of a uniform, safe period for sowing wheat in each locality by all the farmers is of the greatest importance.

This subject should be discussed at farmers' meetings and united effort secured to reduce the injury from this pest of our most important staple crop.

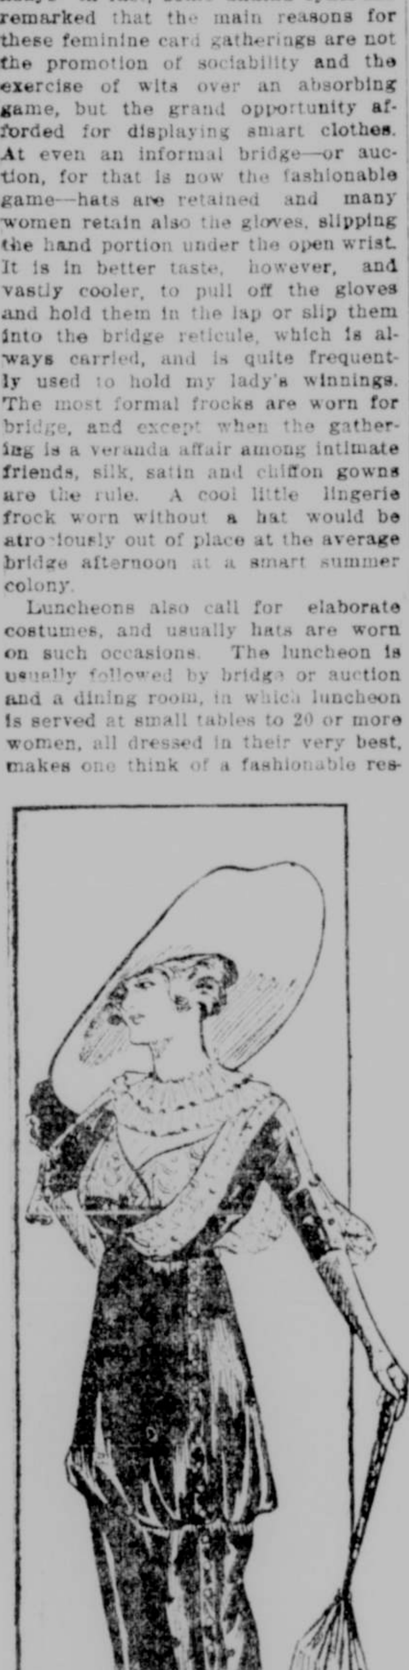
LUNCHEON and BRIDGE GOWNS for SUMMER

PARIS.—No matter how well supplied one may be with summer outing togs, with snappy motoring and traveling dresses, with charming lace frocks for piazza wear and with trig linen and dimity dresses for morning use, one or two grand toilettes will be necessary if there is to be any participation in ceremonious summer functions.

Women dress very formally for afternoon bridge and auction parties nowadays—in fact, some unkind cynic has remarked that the main reasons for these feminine card gatherings are not the promotion of sociability and the exercise of wits over an absorbing game, but the grand opportunity afforded for displaying smart clothes. At even an informal bridge—or auction, for that is now the fashionable game—hats are retained and many women retain also the gloves, slipping the hand portion under the open wrist. It is in better taste, however, and vastly cooler, to pull off the gloves and hold them in the lap or slip them into the bridge reticule, which is always carried, and is quite frequently used to hold my lady's winnings. The most formal frocks are worn for bridge, and except when the gathering is a veranda affair among intimate friends, silk, satin and chiffon gowns are the rule. A cool little lingerie frock worn without a hat would be atrociously out of place at the average bridge afternoon at a smart summer colony.

Luncheons also call for elaborate costumes, and usually hats are worn on such occasions. The luncheon is usually followed by bridge or auction and a dining room, in which luncheon is served at small tables to 20 or more women, all dressed in their very best, makes one think of a fashionable restaurant at tea hour. June weddings, taking place at noon or soon thereafter, demand the most ceremonious gowns, worn with hats and accompanied by faultless accessories in the way of gloves, boots and parasol. This summer the long embroidered silk gloves are favored with even more formal costumes, and indeed some of these beautiful gloves are quite as exquisite as kid—and are many times cooler and more comfortable. One can stand a lined frock with a snug, high collar on a torrid day if one's gloves are of cool silk; but kid gloves with a ceremonious costume, on a day when the humidity is high, seem the last straw in misery and discomfort. The embroidered silk gloves come now in charming colorings and the embroideries are so delicate and so artistically done that there is no harsh contrast of tones, the embroidered fabric having the silken richness of brocade. Pale biscuit colored gloves are more fashionable than white with silk, voile and chiffon costumes and usually such gloves have embroidery in the same color.



Plaitings in High Order.

Paris has gone mad over plaitings this season, and already, at the races, are appearing plaited skirts in various styles. Tunics, plaited into the waistline, are draped up, at the knee, in pannier effect and there are skirts with plaited flounces that are particularly graceful. One of these, seen at Longchamps during April, had two deep plaited flounces, broken in front by a narrow, straight panel, just at one side of the center. On this panel were tiny crystal buttons placed close together and the smart little satin boots matching the costume had also crystal buttons. There are plaited bows on hats and plaited sashes and eve naccordion plaited taffeta skirts, set on deep yokes and so constructed that in spite of the plaits the figure lines are as frankly revealed as in the most extreme "hobble" skirt.

Coat of Contrasting Colors.

Another feature of ceremonious dress in Paris now is the coat of contrasting color. A few of these are appearing over here, and several smart costumes of this type are being made up by the dressmakers for June weddings. The coat may be of white brocade over a black skirt; or it may be of some contrasting color. A very charming costume of this sort, designed by a great French house, has a coat of embroidered blue taffeta over a skirt of darker blue whipcord. At the back of the coat, which is cutaway and short in style, is a very long coattail finished at the end with fringe. This swings to the edge of the skirt. Curiously, the contrasting coat is always lighter, and not darker than the skirt, and this gives an effect which until one becomes accustomed to it, is rather bizarre. A suit of this sort by Callot was observed at Longchamps. The coat was of white satin brocade with jet buttons and a black satin collar. The skirt was of black satin, slashed at the front over a white satin panel on which were also jet buttons. The white hat had a huge black paradise aigrette and the boots were the now popular magpie affairs—of patent leather with white kid tops, having black buttons. These magpie boots have not been taken up enthusiastically by the better class of American women who prefer the black satin boot with buttons of crystal or pearl; or the buttoned boot of white buckskin with dressy afternoon costumes. These summer boots are particularly light, dainty and charming, and in them the foot looks trim and aristocratic.

Green With Black.

Callot Soeurs are using a deal of bright emerald green with black this summer and one of their ceremonious bridge costumes has a coat of emerald green satin over a black satin skirt with an emerald green draped pannier. The black skirt has jet buttons set down the front and the dashing little green coat is trimmed with bands of black chantilly lace. This is certainly striking, but because the colors are managed with Callot genius the effect is wonderfully pleasing and chic. White satin coat and skirt suits, and frocks of white satin, made in rather simple tailored effects, to distinguish them from evening gowns, are being taken up by smart women for bridge and luncheon wear. Of course these white satin costumes are accompanied by very smart hats in black and white or some pleasing color and the parasol matches the hat. This gives desirable contrast. White buttoned boots or buttoned oxfords are always worn with such costumes.

Lingerie gowns of lace and embroidery are permissible for ceremonious summer wear, if accompanied by the right sort of accessores. Touches of black velvet or colored chiffon add distinction to these gowns and make them more formal, and they are always mounted, for this use, over slips of satin or thin silk.

Our illustration shows a gown of black taffeta with the skirt draped in the pannier effect. It is fastened at the side with buttons, and left open at the hem to show a ball of lace. This same lace drapes the bodice and sleeves.

BLACK IS FAVORED IN PARIS

Women There Are Discarding the Season's Beautiful Colorings For Day and Evening Wear.

There were never more beautiful colorings than those prepared for us this season but for some inexplicable reason the capricious Parisienne is discarding them all and adopting black for day and evening wear. A gorgeous frock was worn one night this week by a pretty and slim woman, and it had no touch of color in it. It consisted of a white satin underdress made, for once, without a train, that fell perfectly straight and plain and was very, very narrow at the foot. From the hem to about the height of the knees, this dress was embroidered with single flowers dropped lightly here and there in black chenille. Where these sprigs ended there were a number of small bright jet nails sprinkled very lightly round the skirt. Over this was a short round tunic of black ninon that was gathered at waist and hem in fairly full folds. It was edged with swansdown, and the decolletage had its blackness relieved by a few of the same jet nails and a very narrow strip of the swansdown. The toilette proved once more what striking effects can be achieved with black and white.

For Tourists.

Those who are contemplating a trip abroad this summer and desire to save expense will find the following hint of great help.

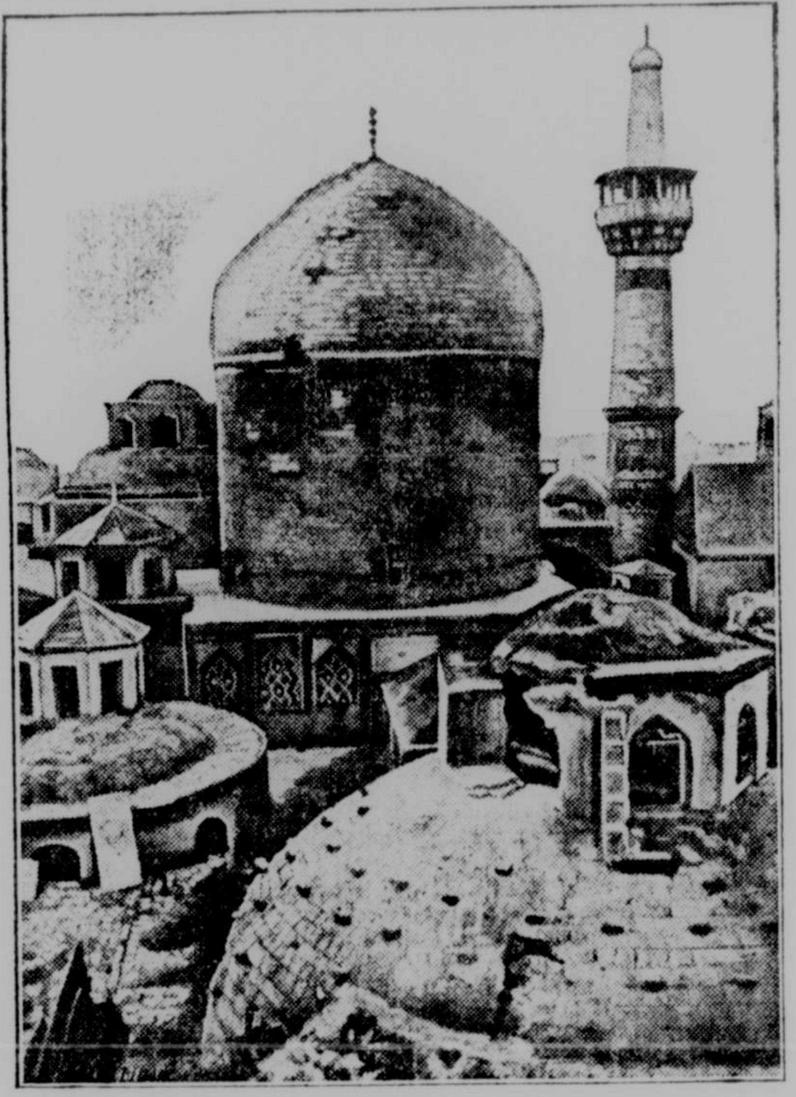
When touring from place to place it often becomes a difficult matter to have laundry done properly.

Underwear made of cotton crepe beautifully solves this problem.

It may be washed in your room, and as it does not require ironing, it saves expense. Combinations, night-gowns and blouses, all may be made of cotton crepe.

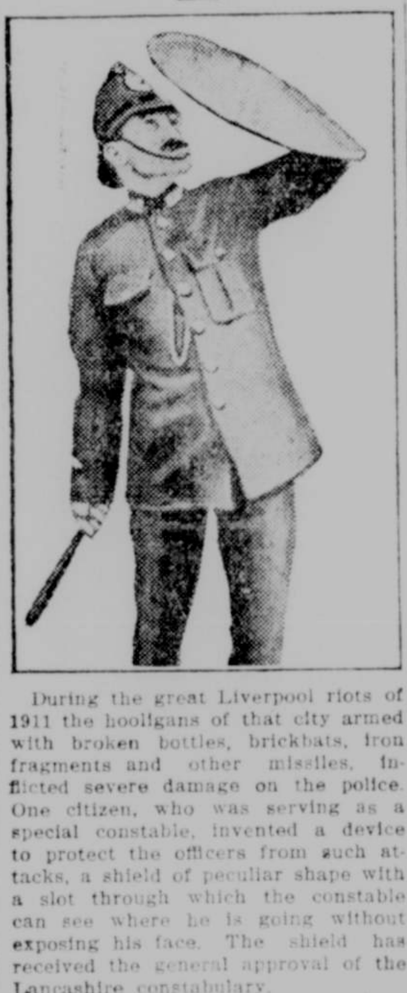
If you follow this suggestion, you will not regret having done so.

Mosque Damaged In War



When the Russian troops invaded the province of Khorassan, in northeast Persia, they attacked Meshed and bombarded the famous and historical mosque containing the tomb of Iman Riza, son of Ali and founder of the Shiites. The golden dome of the mosque was badly damaged by the Russian shells.

SHIELDS FOR THE POLICE



During the great Liverpool riots of 1911 the hooligans of that city armed with broken bottles, brickbats, iron fragments and other missiles, inflicted severe damage on the police. One citizen, who was serving as a special constable, invented a device to protect the officers from such attacks, a shield of peculiar shape with a slot through which the constable can see where he is going without exposing his face. The shield has received the general approval of the Lancashire constabulary.

SWAPS HIS WIFE FOR HORSE

Members of the Jackot colony, poor whites descended from a Frenchman who settled at Lakeville, Mass., before the Revolution, are indignant over the action of the state police in preventing the exchange of the wife of one of the leading Jackots for a horse. The Jackots would rather barter than eat. A patriarch had indulged his propensity of swapping until he had nothing left but his clothing and his wife. In exchange for a horse he gave his wife to his brother. The horse was worth five dollars. Twelve hours later the patriarch swapped the horse for another horse. His brother took the woman to Brooklyn, and his efforts to swap her for anything of equal value attracted the attention of the police. They made the patriarch take his wife back, but the brother protested that the exchange was made in good faith.

THOUGHT SHE WAS OUTLAWED

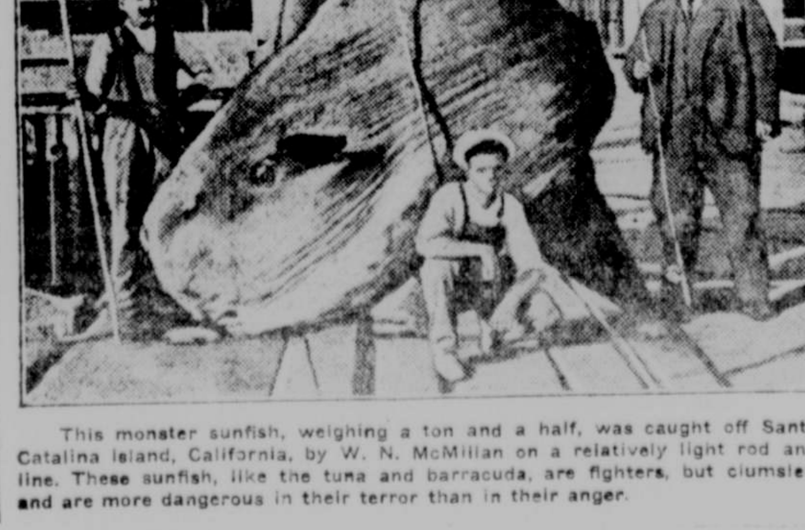
Firm in the belief that the statute of limitations had run out and nullified his first marriage in Georgia 40 years ago, Peter K. Thompson, 75 years old, married a second time at Savannah the other day. His bride was Mrss. Ann Colenia Wilson, aged 68. The couple had known each other in their youth, but each married some one else.

Thompson disappeared after the war and did not return until last winter. His first wife, believing him dead, had remarried, so he decided to marry again. He told the minister who performed the ceremony that his first marriage had been nullified through the statute of limitations. The solicitor general says, while Thompson apparently has committed bigamy, he will not be proceeded against unless some one comes forward to prosecute the case.

"COST OF LIVING" IN ZOO

Even London's "zoo" is not free from the pressing problem of the increased cost of living, for the annual report says that an "increase in the total cost of provisions is due partly to increase in price and partly to additional quantities" of certain foods. The year's housekeeping accounts included: 183 tons meat, 20,000 lbs. potatoes, 61,000 lbs. whiting, 16 tons biscuits, 1,500 pints shrimps, 7,000 sparrows, 113,000 bananas, 177 loads hay, 11,000 oranges, 32 cwt. rice, 4,000 lbs. grapes, 36,000 eggs.

Giant Sun-Fish of California



This monster sunfish, weighing a ton and a half, was caught off Santa Catalina island, California, by W. N. McMillan on a relatively light rod and line. These sunfish, like the tuna and barracuda, are fighters, but clumsier, and are more dangerous in their terror than in their anger.

"Heart, Throbs and Things"

By M. J. Phillips

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"What can I do for you, ma'am?" John Wilkie, editor of the Trenton Twice-a-Week Tidings, left the typewriter where he was hammering out an editorial, and approached the high counter. John was undoubtedly homely, with a knobby, angular frame, and untidy hair. He wore thick glasses and a white shirt that always had a smear of printer's ink somewhere about it.

"You might put me to work," answered the visitor with a smile, as she drew off her gloves. I am E. L. Kimball."

"You are? I thought E. L. Kimball was a man."

E. L. Kimball shook her head. "Your ad. did not specify; you simply asked for a typesetting machine operator. But if I'm not satisfactory—"

"Oh, you are," John assured her. "If you can run the thing, that's all I care about." Inwardly, however, he was in a panic.

The prospect of having a pretty young woman around the place was a disquieting one. John, despite his downright manner and his matter-of-fact appearance, was very bashful.

E. L. Kimball — he discovered presently the "E" stood for Edith—fitted in perfectly. She not only turned out an incredible amount of work on the machine, but picked up news, and kept a supervisory eye on the "devil," an ink-spattered youth, whose idea of tidying was very elementary. In three months John was wondering what he ever did without her.

One day he stared out at the street and faced a startling fact: He was in love with Miss Kimball!

It rose like a mountain peak above the level plain of his existence, detached from its drab surroundings. In no sense was it part of them. He could not see how it would ever become a part of them. He was, he candidly admitted, an alarmingly homely man. Binnsley, the bank clerk, and Tom Roper, the grocer, who had already paid Miss Kimball some attention, were away above his class when it came to personal appearnce.

John Turned Deathly Pale.

So musing, he attacked his morning mail. The second envelope which he slit open contained an appeal for help from a country youth whose "girl" had discarded him for a better-favored rival. The other young man, said the writer plaintively, had taken her to the last two church "soshuls;" they frequently went "bugy-ridin'" together, and they "giggled" when they passed him. He signed himself "Hartbroken," and wanted to know what he should do about it.

Smiling grimly, John adjusted a sheet of copy paper in the typewriter, and wrote one of those biting, quizzical paragraphs which was giving the "Tidings" a reputation throughout the state.

He reflected complacently there would be others "giggling" at "Hartbroken" and his plight. Then he sent the letter marked, "Don't change," and his comment, up the copy-chute to Miss Kimball.

When the next proof came down for correction, John blinked behind his glasses. "Hartbroken's" letter had been altered as to language, spelling and punctuation; and the editor's flippant comment had not been set. Instead, there were a few words of kindly, sympathetic advice. Poor "Hartbroken" was transformed from a gawk to be laughed at to a shy youth who suffered.

At the bottom of the proof the operator had added a sentence of her own. "He appealed to you for advice; it won't be right to make him a laughing-stock."

Wilkie rumpled his hair thoughtfully, corrected the proof, and wrote "O. K., J. W.," below Miss Kimball's note. Then he smiled sheepishly, sent the proof up the chute, and slapped himself three times on the red, bony wrist.

"Heartbroken" was really responsible for the "Tidings'" most popular column. Miss Kimball evolved it, mothered it, and kept it alive. The country youth's letter had evidently touched a hidden spring in Trenton, for missives from the lovelorn came in a steady trickle after that.

John turned them all over to the operator; he didn't want to continue slapping his own wrist. She gave the perplexed advice.

Conniving with the foreman, she set an attractive box head, "Heart-Throbs and Things." She filled a column with the letters and her answers, with paragraphs she clipped and wrote, and with some of John's snappy editorial squibs. Launched in the "Tidings," it made an unmistakable hit. John, who had been waiting the chance, raised her salary.

Winter deepened. So did John's love for Edith Kimball. He longed to take her in his arms and kiss away her capable, self-reliant air, to pet and tease and adore her out of the status of a valued employe into that of wife and comrade. Many times he started upstairs, grimly determined to take her busy, dimpled hand off the keyboard and say masterfully, "Put on your hat; we're going to be married!"

An inspiration came to him one evening as he smoked in his office after hours. He selected a cheap, plain envelope from his stock of samples, put on his hat and hurried to the office of Bob Sears, a young lawyer with whom he was friendly. There he cut the business card off one of Bob's letterheads and wrote an appeal to the "Heart-Throbs Editor."

"Dear sir," he wrote, "I am a young man of twenty-one and I am very much in love with a young lady who works in the same place I do. I am not at all good-looking, and there are several paying her attention that are, so I fear she does not regard me favorably. I feel that I would make her a good husband, but am afraid to ask her to marry me, as I do not know that she cares anything for me. What would you advise me to do?" He signed "Nathan" and mailed the missive in the plain, typewritten envelope in a train that passed through Trenton at midnight.

When it came back to him a day later decorated with foreign postmarks and addressed to "Heart-Throbs," he sent it guiltily up the chute without opening. Then he fidgeted like a schoolgirl until the long, slim galley proof brought it back in type with Edith's comment attached:

"A true woman does not care for beauty in a man; don't let lack of it worry you. I infer from your letter you are diffident, and have not shown that you care for her. Until you do, she will not cheapen herself by expressing any preference."

John heaved a long sigh and wiped his moist forehead. When the issue containing his letter had been out two days, long enough to reach the mythical "Nathan," he wrote another letter, the gist of which was: "Would you advise me to put my fate to the test? How shall I ask her?"

They were late that week with the second issue of the "Tidings," and Edith was working evenings to catch up. It was eight o'clock Thursday night when the answer came down along with other "Heart-Throbs" stuff: "The editor of 'Heart-Throbs' refuses to propose for you. If you really care for the young woman, you will muster courage enough to ask her."

John turned deathly pale; his lank jaw dropped. Suddenly the air of the office was stifling. He jerked off his coat and rolled up the sleeves of his shirt.

In two minutes he had rolled down his sleeves and put on his coat. He closed the stove, wiped his wet face with his handkerchief, and then noiselessly he opened the rear door of the office and headed for the stairway.

With his foot on the first step he shivered and returned, panic-stricken, to the office. He corrected the proof and sent that up. He rumpled his hair with both hands, as if trying to force a decision into his brain. That seemed to be effective, for with desperate haste he seized a square of copy paper and a pencil, scrawled a single sentence and sent it flying up the chute.

He heard Edith leave her machine and go to the chute; the tin carrier rustled as she took the single sheet out of it. He wiped his forehead again.

There was silence. Then the machine resumed its song. He slumped into his chair.

Another proof came down. He swept its length at a single glance. At the bottom he found what he sought, in cold, impersonal type, his sentence and her answer:

"I am coming upstairs to ask you to marry me."

"Well, I don't know how I can prevent you."

John hurried to the stairs again, went up four steps at a time, and hurried the length of the room. Edith's fingers were flitting busily over the keyboard. (She still had the line she was setting at that particular moment; it's a curiosity.) Her head was bent to the copy.

He dropped to one knee beside her low chair and smothered her in his arms. He kissed her again and again. "Darling," he cried, "I love you!"

Her arms tightened about his neck. "I've suspected so for some time—'Nathan!'" she whispered.

What the Cold Weather Did.

"Dear me," said Miss Oddways, who had just come from a long ramble in the country, "I was sorry to observe that the cold weather has killed all the pivot hedges."

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF BIBLE STUDENTS

Pastor Russell's Address at Glen Echo Park, Washington, D. C.

He Declares the Bible to Be the Only Center of Attraction and Standard of Faith—Four Thousand Representatives Present From All Parts.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Washington, D. C., July 14.—The International Bible Students Association closed a very successful eight-days' Convention at Glen Echo Park tonight. Approximately forty speakers have addressed the Convention. Pastor Russell was the principal speaker this afternoon. His text was, "But ye are come * * * to the General Assembly and Church of the First-born, which are written in Heaven."—Hebrews xii. 23.

The speaker declared that St. Paul points us back to the institution of the Jewish Law Covenant at Mt. Sinai and uses it as a picture or type of experiences of the Church to be expected at the Second Coming of Christ and the establishment of His glorious Kingdom.

St. Paul pictures the march of the Israelites from the Red Sea to Mt. Sinai, implying that some got to the mountain much in advance of the others, but waited there for the General Assembly. The Apostle points us back to the awful experiences connected with the inauguration of the Law Covenant—Mt. Sinai smoking, lightnings flashing from the cloud and thick darkness which enveloped the mountain, the earth trembling, the Voice of God heard, the people in fear.

All these things, said the Pastor, according to St. Paul, were foreshadowings of still more wonderful things to be expected in the near future in connection with the inauguration of the New Covenant. Many had misapprehended the Apostle's teaching in respect to the New Covenant and thought it already sealed and in operation. But not so. The Scriptures assure us that the work of Christ and the Church during this Age has been a preparatory one, without which the New Covenant could not go into effect.

A Time of Terrible Trouble.

Everywhere the Bible associates with the coming of Christ a great trouble upon the world and assures us that the faithful of the Church will be spared from it by their resurrection change. The plowshare of trouble will upset human pride and humble the world and make them glad to welcome the Messianic Kingdom then to be established for the purpose of bringing to Israel and to the world the long promised blessings of the New Covenant.

The introduction of this Kingdom St. Peter styles the Day-dawn. (II Peter i. 19.) He describes its work as most blessed, saying, "Times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord—He shall send forth Jesus Christ—whom the heavens must retain until the Times of Restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy Prophets since the world began."—Acts iii. 19-21.

St. Paul's interpretation of the Mt. Sinai experiences would imply a "Day of Vengeance"—the very term which the Bible uses. Society will be so shaken and its experiences will be so dreadful that, like the Israelites of old, all will be ready to entreat for the Great Mediator—The Christ, Head and Body—Jesus and His Church in glory—to stand between them and the Almighty. It will be in response to this universal cry that the Messianic Kingdom will be established and by the New Covenant take over the control of the entire world of mankind, for whom, by the grace of God, Jesus Christ tasted death.—Hebrews ii. 9.

Terrible as the squaring of the world's accounts will be preparatory to the opening of the New Dispensation with a clean page, they are rational as well as Scriptural. Humanity will be able to look up to God and acknowledge His Wisdom and Justice, and then to thank Him for the loving provision of the Messianic Kingdom, under whose beneficient reign they may be helped back to full human perfection and to a world-wide Eden.

The Church In General Assembly.

We have greatly enjoyed, dear brethren, our Convention or Assembly. But what will it be to be there—in the General Assembly of the entire elect Church of God! There will be no sectarianism there, though there doubtless will be saints of God from every sect in that Convention in Glory! Let us carry with us a sense of the realities of the glorious promises of the Bible, which, we believe, are hastening to fulfilment.

Even now, on every hand, we see the evidences of social unrest: and the wonderful blessings of our day are being received by unthankful hearts with ingratitude, breeding discontent and presaging the awful anarchy which the Bible teaches us to expect. It is a time for faithfulness to God, to His Word, on the part of all who are of "the household of faith," of every nation and denomination. It is a time for the Bride to make herself ready for the Bridegroom.

Romance in a Plain Family

By Virginia Blair

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Mrs. Bivins was warm and tired. "Nothing ever happens in this family," she said as she dished up her boiled dinner. "Things just seem to come to other people, but we get up in the morning and go to bed at night, and I sometimes think there isn't much use in it all."

Mr. Bivins waited until he had sliced the ham before he remarked: "You are the best cook in the county."

"Well, a boiled dinner doesn't require much skill," said Mrs. Bivins, but her plump figure relaxed a little. "I just wish we could have something different to eat."

"Now what has happened to upset you, mother?" Mr. Bivins asked. "It ain't just your day's work that has got you all worked up like this."

"No, it ain't," Mrs. Bivins admitted. "I got a letter from sister Jane, and they're going to get an automobile—and it just semed as if—well, as if we never had anything."

Mr. Bivins helped himself to cabbage thoughtfully. "We've got each other," he ventured.

"Of course we have," said his wife sharply, "and you know I wouldn't give you up, Thomas, for all the automobiles in the world. But, gracious, I could have you and something else, too."

Mr. Bivins cut another slice of ham. Some men would have felt hurt, but he knew his wife. It was not her husband but fate which she blamed.

When Mrs. Bivins rose from the table she pointed to the ham. "Look at all that," she moaned, "we'll have to eat and eat to make any impression on it."

"Please," said a voice from the open door. "I wish you'd let me try to make an impression on it."

The Bivinses turned, and beheld a travel-worn little creature. She had on a dust-colored coat and a dust-colored hat and a dust-colored veil, and you couldn't see the color of her hair for the dust.

"I'm starved," she said, "my automobile broke down and I've walked two miles."

She dropped into a chair, and Mrs. Bivins flew to help her.

"Why, poor lamb," she said, distractedly to her husband, "she's faint. Get a glass of water, Thomas, and I'll untie her veil."

"Please," Said a Voice From the Open Door.

Relieved from her wrappings, the little lady proved to be daintily beautiful. She had on an exquisite white gown, three diamond rings and silk stockings.

All this Mrs. Bevins told her husband while the little lady washed in the best bedroom and smoothed her hair. "And I said nothing ever happened," said the excited Mrs. Bivins, "and here comes a fairy princess right to our door, and I do believe she's running away from somebody."

"Well, now," said the amazed Mr. Bivins, "did you ever?"

The little lady at the table ate with zest. "We never have anything in town which tastes quite like a country ham, and your home-made bread and jam—oh, Mrs. Bivins, do you know I am almost starved!"

Mrs. Bivins' face shone. "Well, now," she said, "I'm sorry to have to offer you a boiled dinner."

The little lady looked at her reproachfully. "A boiled dinner——" she sair, "why, Mrs. Bivins, if you hadn't called it that I should have said it was ambrosia."

Thomas Bivins chuckled. "You see, mother," he said, "I always said you were the best cook in the country."

Mrs. Bivins held up her hand. "Hush," she said, "I hear somebody coming."

The little lady started to her feet. "Can't you say that you didn't see me——" she began, then as a tall figure loomed in the doorway she turned white and whispered: "It's too late."

"Well," he said briefly, "I've found you."

She semed to brace herself to answer. Then suddenly a smile curved her lips. She waved her hand over the table. "Come and have something to eat," she coaxed. "The ham is perfectly delicious—and oh, Georgie, you never ate such bread and jam."

Mrs. Bivins bustled forward. "I'll set a place for you."

The man hesitated, then capitulated. "Gee, but I'm hungry," he said, boyishly, and Mrs. Bivins heaped his plate.

The two old people sat together on the back porch and watched the little new moon over the tops of the trees.

Within the man said, "For heaven's sake, Beatrice, what made you do it?"

"Run away?" she asked. "Oh, Georgie, I was tired of it all. Tired of the rush and whirl—I can't stand it—I can't stand being separated from you by your clubs and my bridge parties. I made up my mind that you didn't care what I did, and so I had Otto drive me as far as the main road went, and then I left the machine and came over here, and I thought that—that if you didn't find me—I'd get something to do somewhere—and you could go on having good times—and flirting."

Her husband interrupted her with a savage exclamation.

"Stop," he said. "Did you think I could love any one but you? Don't you suppose I hate all the things that pull us apart? But a man doesn't talk about what he feels like a woman does."

Their voices floated out to the porch, where the old couple sat. Mrs. Bivins leaned forward and looked into her husband's face. "Are you like that, Thomas?" she demanded.

Her husband nodded.

"But if I had dreamed," the voice went on within, "that you were growing desperate—that you suspected me of—not caring—oh, girl, why didn't you come and tell me? Didn't you know—didn't you know—that you're mine—that no one else——"

Outside Mrs. Bivins' cheek was against her husband's coat. "I'm going to cry, Thomas," she said, and the old man took out his handkerchief and wiped her eyes gently.

A half hour later the two young people appeared in the doorway.

"Thank you so much for—your bread and jam," said the little lady, shyly.

The young man laughed joyously. "Thank you for more than that," he said. "I've caught a runaway, Mrs. Bivins, and she wants to go back with me. But we want to come again—for a week at a time, now and then. Do you think you could put us up when the whirl of town gets too much for us?"

Could she?

"I can put you up," Mrs. Bivins said, trembling with rapture, "for more than a week at a time. Thomas and I can't tell you how glad we'll be."

But she didn't know the full extent of her good fortune. For almost miraculously after that surprises came to them. Once it was a wonderful box of candy tied with pink ribbons and with a gold seal, and once it was a silk coat with a wide lace collar, and once it was a dignified hat with white lilacs under the brim.

"It just seems as if they can't do enough," said the excited Mrs. Bivins as she baked cake and roasted chickens and made little balls of cream cheese for her expected guests. "It just seems as if they couldn't do enough."

But Mr. Bivins took it calmly. "You needn't ever say that nothing ever happens now, mother," he said, contentedly; "it seems to me that these two young folks are the kind that make things happen. And they are so happy themselves that they can't be satisfied until they've made us happy, too."

HE BELONGED IN MATTEAWAN

Told What He Was Looking For In the Way of a City Apartment.

"I am looking for a flat where there's room for mother's hat and a place to put the baby when he bawls. I am searching for a place that can look me in the face when I glance up at the paper on the walls.

"I am looking for a home brighter than a catacomb, where the sun upon occasions will appear; with a parlor close at hand that will hold my baby grand without crowding on the kitchen at the rear.

"I would like a little trap where a happy married chap needn't blush because unhappily he snores, and can do it every night without thinking of the plight of the folks who live upon the upper floors.

"I would like to pass my life, with my baby and my wife, in a spot where we can talk of what we do, without fear that somebody we don't know and cannot see overhears our conversation through a flue.

"I would like a quiet spot, somewhat bigger than a slot and no smaller than a kennel or a stall, where a cook can cook a steak or a rabbit or a cake, without standing with both feet out in the hall.

"And I'd like a janitor who is not an emperor, but a man—a chap with honor in his soul; with a truly honest ring, quite above small pilfering when it comes to cream and scuttlesful of coal.

"And I want it at a rent I can pay and save a cent—say, three thousand plunks per week," he rattled on. First they thought it was a game, but just then the keeper came, and they led him sadly back to Matteawan.—Horace Dodd Gastit in Judge.

New Bridge to Be of Steel.

"The city of Cologne," writes Consul H. J. Dunlap, "has decided to build a new steel bridge over the Rhine, in place of the pontoon bridge which has been in use from time immemorial. It has not yet been determined whether the new bridge shall be built on pillars of stone or whether it shall take the suspension form, as in Budapest, Hungary. The bridge will provide for double street car tracks, general wagon traffic and foot passengers."

TEMPERANCE NOTES

STRONG AID FOR TEMPERANCE

Emperor William of Germany and Other Members of Royalty in Europe Favor Total Abstinence.

An interesting trio of facts has recently attracted the notice not only of temperance workers everywhere, but of the general public as well, showing the growing attitude of royalty toward drink and the liquor traffic in Europe.

The address made a short time ago by the Emperor William to the German students urging them to abolish beer-drinking bouts in their societies, roused widespread interest in the cause of temperance in Germany and attracted the attention of leaders in the movement in other countries. Still later, in opening the new naval academy at Meurwick, the Emperor William read an order-in-council laying stress upon the qualifications necessary to naval officers, and later speaking extemporaneously made a plea for temperance on the part of the cadets.

In his temperance talk he cautioned the cadets against excessive drinking, which he said undermined the nerves, and the strenuous naval service of today required strong nerves. He counseled total abstinence, and added impressively that "the nation which in the future used the smallest amount of alcohol would march at the head of the column on the fields of art and war."

Quite recently also, the king of Belgium attended an anti-alcoholic manifestation organized by the United Belgian Temperance societies. He listened with attention to eloquent addresses by the Catholic primate of Belgium, Monseignor Mercier, and the great French barrister, Monsieur Henry Robert. But by his own presence he did more for the popularization of teetotalism than the most eloquent speeches, as was remarked by Monsieur Robert.

Some weeks ago the future king of Sweden, Prince Gustavus, was the chief speaker in a meeting organized by Swedish Good Templars. He was pleased to take the lead in the temperance cause, he declared, and with such royal patronage it is easy to picture the rapid spread of the reform during the coming reign of this Scandinavian ruler.

A trade union secretary has the following pointed paragraph set forth in notes commenting on labor conditions in general: "A class of workmen who figure somewhat frequently on the unemployed list are the tipplers. There is no room for dram-drinkers in the workshop of the present day. The drunken workman is rigidly kept on the outside of the workshop gates, because his presence inside is a danger both to himself and others, and the tippler will soon be sent to keep him company for the same reason.

"Much is being said in certain quarters concerning the effects of intoxicating drink on the question of unemployment. No one who is acquainted with the conditions of workshop life would contend for a moment that drink has any appreciable effect on the volume of unemployment, but it is an important factor in determining who are to be employed. Other things being equal, the non-drinking, non-sporting workman has by far a better chance of finding employment, and of keeping it, than his tippling or sporting fellow."

LIQUOR AND LIFE INSURANCE

Total Abstainers in New York Company Each Year Draw Increased Dividends.

Dr. G. H. Heald, in a recent issue of "Life and Health," mentions a striking instance of the benefits of total abstinence in the matter of life insurance.

A certain life insurance company doing business in New York, he states, has since 1900 kept a separate record of abstainers insured in the total abstinence department of the company. These total abstinence policies each year draw increased dividends, which materially reduce the cost of insurance.

It may be explained that many insurance companies issue annual dividends or refunds based upon the actual gains of the companies, resulting from the fact that the actual mortality is less than the calculated mortality shown in the tables. In the temperance department of this company, as in others, it is found that the dividend or amount returned to the policyholders is considerably larger than it is in the general department, because the actual mortality in that department is less proportionately than in the general department.

Lincoln on the Liquor Traffic.

The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out its vitals and threatening destruction, and all attempt to regulate it will aggravate the evil. There must be no attempt to regulate the cancer; it must be eradicated, not a root must be left behind, for until this is done all classes must continue in danger of becoming victims of strong drink.—Abraham Lincoln.

Plain Water Best.

"A man finds that he enjoys best health when he abstains altogether from wine and spirits, and drinks plain water."—Dr. Murchison.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The last Sunday of the campmeeting was a great day in the Park. There were representatives from about every district in the county and from many States. The services Sunday extended from 6 o'clock a. m. to 11.00 p. m., and were all well attended. Bishop Berry preached a great sermon in the morning when the auditorium was filled to its utmost capacity. At 2.30 p.m. Dr. Reed had a great audience and preached one of his strong sermons, and at night Dr. Allen was the preacher. Each of these services were followed by altar services where many professed to be saved and sanctified. Among well known ministers present we note the following: Revs. S. W. Davis, E. P. Idleman, D. B. Orr, H. E. Friend, Gregory Bleakly, P. W. Metheny, H. O. Bolton, G. W. Kepler and many others

Bishop Berry gave a short but very helpful talk in the M. E. church at 5 p. m. to a select company.

The Oakland District Conference was in session here Friday and Saturday.

The Chautauqna commences a session of six weeks today. Present indications point to a successful season.

The Mountain City Band gave their first concert in the Amphitheatre Monday night to a good audience.

Mr. Horace Whitworth, of Westernport, spent Sunday with Mrs. Whitworth, at Haydenhurst, where she had preceded him a few days accompanied by her nieces, Margaret, Mary and Helen Hayden, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. J. Grant Hayden.

Rev. and Mrs. Willis Dean and part of their family are spending a short vacation with Mrs. Dean's sister, Mrs. J. A. Enlow.

Briarbend has been rented for the season and may be sold soon.

GORTNER.

Mrs. Margaret Shaw and daughter Ruth, and Misses Marie aud Leoda Zink of Cumberland, arrived Sunday and will spend several weeks at the home of P. P. Gortner.

Messrs. Homer and Herbert Wiles, of Terra Alta, spent several days recently at W. H. Smouse's.

Mrs. F. S. Irwin spent the latter part of the past week at Mt. Lake Park.

Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Lichty and daughter Mary retureed Tuesday from an extended trip to Canada and Ohio.

Miss Norinne Taggart, of Oakland, spent Saturday night with Miss Anna Gortner.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Smouse attended the picnic at Aurora.

Miss Addie Wamsley is staying with Mrs. Ira Beckwith in Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wagley, of Keyser, spent several days recently with their aunt, Mrs. P. P. Gortner.

Mrs. Gill Slabach and daugher Madeline returned to Piedment Tuesday, after spending several weeks with relatives at this place.

Preaching services next Saturday and Sunday evenings in the Union church. Also Sunday morning.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Lately the weather has been very hot in this vicinity.

Children's Day services in the M. E. church on next Sabbath evening.

Arnold Fox spent Sunday in Somerset, Pa.

Rev. O. C. Dean has been visited by his mother. She left on Monday for her home.

Last week the contract was let for building of the new wing to our school house. F. G. Fox will be the contractor.

Mrs. Amster Friend left last week to visit her aunt who is very ill.

Earl Statler and wife accompanied by Mr. Statler's mother, Mrs. Jacob Statler, made a trip to Meyersdale, returning on Monday. It is possible that they may move to that burg shortly.

The falling in of the Sandpatch tunnel and the trouble the B. & O. R. R. have of getting freight east and west or between Pittsburg and Cumberland makes us think how much they stand in their own light when by building only about twenty miles of road they could reach both places with little inconvenience. The road that runs from Confluence to Friendsville is in pretty fair shape and by building a few more miles, that is now graded, could enter Oakland. It has been a mystery for a long time that this loop has not been made. Of course we realize that by going round by of Cumberland, people from points west of Confluence have to pay that much more fare to the railroad but when anything happens like the present catastrophy or a wreck how much more could be saved, besides when our new county road in completed very few passengers will go round by way of Cumberland, they will take their tickets for Friendsville and then by automobile be in Oakland in an hour. The power plant that has received a charter from the State, and talks of putting large dams across the Youghiogheny river and running electric cars in all directions sounds very nice, but they have decided, so we hear, not to do anything for a long time and if the B. & O. decided to put their road through they could have no trouble to get right of way.

BITTINGER.

John Hetrick, one of our prosperous farmers, purchased a new Ford automobile a few days ago, thus making two cars of the kind in our village.

Farmers are busy this week taking care of their wheat and hay crops, both of which promise to be very good.

Constable N. Murphy, of Grantsville, made a professional visit to this neighborhood last Saturday.

Dr. Robison, of Grantsville, was called to this place on Monday to attend Mrs. George Wiley, who is quite ill.

Messrs. C. W. Friend, C. C. Frederick and Arnold Fox, of Friendsville, passed through here last Monday in a new Ford automobile, which Mr. Friend had just purchased.

Miss Naomi Orendorf is spending a few weeks with her sisters at Grantsville.

Mrs. E. S. Brenneman and children visited Mrs. Brenneman's mother, Mrs. David Miller, at Deer Park, last Sunday.

Mrs. Hattie Detrick was taken suddenly ill with a serious nervous affection, last week, which necessitated her removal to Baltimore for treatment.

Mrs. G. W. Engle and two daughters of Baltimore, arrived here last Monday for their usual stay in the country.

Tickets for admission to Miss Anna Manges entertainment in the Lutheran church on July 27th are on sale at the post office.

GRANTSVILLE

Mr. Oliver Durst, of Confluence, Pa., is visiting relatives and friends in this community.

Misses Lucretia Warnick and Lola Miller, of Washington. D. C., and Beulah Sigler, of Westernport, are visiting at Mr. Gideon Gnagey's and Mr. Noah Warnick's.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Saurman, of Jennings, spent last week in Baltimore and Washington sightseeing. On their return trip they stopped with the former's aunt, Mrs. Wm. Major, of Lonaconing.

Mr. Lloyd Kamp, who is employed by Mr. Henry Miller, of Stone House Farm, purchased a new runabout last week.

A cow owner by Mr. Delbert Durst was badly cut by getting into a barbed wire fence.

Mr. Wm. Wiseman has rented the C. D. Hershberger building for a garage. He will be prepared to do all repairing neatly and quickly, besides having on hand all necessary supplies for autos.

The work of repairing the bridges on the National Pike has been completed.

Mr. Olin T. Broadwater is helping Ward Beachy to paint.

THE BEEF SUPPLY.

The National Provisioner furnishes some interesting official statistics on the cattle supply. According to this trade organ, during the first six months of 1912, there were received in the six principal western markets 300,000,000 head of cattle, or 400,000 less than the corresponding period last year. This indicates a falling off of practically 12 per cent in number of the beef cattle; but not only was there a reduction in number, but the average weight of the cattle was less. Reports for June show that in Chicago, the average weight of each carcass was 37 pounds less than the average weight shown by the reports of a year ago.

Here is one of the causes of the high cost of living. The American farm is not producing as much wheat, as much corn, as much potatoes, and as many head of cattle as it did five years ago or ten years ago. East of the Mississippi river and throughout the central west the deserted farm has become a common thing. The lure of the city has drawn thousands of young men and women whose parents still live on the farm, but without the strength to cultivate it.

Church Services.

ST PAUL'S M. E.

Services next Sunday as follows:
Sunday school at 9:30 a. m.

MUSICAL HORN QUITE NOVEL

Instrument Invented by New York Man Has Music Roll on It and Plays Automatically.

Something decidedly novel in the way of a musical instrument has been designed by a New York man. He concluded that if there were automatic pianos and organs, there might as well be an automatic horn. So he took a horn with the general shape of a cornet and set a series of transverse pipes along the main pipe. These transverse pipes have valves controlled by key arms, just like the ordinary cornet, but they lead into a music roll with perforations on it, like the usual music roll. This roll is caused to revolve automatically, and as it turns around the musician blows steadily through the horn and whatever piece is on the roll is reproduced. With a good collection of rolls any man can earn the reputation of being an accomplished cornetist.

INVENTION AS AID TO MUTES

French Specialist Produces Contrivance to Improve Hearing—Five Sirens Are Used.

Deaf mutes are seldom absolutely unable to hear any sound, and by measuring their perception and properly cultivating their powers, many of them may be given a useful degree of hearing.

As the voice cannot be varied at will in quality, pitch and intensity, Dr. Marage, the French specialist, has developed a more accurate acoumeter, or measure of audition. Five sirens coupled together give the fundamental vibrations of the five vowels, and this apparatus gives sounds of constant quality that have a known pitch varying with the speed of the motor and a known intensity changing with the pressure of the air traversing the machine.

With the ear at a distance of 20 inches, the intensity of sound is raised by increasing the air pressure until the vibrations are perceived. The normal ear hears sound produced under a pressure of one millimeter, and if the pressure must be raised to 60 millimeters to make the sound heard, the sharpness of hearing is put down at 1-60 and so on.

If there is no roaring at 200 millimeters the test is continued with a tube from the siren to the ear. The perception varies for the different sounds, and a record is made in five divisions, showing the sensitiveness of the hearing for each of the vowels.

The ear's capacity being known, it is trained by the simple and exact vibrations of the vowel siren. In suitable cases hearing develops rapidly, and results are reached in two months that would require several years—with great exertion and fatigue—to attain by voice teaching.

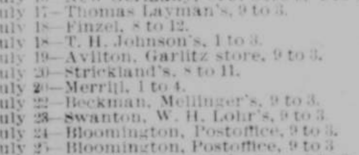
MORERI II,



20279.

Having lost my Percheron Stallion Herve, I have purchased MORERI II 20279, a Registered Percheron Stallion, bred by R. D. NcGonigle & Sons, of Ashley, Ohio.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

vs.

Thomas E. Markwood, Administrator of Charles M. Wilson, deceased, and also as Administrator of Milton O. Wilson, deceased, L. Blanche Wilson, widow of the said Charles M. Wilson and William L. Wilson, Robert Wilson, Hollis Wilson, Harry Wilson and Virginia Wilson, children and heirs at law of the said Charles M. Wilson, Stella T. Feeley and W. A. Feeley, her husband, A. I. Wilson, Jr., John T. Wilson, Bessie Homan and H. C. Homan, her husband, brothers and sisters and heirs at law of the said Milton O. Wilson, Michael Boyle, Maria Watson, Gilmor S. Hamill, Hugh G. Hamill, Marmaduke Best and Charles I. Best, mortgagees, Defendants.

No. 1808 Equity In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this bill is to procure a decree for the sale of the real estate of Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson, both late of Garrett County, deceased, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay and discharge the claims of their several creditors

1st. The Bill states that the said Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson were during their lifetime engaged in the mercantile business in Garrett county, under the name of C. M. Wilson and Brother, and became indebted to the above named plaintiffs in various sums, and to numerous other creditors.

2nd. That being so indebted, the said Charles M. Wilson departed this life on or about the day of , 1912, and the said Milton O. Wilson departed this life the day of , 1912, both dying intestate, the said Charles M. leaving a widow, L. Blanche Wilson and the following children, William L. Wilson, Robert Wilson, Hollis Wilson, Harry Wilson and Virginia Wilson (the children being infants) as his heirs at law and that they reside in Garrett county, that the said Milton O. left the following sisters and brothers as his only heirs at law: Stella T. Feeley who was intermarried with W. A. Feeley, A. I. Wilson, Jr., all of whom are of full age and reside in Tucker county, West Virginia, Bessie Homan, who intermarried with H. C. Homan and J. T. Wilson, all of whom are of full age and reside in Mineral county, West Virginia.

3rd. That letters of administration was granted by the Orphans' Court of said Garrett County to Thomas Markwood, both on the personal estate of Charles M. Wilson and the personal estate of Milton O. Wilson.

4, 5 and 6. That the said Charles M. Wilson had executed three separate mortgages on his real estate one to Michael Boyle, Hugh G. Hamill, Maria Watson and G. S. Hamill; the second to Marmaduke Best and G. S. Hamill, and the third to Charles I. Best and G. S. Hamill, all of which are unpaid and are liens on the real estate of which said Charles M. Wilson died seized and possessed.

7th. That both the Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson were seized and possessed of valuable real estate at the time of their respective deaths.

8th. The Bill then charges that the personal estate of the said decedents is not sufficient to discharge all of the just debts due and owing by them at the time of their decease, and in order that said creditors may be paid in full, the real estate or a part thereof, will have to be sold.

9th. The Bill then sets out in part the real estate owned by the said decedents at the time of their respective deaths, or so much thereof, as may be necessary to pay that portion of said indebtedness as may remain unsatisfied after application thereto of said personal estate.

The bill then prays for general relief and states that the said Stella T. Feeley and William A. Feeley, her husband, A. I. Wilson, Jr., Bessie Homan and H. C. Homan, her husband and J. T. Wilson are non-residents of the State of Maryland.

It is thereupon this 19th day of July, 1912, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett County, in equity, that the plaintiffs by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett County aforesaid, once in each of four successive weeks before the 9th day of August, 1912, give notice to the absent defendents of the object and substance of the bill, warning them, and each of them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 26th day of August next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

FRIENDSVILLE'S LOSS WILL AMOUNT TO $50,000

As a Result of the Storm of Last Wednesday Afternoon.

Friendsville met with a serious disaster on Wednesday last when, without warning, a flood came down Bear Creek, sweeping everything before it. Bad as it was, we are thankful no lives were lost, although many thousand of dollars' worth of property was destroyed.

Heavy clouds had hung over our little city all the forenoon and shortly after dinner rain began falling, increasing in violence until it poured down in torrents. Bear Creek filled rapidly and the first alarm came when the bridge known as Bear Creek bridge, a strong iron one, was swept away. Parents ran for their children and many of the people on Walnut street ran from their homes to those of neighbors. Almost immediately a regular wall of water came sweeping down on the houses in that part of town.

C. C. Frederick's printing office was picked up and floated off by the water. His house then began moving away and was stopped only by some trees close to Wm. Frederick's or it would have been dashed into it. Great trees floated down across Walnut street, also much timber, boards and driftwood. The meat market was carried back some forty or fifty feet and lies almost demolished; boardwalks in fifty-foot length were picked up and carried off.

No fences of wood or wire are left standing. Joseph Cunningham's house was hurled into the boiling, raging flood; Samuel Chrise's home was swept away almost in a second and even his real estate is gone, for where his house stood now the creek flows. In what was known as Shantytown the creek has made a new channel, ruining much fine property. The houses there that did not get moved off are filled with mud and slime and most horrible stenches are the result. Many hundreds of chickens were drowned. Wm, Frederick's summer kitchen sets out on the the street far from its original position.

F. G. Fox's planing mill is in a horrible condition, with the machinery ruined. His store had two feet of solid mud when the water receded as did the post office. In his warerooms the loss will be heavy. One car of cement was completely ruined and several piles of lumber were swept away, making his loss run up into the thousands.

The Rock Lick Lumber Co.'s store was damaged and it is supposed a thousand dollars worth of goods destroyed. Several fine hogs were lost.

Black and Chisholm will loose a thousand dollars in ties and props.

Nathan R. Selby will be a heavy looser.

The Rock Lick Lumber Co.'s tracks are town up for miles and they will have to make a complete new road to their timber, for it is gone, bridges and all.

The county bridges to Accident are all gone and miles of county road are impossible for a team to go over.

The scene is a heartrending one, as one gazes over the flood swept region. Where beautiful gardens flourished, now there is only a mass of boulders and stones, while in other places ground is piled up.

The B. & O. Railroad Co. are heavy losers. From Steele's trestle to the crossing on Walnut street it is completly demolished. Ties and rails were carried away from their former position.

The town council met in extra session on Friday night to arrange for the immediate cleaning up of the streets and will get lime and other disinfectants as soon as they can get them in after we get train service which will not be before Thursday. No mail has reached this town since Wednesday last. Most of the telephone service is out of commission and our town is in one of the severest straits imaginable.

NEW COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT ASSUMES OFFICE

Mr. Franklin E. Rathbun Takes Formal Charge.

Mr. Franklin E. Rathbun, superintendent of public instruction in Garrett county, takes formal charge of his office today, having been appointed to the position some time ago by the new Board of School Commissioners, composed of Messrs. Joseph T. Glotfelty, Peter H. Yost and Chauncey E. Ellithorp.

The new superintendent is a native of Garrett county and has been identified with educational work in Maryland and West Virginia for a number of years. He was educated at Western Maryland College, Westminister, Md., and upon his graduation therefrom became principal of the Oakland grammar school, later becoming superintendent of public schools at Piedmont, W. Va., which position he was holding when elected Superintendent of Garrett county schools.

Mr. Rathbun is an educator ot marked ability as well as being an executive of high order.

PAINFULLY INJURED IN AN AUTO ACCIDENT

Occupants of Ex-Sheriff's Frantz's Car Caught Beneath Machine.

Last Saturday afternoon an automobile accident took place at a point a half-mile north of Oakland on the State Road in which ex-Sheriff Frantz and his daughter, Mrs. John J. Sweeney, were painfully injured and the machine practically ruined.

How the accident occurred or who was to blame for it will be determined in Justice Fries' court this afternoon at two o'clock, as a warrant was issued Saturday night for the arrest of a young man named Singer charging him with driving recklessly and exceeding the speed limit and colliding with the machine being driven by Mr. Frantz, which caused the accident.

Mr. Frantz as well as Mrs. Sweeney, were confined to their beds for number of days following the occurrence.

Novelties from Europe at Deer Park.

On Saturday afternoon, the tenth of August, in the Deer Park Hotel grounds, at Deer Park, the annual bazaar of all nations will be held under the tutelage of the Deer Park Village Improvement Society. Some of the occupants of the hotel cottages have just returned from Europe bringing with them some very useful and artistic articles suitable for presents. The Deer Park Cornet band will lend its aid, and a pleasant time is anticipated. The sale of the articles from abroad and the money accruing from the dispensing of refreshments, will be placed in the treasury to permit the society to carry on its work. No. 14 train from Oakland, will be in ample time for the best of the entertainment.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis.

CHAPTER II—Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life.

CHAPTER III—A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Postoffice Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case.

CHAPTER IV—Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery.

CHAPTER V—Kent nad Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, "Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J." Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook."

CHAPTER VI.

The Third Suicide.

Something had happened.

I awoke the next morning with a start and sat up in bed listening to the strange confusion in the hotel. Instinctively I recognized that the sensation of the unusual that so affected me was something more than the feeling every one experiences on suddenly awaking for the first time in a strange place.

I sprang from the bed and, opening my door, looked out into the hall. I could see nothing, for a turn of the corridor shut me off from the main hall. From the floor below came the confused murmur of many voices and the sound of men moving about—many men. My first thought was of fire, but there were no cries and there was no smell of smoke. The memory of my experience in the post-office recurred to me. I vaguely wondered if I had been tracked and discovered.

I hastened to dress. If they suspected me of robbing the post-office, the sooner I found out the sooner I could plan some method of action. As I put on my collar I heard footsteps in the corridor, and, coatless as I was, I flung open my door. A chambermaid was passing.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"Haven't you heard about it?" she asked in wonder.

"Heard about what?"

"The suicide in the hotel—in the room right under yours. They discovered it hours ago. The coroner's just come and is getting ready to hold the inquest."

"Who was he?" I asked. I was thinking it might be Hugh Crandall, dead in some suicide pact with Katharine. A sense of disappointment began to take hold of me. I felt that if it were Crandall my efforts to clear the mystery would be still more futile, but the woman's answer quickly dispelled the thought.

"It wasn't a 'he.' It's a woman."

She hurried on down the corridor and I hastened to finish my dressing, recalling as I did so Davis' belief that there would be other suicides. It seemed absurd that there could be any connection between the suicide of a woman in a country hotel in an obscure New Jersey village and the two suicides the day before in New York, and yet there was at least one link between them. It was Crandall who had telephoned Katharine. Some one had telephoned Elser, too. It was in Crandall's rooms that we had found the address of this place where the third suicide in the series had taken place.

With the triumphant feeling that my friend the inspector finally would have to accept my theory of Crandall's guilt, I hurried down-stairs and forced my way into the room where the coroner had already begun his inquest.

On the bed, covered with a sheet, except for the face, lay the lifeless body of a woman perhaps fifty, the face still distorted from the death agony. A bit of rope attached to a rod among the rafters of the room showed that she had hung herself. The woman's outer clothing lay neatly piled on a chair near the bed. This much I had time to notice before the coroner finished selecting his jury. Near the coroner, too, I observed the man whom the clerk had called Cook. I thought he gave a quick glance in my direction, but I could not be sure. The first witness was called, Mahlon Williams, the proprietor of the hotel.

"Mr. Williams," said the coroner "do you know this woman?"

"I can't say as I do."

"What was her name?"

"She was registered here in the hotel. The name's on the book. You can see for yourself. I don't know if it 'twas her real name or not."

"Mary Jane Teller, Bridgeport, Conn.," was the entry in the hotel register which was produced and submitted for the jurors' inspection.

"Tell us, Mr. Williams, what you know about the deceased."

"Mighty little; nothing at all, in fact. She come here night before last. Got in on the seven-two train from New York, I calculate, from the time of her arrival. She had no baggage, only that little black bag yonder, and she asked for a room for the night—a cheap room. She seemed so feeble I gave her this room on the ground floor, No. 4, and only charged her seventy-five cents for it, though it's a dollar room, or a dollar and a half for bridal couples. She paid for it for one night and right after supper she went into it and stayed there. Yesterday morning after breakfast she went out somewhere and was gone maybe an hour or an hour and a half. I didn't see her when she come in but I heard—"

"Mahlon Williams," said the coroner severely, "you ought to know enough about the law to understand that what you heard ain't evidence. Tell only them things you know of your own knowledge."

"All I know," said Williams, perceptibly miffed, "is that she come out along about three in the afternoon and paid another seventy-five cents, saying she wanted the room another night. That's all I seen of her."

"Can I ask a question?" said one of the jurors, all of whom were townsmen of the class usually to be found around the hotel bar-room.

"If it is a proper question," said the coroner judiciously.

"Where did she go when she went out?"

"The question is a proper one, if the witness can answer it of his own knowledge," the coroner ruled.

"If I knowed I'd a told already," said the hotel keeper.

One or two of the other jurors asked questions, prompted plainly more by curiosity than by intelligent effort to ascertain the facts; but it was plain that Mr. Williams had revealed all that he knew, and he was dismissed.

Doctor Allen, who had been sent for as soon as the suicide was discovered, gave it as his opinion that the woman had hung herself early the evening before, as nearly as he could judge about five o'clock.

"Who was it found the body?" the coroner asked.

"Mary Evans, the chambermaid," the constable volunteered. "Here she is, right here."

The coroner proceeded to examine her.

Much embarrassed by the prominence into which she found herself thrust, but manifestly enjoying the unusual situation, the girl told how, early in the morning, as soon as she began her work, she had gone to the room.

"I didn't know there was anyone in No. 4," she explained. "I knew the woman had taken it for just one night and I hadn't bothered making it up the day before. None of the other roomers was up yet and I thought I might just as well get No. 4 off my mind. I knocked like I always do and getting no answer I opened the door right wide all of a sudden. Such a shock as it gave me I never expect to have again to my dying day. There was the poor creature a-hanging there. I let a yell out of me that must have waked the dead, and then I ran and called Mr. Williams."

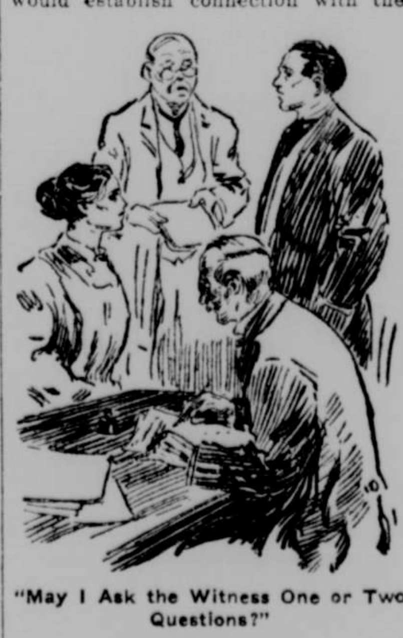
"Had you seen the deceased on the day previous?"

"Yes, but she wasn't deceased when I saw her."

"Did you have any conversation with her?"

"No more than to pass the time of day with her you might say."

I was thoroughly disgusted with the drivelling way in which the proceedings were being carried on. I could see little hope of any discovery that would establish connection with the similar events in New York. I turned from listening to the witness to studying the face of the man Cook. Could it be possible he was Hugh Crandall? I saw that he was watching the testimony with eager interest. Against my will I had to confess that his face was one that attracted rather than repelled me. While there was a shrewdness about the eyes, the chin was square and firm and the skull well-balanced. I tried to read in the shape of the mouth or the curve of the ears some sign of the criminal, such as I expected to find written on the countenance of Crandall, but it was not there.



"May I Ask the Witness One or Two Questions?"

"She was sitting there crying."

A sentence of the maid's testimony suddenly thrust itself forward from my subconsciousness as if demanding my attention and I listened intently to what she was saying.

"That was the way it happened that I didn't make up the room the day before. When I went in to do it she was sitting there crying and tearing a letter to bits."

A letter! It came on me in a flash that here was the clue, that this was the connecting link with the other two cases.

I pushed my way forward into the room, determined to learn all there was about this new phase of the case. The proceedings stopped abruptly at the bustle my movement made, and everybody, coroner, jurors and spectators, gaped at me.

"I am a lawyer," I said. "May I ask the witness one or two questions?"

Still the coroner gaped and I waited no longer for his permission.

"Was it a yellow letter?" I asked.

"Now that you speak of it I kind of remember that it was."

"Has the letter been found?"

"She was tearing it in pieces."

"Where are the pieces?"

The eyes of everybody present began roving about the room, as if in answer to my question. The constable instituted a hasty search, in which I myself, the coroner and the jurors joined. I felt that if we could only find those pieces, the mystery might be solved. While the room was being ransacked I kept my eye on Cook. As I asked the question about the letter's color I noticed that he looked startled. I was amazed now to see him edging toward the door. I was tempted to demand that he be restrained and searched. I felt almost sure that if the pieces of the yellow letter were to be found anywhere it would be in his pocket. Yet second thought advised against such rash action. I had no positive proof that Cook was Crandall. Until I had, surely it would be unwise to accuse him. I remembered that there was no train by which he could leave the town until late in the afternoon, so there was little prospect that he could escape me.

"How did you know it was a yellow letter?" the coroner asked me suspiciously, pausing suddenly in his search.

It was an awkward question. I realized that my impetuosity had placed me in a predicament. I was by no means ready to tell him the whole story, and yet the fact that I knew or suspected the color of the letter that she was tearing up certainly indicated that I knew something about the woman.

"I didn't know it."

"Well, what'd you ask the question about it for?" he repeated, his suspicion of me rapidly increasing.

I was thinking quickly what I could say that would divert his thoughts. I noticed with annoyance that the eyes of every one in the room were on me and that they were curiously awaiting an answer. I assumed an air of mystery and drew the coroner to one side.

"I am perfectly willing to tell you everything," I said. "I am out here on another matter that is something of a mystery in which a yellow letter figures. The letter has disappeared. I never saw or heard of this old woman before, but when the witness mentioned that she was tearing up a letter a sudden notion came to me that it might be the one of which I was in search. A detective who is working on the case will be out here this evening and then I can tell you more about it."

I spoke the last sentence in a whisper so low that it reached only the coroner's ear. He pondered over my statement and then abruptly announced that the inquest was adjourned until nine o'clock the next day. I would have escaped him if I could, but I saw that he was determined to worm out everything I knew or suspected. I decided that activity would be the best remedy for his curiosity. Accordingly I invited the coroner and the constable to come up to my rooms where, without waiting for them to question me, I began firing questions hot-shot at them, suggesting things for them to do, simple things that would have been the first thought of the police of New York or any other large city, but which they had not thought of. Had they telephoned a description of the woman to the Bridgeport police with her name to see if she could be identified as any one who was missing from that city? Had they examined her clothing to see if there was any mark on it that might identify her? Had they studied her writing on the register to see if it gave any indication of being assumed or disguised? Had they examined her pocketbook to see if it contained any clue to a motive? Had they considered whom she might have come to this town to see?

"That idea of calling up the Bridgeport police ain't such a bad one," said the coroner. "Suppose you do it now," he said, turning to the constable.

"I'd like to know who's going to pay for it if I do," the constable objected. "There ain't enough fees in this office for me to be spending my money that way."

"You go ahead and do it and I'll see that you get the money back."

"If you're going to pay it out of your own pocket I'll do it, but if you expect me to wait till you put it through as a lawful expense I ain't taking no chances."

Their petty wrangling over such a trifling amount exasperated me not a little.

"Here," said I, pulling a five-dollar bill from my pocket, "take this and pay for it and tell them to telephone you as soon as they can what they have found out. This ought to cover both the message and the answer and if there is anything left get yourself some cigars with it."

The constable needed no second bidding. As soon as he had disappeared I turned to the coroner:

"Did you notice that man Cook at the inquest? Who is he?"

"I don't know who you mean," he replied. "The only Cook I know here in the town is Bob Cook, and he's laid up with a broken leg."

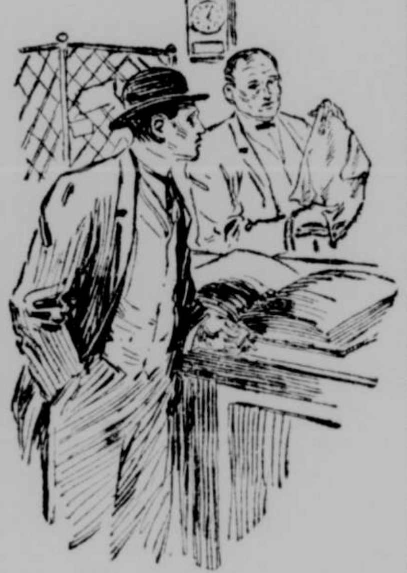
"Didn't you notice a tall, smooth-shaven fellow who stood right close beside where you were sitting? He listened closely to the testimony and the minute we began looking for the scraps of the letter, didn't you see him slip out of the room?"

"Come to think of it," said the coroner, "I believe I did notice him, but I can't say as I seen him going out. Maybe 'twas one of the guests of the hotel."

"I think he is, and I'm pretty sure he's registered in the hotel as Mr. Cook, too, but I'd like to know more about him."

"Let's go down and ask Mahlon. If there's anybody in his hotel he don't know about it's something unusual."

We found Mahlon Williams in the little boxed-off corner behind the hotel desk that was labeled "Private Office." The curious crowd was still gaping at the door of the room where the suicide had taken place, at least such of them as had not adjourned to the bar to talk it over, so that we were alone in the office.



In the Corner of the Handkerchief Was a Neatly Embroidered "S."

"Mr. Williams," I said, "what do you know about this man Cook, who is stopping here in the hotel?"

"No more than I know about you," said he, "and not as much, in fact, for he didn't ask no peculiar questions at the inquest. Speaking about that letter—"

"How long has this man Cook been in the house?" I interrupted, determined not to let either him or the coroner annoy me with questions.

The hotel-keeper, plainly provoked at my attitude, stared thoughtfully at me for a minute and finally decided to answer my question as the only hope of getting me to answer his.

"He came just the night before you did—got in on the seven-two train."

His answer settled everything in my mind. Cook was Crandall. The arrival of Cook in the village coincided with the departure of Crandall from New York. The haste in which he had departed was explicable by the arrival of the old woman on that train. Evidently he wanted for some reason to arrive in the village at the same time that she did. What had been his motive was still a mystery to me. It flashed across my mind that perhaps, after all, her death might not have been suicide. A clever criminal might easily arrange things to look as though she had hung herself. I determined to make an investigation to see if there was any evidence to prove this, but I said nothing of my suspicions as yet. I already regretted my precipitancy in asking about the yellow letter. The questions of the landlord and the coroner might be deferred for a while, but sooner or later I would have to make some explanation, and I had none to give.

"What is Cook's business?" I asked the landlord hastily, anticipating a question I saw forming on his lips.

"I don't know. He kind of looked to me like a traveling-man—or a lawyer. What was—"

The return of the constable from telephoning saved my answering the question he was about to ask.

"There ain't no woman missing from Bridgeport that the police know anything about," he said sententiously.

"Did ye tell them her name?" asked the coroner.

"Yep. They say there's only three families of Tellers in the telephone book and only four in the directory, and they are going to look them up and telephone inside of an hour."

"Maybe her name wasn't Teller," suggested the hotel-keeper. "I recollect seeing her kind of hesitate as she went to write in the register."

"That's just what I was thinking," I cried, glad to divert his attention once more. "Let us go and look at the register and then examine her clothing. Maybe there are some marks on it."

"That's a good idea," said the coroner. "Wonder we didn't think of that before."

The hotel register showed us little save the name "Mary Jane Teller" in the tremulous old-fashioned hand little used to handling the pen. There was perhaps a little more space between the last two names than after the first—as if she hesitated a moment while deciding what name to use or perhaps with an honest woman's natural aversion to assuming any other name than her own.

"Let's look at the clothing," I suggested, eager for an opportunity to see whether there were any indications that would point to anything other than suicide.

The four of us hastened to the room again. To my annoyance I noted that the rope had been removed from the rafters, though the woman's outer clothing still lay piled on the chair. There seemed to be nothing about the inexpensive black suit to identify the owner, no mark of any kind except the label of the concern in New York from which it had been purchased.

"Where's the black bag she carried?" asked the coroner.

"There was some money in it," Mr. Williams replied. "I put it in the safe."

As we left the room to return to the hotel office I gave a hasty glance at the corpse. From the condition of the face and throat it was all too plain that death had been by strangulation, still, I reasoned, a powerful man might have strangled the woman first and hanged her afterward to conceal his crime. I determined to put the theory up to Davis as soon as he arrived.

Twirling the knob of the ancient safe that stood in the corner, the hotel-keeper reached in and drew out a well-worn hand-bag of black leather and upset the contents on the desk. There were three one-dollar bills, neatly folded, three dimes and eight pennies—a meager amount that suggested the hoarding of pennies for this trip, whatever its purpose. There was a half-ticket, the return stub of a ticket from Bridgeport and another one from New York to Ardway, and that was all, save two neatly folded black-bordered handkerchiefs.

"Looks like she came from Bridgeport, after all," the constable volunteered.

"Maybe she did," said the landlord, unfolding one of the handkerchiefs and holding it up to our gaze. "Maybe she did come from Bridgeport, but her name wasn't Teller—not Mary Jane Teller by a long shot."

In the corner of each handkerchief was a neatly embroidered "S."

It gave me quite a shock as I looked at that mute evidence of her assumed name, to her effort to mask her identity.

Could her name have been Elser?

Was this the way in which she was connected with the two suicides in New York? But even so, suppose she was the sister or relative, or even the unrecognized wife of old Andred Elser, what possible connection could these two humble people have with Katharine Farrish?

The mystery was growing deeper. How I wished that Inspector Davis would come.

Modern Medical Doctrines.

At a conference on hospital social service in New York city one of the speakers said that the hospital of the future must keep a record of the social histories of all patients, just as now their medical histories are kept. Rhubarb and soda, said another speaker, illustrating the necessity for psychological remedies for patients, had in one case proved useless as a cure for indigestion until the sufferer, a grief-stricken mother, was relieved from worry over an absent boy.

No Cause to Fear.

A fisherman succeeded in stealing a goose from a farmhouse by training his fish-line along the ground in sight of the goose. The goose, seeing the worm, bit at it and got caught by the hook. When caught, the man ran, pulling the bird after him. The bird, by flapping her wings, alarmed the farmer's wife, who came out to the gate, and, seeing the man running and the goose following, she exclaimed:

"Don't be afraid, my good man; she won't touch you."

Would That This Were True.

The principal authors met and formed a union for the sake of publishing a set of rules of writing. As a preliminary, they agreed that after this no hero would be permitted to flick the ashes from his cigarette or cigar. Also that no heroine shall hereafter bury her head in her hands or drop her eyes to the floor. The full set of restrictions will be announced later.—Life.

Hint for Travelers.

Reading the dictionary for pleasure is not an unknown occupation, and there is the testimony of one well known man that, while traveling, he had found one etymological dictionary a "perpetual succession of pleasant surprises." Such a book is good for one who finds it hard to concentrate his mind amid the distractions of a journey.

Swedish Bridal Lore.

The Swedish girl prays for a rainy day on which to get married. Then before she goes to the ceremony attired in her wedding clothes she milks the cow, feeds the calf and steals a breast feather from the hen. This is to bring her the necessities and luxuries of life.

Adrift with Humor

A Wearisome Watch.

A very small boy was once observed sitting in a tramcar rocking himself to and fro.

A sympathetic old gentleman inquired if he were ill, and receiving a negative reply, said: "Then why are you moving backwards and forwards like that?"

The small boy made no pause in his regular oscillations as he said: "Well, you see, mister, I've just bought a watch from Tucker for one-and-sixpence, and if I stop moving like this here the watch won't go any more."—Tit-Bits.

Alas, Alack.

"There will be no marriage nor giving in marriage in heaven," said Mrs. Henpeck.

Mr. Henpeck drew a long, deep, sad sigh.

"Why do you look so sad about it, Henry?" she asked.

"We haven't any such assurance about conditions in the other place."

The Laughter and Applause.

"Do you consider it art to employ a clacque?"

"Well," replied the anxious-looking theater manager, "it may not be art, but I don't know that it's any worse than a congressman's writing 'laughter' and 'applause' into his own speeches."

SUMMER FEED FOR THE PIGS

Both Growing and Mature Animals Can Use Considerable Amount of Roughage and Forage.

(By W. M. KELLY.)

On account of having a comparatively small stomach the pig is an animal especially adapted to the consuming of concentrated feeds. The growing pig and the mature breeding animal can use considerable rough feed and forage to advantage.

For best results the growing pig must not be confined to forage crops and roughage alone, and the fattening hog, although it can use a little bulky and succulent food, should be fed largely upon concentrated feed.

The legumes, alfalfa, rape, rye, sorghum, millet, are carbonaceous feeds. Blue grass contains less protein than the former, but more than the latter crops, consequently, if we are feeding pigs on pasture we must plan to feed protein feeds if they have carbonaceous forage and pasture and carbonaceous feeds if they have proteinaceous pasture and forage crops.

Pigs that have the run of clover and alfalfa make the best gains if fed a little corn and some of the nitrogeneous feeds like oil meal, skimmilk or wheat middlings. However, it is usually more profitable to depend upon the clover and alfalfa pasture and not feed the more expensive feeds.

With carbonaceous forage and pasture it will pay to feed less corn and more of the nitrogeneous feeds.

If we have our pigs well developed on forage and protein feeds they will be in condition to finish on corn alone the last two months.

TRIMMING OF TOMATO VINES

Practice Will Greatly Increase Yield of Fruit If Done in Midsummer —Admits Sunshine.

Very few amateurs practice trimming tomato vines, but if this is done in midsummer, the yield of the fruit is very greatly increased.

Extensive experiments at various experiment stations have developed the fact that the increase due to trimming is great. At the Maine station this increase reached as high as 50 per cent., and the gain in weight was very marked, in one instance reaching 58 per cent.

The plants were grown under ordinary field culture, and they were started in the greenhouse, April 1, planted in the field June 1, and headed back July 24, August 8, and September 5.

Of course, in milder climates this work should be done earlier.

At each trimming the leading branches were shortened about six inches, and most of the side shoots below the first clusters were removed, the others being shortened, and the sunlight was thus freely admitted.

Training tomatoes on wires to run from 5 to 10 feet high, is becoming common practice. This method increases the yield, as the sunlight reaches all the fruit and makes picking much easier.

It is not difficult to train vines in this way, and it can be done in any ordinary garden by means of wires.

Twin Lambs.

By selection the percentage of twins produced in a flock can no doubt be largely controlled. Some rams produce a much larger percentage of twins than others. The above saying is naturally an English one, as the English mutton sheep are generally better milkers than the finewool sheep and they are larger, too, and can better produce twins. That they have been bred with this in view more than the fine-wool sheep is shown by the larger percentage of twins they produce.

Without a doubt one large lamb is better than two runty ones. If ewes have twin capacity, breed them to produce twins. If not be happy with a 100 per cent. increase, made possible by shifting a starving twin to a ewe that has lost her lamb.

Should Not Let Hay Sunburn.

The feeding value, as well as the market value and palatability of hay, is lowered by being sunburned. The feeding value is probably hurt most by the loss of leaves. Sunburned clover and alfalfa lose a large part of the leaves in handling, and this is the best part of the crop.

When the sun is shining very brightly the clover or grass should not be left in the swath long. A large part of the curing should be done in the windrow and the cock. Most of the hay is then shaded, and so the damaging effect of intense sunshine is reduced to the exposed portion. And a shock cover will still further lessen the injury from sun as well as from rain.

Protecting Plants.

Tomato plants may be thoroughly protected by covering with soil. When this plan is used a mound of soil is formed on one side of the plant, then the plant is bent carefully over the mound and covered with an inch or two of soil. If there is cool weather the plant may be left covered in this manner for at least two days without any injury whatever.

Building on the Farm.

Before you do anything in the line of building think how it will affect the appearance of the farmhouse. This may seem a small matter, but it may decide whether someone of the young folk will be content to stay on the farm. These things do more than we know toward deciding life problems.

Fateful Miss Douglas

By Fanny Burton

Mrs. Ransom surveyed her tall brother while he returned the scrutiny with smiling cheerfulness. John MacPherson was enjoying to the utmost his little visit to his sister, whom he had not seen since her marriage a couple of years previous, so he did not in the least understand why she should sigh and remark seriously, "It's too bad; yes, it is!"

"What?" he asked, lazily.

"Why, that you got here just the day after Isabel Douglas left town," responded pretty little Mrs. Ransom. "She's the dearest girl! She's—"

"Lives in Kentucky, beautiful as a dream, glorious brown eyes, most charming disposition on earth, is—"

"Where'd you meet her?" broke in Mrs. Ransom, breathlessly.

"I never had the pleasure," laughed her brother. "Only I had to sit one whole evening during my visit in Toledo and hear my hostess recount the charms of this most evasive Isabel. She had left there just the week before my arrival. I seem to cast a blighting shadow over her enjoyment; at any rate, she runs at my approach."

"Now, isn't that queer?" said his sister. "But, really, John, I'm in earnest about wanting you to know her."

"So was my Toledo hostess," he answered, amusedly. "If only the lady and I were of a similar mind and as much in earnest, nothing on earth could save us from wedding cake and rice. But we aren't, thank the fates," he cried rather fervently.

At the age of 35, John MacPherson, comfortable in his bachelor quarters in New York, wealthy enough to indulge any whim, looked with quiet and polite pity at the unfortunates he knew tied down to domestic cares. He had fully decided he wanted none of that for him—what happiness he might miss was more than compensated for in peace and quiet and freedom.

"You're wrong, Jack," said his sister, rather wistfully. "Aren't you ever going to abandon your crazy notions and marry some nice girl and settle down?"

He threw out his hands in mock dismay as he got to his feet. "I'm the most settled down person you ever saw, Nan," he protested. "I'm as steady as a railway time table and perfectly contented just as I am. I could attend the wedding of some other fellow to your amiable Isabel without a qualm."

"No, you couldn't!" said his sister forcibly. "You've never seen her!"

But if he had not seen her the fame of Miss Isabel Douglas was destined to haunt his ears. During his visit at his sister's he heard Miss Douglas' name so frequently on the lips of visitors that he grew half irritated. It was impossible that any girl should be such a paragon—and if she was he had no desire to know her.

Such perfection would be tiresome, he concluded; and so he dismissed her from his mind.

When he reached Chicago on his homeward way he stopped to transact some business. Phillips, his lawyer, was most cordial in pressing his New York client to come out to his house, and MacPherson was half inclined to accept. His frame of mind experienced an instantaneous change, however, when Phillips added:

"We've a visitor coming tomorrow you'd like to meet, I know—Miss Isabel Douglas of Kentucky. She—"

"Sorry," said Mr. MacPherson, decidedly, "but I can't wait over a day on any account, my dear man." At that moment he would have gone a hundred miles out of his way to escape meeting this southern paragon.

He did not stop to reflect she undoubtedly had not the slightest desire of meeting him, either—the constant sound of her name and the rehearsal of her attractions had molded itself into a haunting shadow, pursuing him, and he actually disliked the very thought of her. He wondered crossly why she never stayed home where she belonged. Then he went back to New York.

Strangely enough, even there he was not left in peace. One of the newspapers printed a page of pictures and gossip about beautiful women, and, idly glancing it over, the name of Douglas caught his eye. He groaned as he looked closer—yes, the first name was Isabel. Then he searched for the picture of her and stared at it half indignantly. It was a very lovely face, more than that, it was high-bred and thoughtful, as well as perfect in line and form.

But John MacPherson had seen too many beautiful women to be especially attracted by any one in particular. He wondered idly what there could be about this particular girl which so hypnotized her friends and acquaintances. In a few weeks she had passed out of his mind entirely.

But John MacPherson was not to slip out of the clutches of determined fate in this easy fashion. With no warning whatever, no premonition of the trap before him, he climbed the steps of a Fifth avenue house one night to fulfill a dinner engagement.

His hostess was a charming woman, and her dinners were famous. He was in a very pleasant frame of mind. As he opened the little envelope containing the name of his dinner partner he exclaimed so sharply that the well-trained footman could not forbear a glance of astonishment. On the card was the name of Isabel Douglas.

MacPherson, instantly in revolt, meditated flight for an instant, then realized how impossible that was, and that there was nothing to do but go downstairs and meet her. Never in his life had he entertained such a violent prejudice for any woman's society as he now felt for hers. He was entirely blind to her innocence of the manner in which her name had been rung in his ears till he hated the sound of it. At any rate, she should not add him to the list of victims report said strewed her path.

He entered the big drawing room and greeted his hostess.

"I've favored you tonight," that lady said, smiling. "I've given you the prettiest and nicest girl here to take out to dinner. Do you know Miss Douglas of Kentucky?"

"I do not," said the hapless John MacPherson, crisply, and mentally set his teeth. In two minutes it was all over and he was properly introduced to her. Just what he had expected Miss Douglas to do was hard to say —he had braced himself for resistance. But to his bewilderment, like a dash of cold water in his face, he realized there was absolutely nothing to resist.

Miss Douglas, far lovelier than her picture, had given him one rare, cordial smile which revealed the secret of her power, for it was a smile speaking a sympathetic interest in the individual addressed, and then had not paid very much more attention to him, being interested in the conversation of a returned arctic explorer.

MacPherson studied her at his leisure and as the moments passed found himself grasping wildly at all his ingrained prejudices against her. He had wits enough to reflect in a panic-stricken way that if the mere sight of her was so disarming, acquaintance with her might work marvelous changes in a man's feelings. When they passed out to the dining room MacPherson found himself halting for something to say, a new experience for him.

The girl herself broke the ice by remarking that she thought she knew his sister—was not Nan Ransom out west that relative? She had mentioned her brother so often.

By the end of that dinner John MacPherson was miserable, apologetic, at sea. He did not know why he should be so upset. All he realized was that he had a desire to explain to Miss Douglas how sorry he was for disliking her before he had met her.

"She certainly got in her special brand of hypnotic work on me, all right," he told his reflection grimly that night as he took off his cravat before the mirror. "But, then, she's an exception!"

John MacPherson was a man who went out after what he wanted when he got his mind made up. He never really made up his mind about Isabel Douglas, however—that is, deliberately. He did not have time. It was a fatal attack from the very first sight of her. And when he asked her to marry him, after she had been in New York two weeks only, and she very properly protested at his haste, it plunged him into despair so deep that he made life unbearable for his servants.

But Miss Douglas knew her own heart, too, after several years of experience in refusing numerous suitors, and she did not keep the man she found she really cared for waiting too long before she promised to marry him.

"I don't understand it in the least," she laughed, blushing and shaking her head when she had said yes.

"Neither do I," agreed John MacPherson promptly. "And I intend to marry you as soon as I wheedle you into naming the day, for fear you'll change your mind."

Then he telegraphed his sister out west, who knew nothing of what had been going on in New York. Mrs. Ransom laughed and cried alternately when she got the laconic message. It said:

"I have at last met Isabel. You can buy your gown to wear to the wedding."

THINGS WE OUGHT TO SAVE

Wastefulness and Indifference of Americans Cause Them to Miss Many Opportunities.

Each year we fill the Merrimac river with wool grease, making it a stench, while the towns along its course buy soap and fertilizer and lubricants from Chicago, Chili and Pennsylvania. We burn coal tar in Massachusetts and import coal-tar colors at high prices from Germany.

Over the great northwest we burn each year 5,000,000 tons of flax straw, while we pay $40 a ton for imported paper stock from Norway. In the south 300,000 tons of paper fiber of the highest grade are burned with the cottonseed hulls to which it is attached or used with them to adulterate cattle feed.

Cornstalks to an incalculable tonnage rot or are burned each year, while chemistry stands ready to convert them into feed containing 30 per cent. of sugars on the dry basis, or into alcohol for light and power. Waste molasses is sold for three cents a gallon or dumped into the stream, while alcohol sells for 40 cents a gallon. Skim milk is fed to hogs or thrown away, because no one has the enterprise to extract its casein, which is worth more than beefsteak for food.

In the face of such conditions we still meet young men who would inform us that the day of opportunity is past. The truth is that opportunity is knocking not once but insistently and long at every entrance to the chemist's laboratory.

QUALITIES OF FUSED SILICA

Latest Material to Be Used for Any Original Standard of Length—Light in Weight.

Fused silica is the latest material to be used for an original standard of length. Such a standard must continue accurate and invariable for a long period under all conditions of the air, and the metals tried—copper alloys, platinum, iridio platinum, nickel and invar—fall short of perfection. Fused silica claims a rare combination of good qualities. It is light in weight, cheap, and has small expansion; and its disadvantages—such as easy breakage, lack of elasticity, and slight solubility in water—are not important. The first meter of the kind, as described to the London Royal society, is a tube of silica with horizontal slabs of the same material fused into the ends. The slabs are accurately ground, with plane and parallel sides. The under sides are coated with platinum, and the lines of the standard are ruled through this film with a diamond. The annealing of the meter—by slowly heating to 450 degrees, maintaining at this temperature for eight days, and slowly cooling 14 days—cause a shrinkage of about one 50,000th of an inch.

"CANADIUM" IS A NEW METAL

Discovered by Metallurgical Chemist While Investigating Gold Mine in British Columbia.

"Canadium" is the name given a new metal discovered by A. G. French, metallurgical chemist of Nelson, B. C., when investigating a large gold mine in that province. While examining a deposit of platinum metals, he discovered, sometimes isolated and sometimes in combination, another metal which was quite different from other members of the group. It has since been found in many other igneous dikes in the vicinity of Nelson.

Canadium is a beautiful white metal but little softer than gold or silver and melting at a somewhat lower temperature. It is not tarnished by damp atmosphere nor blackened or affected by sulphureted hydrogen, alkaline sulphides or tincture of iodine, which blacken both silver and palladium. When burnished, it is much more brilliant than either silver or palladium.

JACK FOR LIFTING AN AUTO

Geared Ratchet Implement Embodies Several Interesting Features—Easy to Operate.

This geared ratchet automobile jack embodies several interesting features, among which are the lifting arms or antlers. The working mechanism is simple and easy to operate. A pinion meshes with the large gear wheel, the motion being imparted from the gear-wheel shaft to a pinion engaging a rack on the tube which slides up and down in the frame. The tube is threated on the inside, and into it screws the arms, which are called antlers because of their peculiar shape, says the Popular Mechanics. The antler form was adopted as one which would fit the rear axle of any make of automobile. The short horns are for lifting front axles, but the others may also be used for this purpose.

The jack is mounted on four rubber-tired casters, with both ball and roller bearings.

Son and Heir

Last year all that Sallyer could do at the golf club was to brag about his baby, who was too youthful actually to chum with his father's companions. When a baby is at that crumpled, reddish stage which indicates that its age is still reckoning in days all that any father ever does is to brag at a safe distance. He would be exceedingly bored by any closer companionship with his progeny.

This spring, however, Sallyer felt that Robert, Jr., really was approaching a grown-up stage. He could walk. He could make noises that sounded almost like words. He could smile intelligently. Hence Sallyer felt that Robert, Jr., had developed into a son who was quite a human being and entirely worthy of introduction into intelligent circles.

"Why not let me take the kid out to the club?" Salyer asked his wife on a recent Saturday afternoon. "I want to show him to the fellows. Oh, of course he'll be good—and I won't stay long. It'll give you a chance to get a little rest, too."

"It's a perfectly crazy idea!" declared Sallyer's wife. "What do they care about babies at a golf club? They want to play golf!"

"I guess it won't hurt 'em to look at my son!" declared Sallyer, fatuously. "They're always shouting about their kids. I want to show 'em a real boy."

Sallyer and his son created all the interest that Sallyer had hoped for. They arrived about 2 o'clock when the verandas were well filled and there was a rush to see the baby, who was exceedingly sporty in his new spring clothes. The men shook hands with him gravely and he bore himself with equal gravity, greatly to his father's delight. When the several women began to coo over him Sallyer withdrew to the company of the men and beamed.

Chief among the enthusiastic feminine admirers of Robert, Jr., was Miss Quigley. Sallyer grinned a bit when he observed her lift the baby upon her knee, for he felt that Miss Quigley was making a grand stand play and was not above getting solid even with the juvenile members of the Sallyer family. It was well known that she had her eye upon Sallyer's brother, Bob. Beyond the fact that she could play a disgustingly good game of golf, Sallyer admitted that he couldn't object to Miss Quigley as a sister-in-law, though as a rule it did not do for a woman in a family to outshine the men in any line. She doubtless was waiting for Bob now.

Sallyer turned to greet an acquaintance. Five minutes later he was deep in a discussion of the virtues of a new ball. Ten minutes later he had furiously accepted a challenge to a game to prove his contention. Fifteen minutes later he was teeing off at the first hole with energy and absorption.

It was a hotly contested game. At its finish Sallyer and his opponent found their argument still undecided, so they played another round. It was a glorious afternoon and they idled over the course. "When I can drink in air like this," Sallyer said every little while, "it makes me feel that life is really worth living!"

After he had finished playing Sallyer and a group of men strolled into a clump of apple trees and smoked and then simultaneously sighed and arose, for they must catch the 5:50 train. Beaming, flushed with exercise and general happiness, Sallyer tramped into the clubhouse. As he passed the big living room door shrill, angry yells smote his ear. Something at the back of his brain was disturbed, but not till he had walked straight by a little group in the window did some dim thought put the brakes on Sallyer's feet.

He blinked a moment at the tableau of Miss Quigley with Robert, Jr., in her arms before he comprehended Miss Quigley was flushed, disheveled, awry, angry Robert, Jr., struggling in her grasp, was furious. An unprejudiced person might have said that at one particularly vicious yell of Robert Jr.'s Miss Quigley shook him.

"Great snakes!" gasped Sallyer as he comprehended. "I forgot—I forgot all about his being here!"

"I should think you had!" Miss Quigley assured him. "He seems a very active child. I never worked so hard in my life as I have since 2 o'clock. And your wife has telephoned five times for you!"

She added this as though rejoiced to know that retribution awaited Sallyer at the other end of the line.

"Say," Sallyer begged. "I'm scared. Come on home with me and help temper the atmosphere when I arrive. I fancy Bob will drop in for dinner, since he isn't out here!"

"Well," said Miss Quigley, "you deserve all you are going to get—but I'm just mad enough at you to go along and see you get it"—Chicago Daily News.

Under Suspicion.

"Your prejudice against Mr. Youngrake is entirely unreasonable, pa," protested the willful young heiress. "There's a great deal in that young man."

"Yes," replied her shrewd old father, "and sometimes I'm afraid it's a great deal of the stuff I smelled on his breath the other day."—Catholic Standard and Times

REMARKABLE CHAIN LETTER

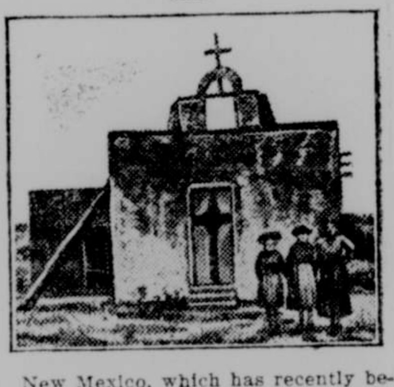
A chain letter series evolved by the seventeen graduates of the Central Illinois college at Eureka on commencement day in 1894 is still running. All of the graduates are still living, and annually they write each other a letter.

The key letter, written and signed by all the graduates, is sent the rounds each year, carrying with it seventeen other letters. With each recurring completion of the circuit each graduate takes out the letter that he wrote the year preceding and substitutes another, and then starts the seventeen on the rounds again. The key letter has so far traveled 300,000 miles, and will go on as long as two of the graduates survive. When but one is left the key letter will remain in his possession.

The class of seventeen has scattered all over the globe. All but one of the boys and all the girls are married. The graduates are Rev. W. F. Shaw of Chicago, C. E. Corey of Hongkong, China; David Feyster of Polo, Ill.; David Wetzel and J. A. Clement of Kentucky, H. T. Swift and Mrs. F. W. Burnham of Springfield, Ill.; Prof. Paul Caufman and wife of Lincoln, Ill.; Mrs. Mable McAdow, Dr. R. D. Pope and Dr. L. E. Newcomer of Iowa, Mrs. Malde Staley of Texas, Prof. L. H. Darling of Plainfield, Ill.; Judge H. F. Teel of Rushville, Ill.; C. R. Casterbury of California (the one bachelor) and Dr. F. D. Prapz of Colorado.

The first trip that the letter made was to Nova Scotia, where Mr. Swift then resided. He is now at the head of the publicity department of the Illinois public schools. The package has never contained less than seventeen letters.t Each recipient receives the pack from the same person in turn, and thus the chain is preserved intact.

ANCIENT CHURCH IN DESERT



New Mexico, which has recently become one of the sister states in the Union, can boast structures that surpass in age any other in the United States with the exception of a few in St. Augustine, Fla. Santa Fe, N. M., was the second settlement in the United States. Zealous Spanish priests first pushed their way into this part of the world which was then unknown to Europeans. Their object was to convert the Indians. The first structures that they built were churches and many of these stand today as monuments of the early priests who set them up among the Indians and preached the gospel. One of the most interesting of these early churches is located on the edge of Burrow Flat in the Sacramento National forest in New Mexico. This is a solitary region, but sparsely inhabited. Here and there is to be seen the adobe house of a Mexican and the little less primitive huts of the Pueblo Indians. These Indians are devoutly religious and there have been saying masses in these little churches at Burrow Flats for the past four hundred years.

NOVEL INCANDESCENT HATS

An active demand for "incandescent hats," the first of which was displayed in Chicago during a convention of dressmakers, has caused one concern to get out a number of designs, all operated from small dry batteries in the crown of the hat. One new design contains tiny orange bulbs, about the size and shape of a small tangerine, which are connected up with green wires looped with orange and other blossoms in decorative fashion. The hat is considerably heavier than the ordinary "lid" because of the wiring and the battery. The lights are turned on by means of a push button hid in the plume at one side. New designs will imitate rosebuds and all sorts of flowers in which a bulb formation can figure.

MOURNING IN PALESTINE

When a woman dies in Palestine her death is not publicly lamented, in strict accordance with time-honored Oriental rules, nor is the community particularly affected by any sense of bereavement. But when a prominent man of any village dies, the whole clan makes much ado to express the loss sustained by the countryside. Days of lamentation extend from two to six weeks, according to the popularity of the dead man. On each day one or more sheep are slaughtered in atonement for his soul, and a feast is spread out before the assembled mourners.

ENGLAND WASHING AWAY

In the last 30 years more than 3,000 acres of England's coast have slipped away into the sea. The county of Yorkshire has been the chief sufferer, losing about 800 acres. Lancashire and Suffolk have lost almost 600 acres, and Kent, Sussex and Lincolnshire have added materially to the total.

"ITS FALSITY IS A MATTER OF HISTORY."

The Democratic party has a long and unbroken record of doing foolish things in critical emergencies. It was true to its record when at Baltimore it permitted William Jennings Bryan to write into the platform a dogmatic assertion that under the Constitution the Federal Government is forbidden to collect tariff duties for any purpose whatever except for revenue. To have forced this utterly false and discredited doctrine upon his party was a great victory for Bryan, to be sure, but like other Bryanisms of the past, it is certain to embarrass the party and injure it in the eyes of thinking people. The New York American, for example, unspairingly condemns this needless, damaging surrender to Bryan, as follows:

"It is regrettable that the Baltimore convention committed itself to the abstract theory that 'the Federal government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue.'

"This notion that the protective principle is unconstitutional is a theory of closet philosophers. Its falsity is a matter of history. The Democratic party will never attempt to put it into practice. It is, therefore, not dangerous to the country. But it stains an honest platform with a touch of insincerity."

If there is to be no attempt to put the notion into practice, why does the platform assert it as a fundamental truth? As well say that the Free-Trade party will not attempt to put in practice the pledge to reduce duties down to the basis of "a tariff for revenue only." The two propositions belong together. They cannot be separated. Tariff for revenue, and for nothing else, means a tariff in which there is no protection. That is exactly the Democratic position. A vote for the Free-Trade ticket and platform is a vote for more imports, less employment, and low wages.

WILSON THE ENEMY OF LABOR.

"You know what the usual standard of the employee is in our day. It is to give as little as he may for his wages. Labor is standardized by the trades union, and this is the standard to which it is made to conform. No one is suffered to do more than the average workman can do. In some trades and handicrafts no one is suffered to do more than the least skillful of his fellows can do within the hours allotted to a day's labor and no one may work out of hours at all or volunteer anything beyond the minimum. I need not point out how how economically disastrous such a regulation of labor is. It is so unprofitable to the employer that in some trades it will presently not be worth his while to attempt anything at all. He had better stop altogether than operate at an inevitable and invariable loss. The labor of America is rapidly becoming unprofitable under its present regulation by those who have determined to reduce it to a minimum. Our economic supremacy may be lost because the country grows more and more full of unprofitable servants." From baccalaureate sermon at Princeton University, June 13, 1909.

Thirty-Five Years Ago.

The following article are taken from THE REPUBLICAN of August 4, 1877,—thirty-five years ago, and will be read, with interest in 1912:

A SMALL PAPER.

We are compelled this week, owing to the railroad strike and the consequent non-arrival of our regular weekly shipment of paper, to issue a paper half the usual size.

POLITICS.

At a meeting of the Republican State Committee held held in Baltimore, the resignations of Messrs. A. A. Perry and Charles Brown, as members of the State Central Committee for Garrett county, were presented and accepted.

Mr. John Daily, of Oakland, was a candidate for door-keeper of the House of Representatives.

LOCAL ITEMS.

Bricklaying on the court house was resumed the middle of the week.

About 5000 pounds of flour were brought to Oakland from Petersburg and sold to our merchants at 4½ cents per pound.

Since the railroad strike began 10,000 pounds of cornmeal have been brought to Oakland and from cuntry mills and sold at $1.75 per hnndred.

LITERARY.

The Garrett County Literary Society met in the public school building on Saturday evening when Miss Ella Peddicord read the Society paper. Miss Maggie Peddicord read an essay entitled "Gossip." Owing to the state of the public mind regarding the railroad strike, the debate on the subject: "Are the men engaged in the strike on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, justifiable," was postponed.

OFFICERS OF OAKLAND.

John M. Read, Mayor; Peter Martin, A. L. Osborn, J. W. Smith, D. Little, Town Cammissioners; M. V. Grim, clerk; P. A. Chisholm, bailiff; Ralph Thayer, Postmaster.

THE GARRETT COUNTY POSSE.

On Saturday last Sheriff Dunham was notified by proclamation of the Governor to summon enough men to preserve the peace in the limits of Garrett. Acting under these instructions the sheriff Saturday evening and Sunday morning summoned about twenty-five men, and ordered them to be in readiness to proceed to any part of the country in case of a disturbance of the peace. The Sheriff, Sunday accompanied by twelve deputies made a tour of observation along the line of the B. & O. R. R. between Oakland and Bloomington; and finding all quiet, returned to Oakland on the West bound mail the same evening. On Monday evening he took about a dozen men and placed them at the railroad bridge across the Yough, one mile west of Oakland, where they remained until the first east bound freight train passed over, about 9 o'clock, when they returned to Oakland, and have not been called on for service since.

The dispatch sent from Deer Park to the Baltimore Sun dated Sunday evening, stating that the Sheriff of Garrett county had two hundred and fifty men, fully armed, on the line of the road in this county, was the invention of a sensationalist or lunatic.

THE ADVERTISERS.

Those carrying advertisements in the paper on the above date and who still survive are:

J. C. Dunham, then Sheriff; Thomas Martin, liveryman; Benj. A. Richmond and G. S. Hamill, attorneys; Davis & Townshend, D. E. Offutt, G. W. Legge, J. O. Michael, merchant; The Browning House, R. T. Browning, proprietor; Dr. J. Lee McComas, Dr. E. H. Bartlett; G. F. Loughridge, boots and shoes; G. A. Shirer, tinner; Alex. C. Mason, M. R. Hamill, surveyors; A. G. Sturgiss; James A. Enlow, E. J. Fringer, painters.

A road examiners' notice was published locating the new county road through the Bradley farm. Messrs. P. Hamill, Henry Russell and William White were the examiners.

THE OLD NATIONAL PIKE HAS HISTORY

Longest Straight Road Built by any Government.

Saved to the historian and those who live along the dusty thread of macadam, the story of the National road is an unknown chapter; yet the flavor of romance, the memory of almost forgotten glories, of a noble, ambitious mission successfully accomplished clings to every hoary monument of that ancient highway.

The Cumberland road, as it was popularly called, was first a buffalo trail, worn deep across the Appalachain Range by the pounding of millions of bison. When the Indians came they followed this trail in their hunting and war expeditions, retreating over it westward before the ever-advancing and relentless push of the white man. Over the same path came the brave and fearless Anglo-Saxon hunter and trapper, at whose heels followed the sturdy settler, until at last the tide of immigration poured in a deluge of humanity through the mountain passes to the lands of milk and honey.

Every mile of this old highway is historic ground, consecrated by the worn and bleeding feet of our heroic nation-builders. Over it toiled the young surveyor, George Washington, guided by the noted Indian, Nemacolin, nursing dreams of future empire. A few years later, over the same route, marched the red-coated grenadier of Old England, led by the arrogant and boastful "Ned Braddock of Fontenoye," whose grave can still be seen close to the deep trail cut by the heavy army wagons of his ill-starred expedition. About the hills and valleys lingers the mighty memories and romances of that awful conflict, the French and Indian War, which for eight years, (1755-1763) drenched our frontiers in a sea of blood and tears, and which eventually led to the great struggle for liberty in 1776.

After the colonies had obtained their independence the Braddock trail was the highway over which the old soldiers of the Revolution tramped sturdily along to take up the great work of settling Ohio and Kentucky, the gift of Virginia to the young republic.

Great discontent followed the rapid settlement of this new territory. Left without Federal aid to fight the fierce and blood-thirsty savage, despised and ridiculed and neglected by the wealthy planters and slaveholders that generally controlled the Federal government, the pioneers did not altogether turn a deaf ear to the whispered machinations of the scheming and accomplished Aaron Burr when he proposed an independent republic. At this grave crisis in the affairs of the nation, when mutterings were heard in every hamlet and clearing of the West and Southwest, the far-sighted statesmen of the young republic united in a successful demand for a great national road that would pierce the mountian defiles and link together the States of the Atlantic Coast and the vast territory of the Mississippi Valley.

When, in 1802, Ohio was admitted as a State, Congress set aside 5 per cent, of all moneys received from the sale of public lands within the State to be used in the construction of a road from the navigable waters of the Atlantic to the Ohio, and the same year President Jefferson signed the bill for the survey of a national pike from Cumberland, Md., to the headwaters of the Ohio. This was the starting of the old National turnpike.

Early in 1809 Congress passed a bill authorizing the appointment of commissioners to lay out a road over the mountains, and President Jefferson appointed Thomas Moore and Eli Williams, of Maryland, and Joseph Kerr, of Ohio. These men did good work, and by the close of the year had laid out definite and well-designed plans for the enterprise. The road was located on the route they first selected, which speaks well for their wisdom. It ran from Cumberland to Wheeling, a distance of 130 miles, and from there through Ohio and Indiana, and finally lost itself in the prairies of Illinois.

The first contract was awarded in 1811. The road was constructed under the direction of the War Department, the work being let in sections to contractors, with Brigadier-General Gratiot in charge of it. It continued under the care of the Government for a number of years, but was finally put in repair and turned over to the different States through which it passes. Then they erected tollhouses and tollgates along the route, and every kind of cattle and beast was taxed, together with all classes of vehicles. Persons going to church, to the mill or to the election were exempt, as also were those going to school, to funerals or from one part of their farm to another. During the first year of its completion a flood of traffic and immigration began to pour over the new highway.

An interesting and valuable contribution to the literature of the old road is furnished by Mr. Maurice O. Eldridge, assistant director of the office of public road inquiries of the United States Department of Agricultural. Says Mr. Eldridge:

"The Cumberland road was at one time the most widely known and heavily traveled road in the United States. One evidence of this is shown by the fact that during the year 1839, $50,000 in tolls was collected in the State of Ohio alone, although the road had not at that time been completed west of Springfield. The year 1839, however, seems to have been the banner year for this great highway, as Ohio collected in that year $62,446.10 in tolls. The total amount collected in Ohio from 1831 to 1877 amounted to nearly a million and a quarter of dollars.

"It is generally thought that Henry Clay originated the idea of building the Cumberland road, but speeches delivered in Congress in 1829 gave the credit of its conception to Mr. Gallatin, Secretary of the Treasury from 1801 to 1813 under the Jefferson and Madison administrations. While Mr. Clay may not have been the originator of the scheme for building the road, he was its ablest friend in Congress, leading most of the debates for its construction and preservation. To commemorate his services in behalf of the road a monument was erected near Wheeling, W. Va. Henry Clay was regarded with great admiration and esteem all along the line of the road. This magnetic man not only made friends of the drivers, but of the tavern keepers and persons in other employments.

"The road was greatly renowned for the number and excellence of its taverns. On the mountain division nearly every mile had its tavern. Some of these hostelries were perched on elevations near the road-side, while others were sheltered behind clumps of trees, with inviting seats for idlers and wayfarers, and all with cheerful fronts toward the way-worn traveler. The tavern signs were usually elevated on posts, giving promise of good cheer, while the dripping of the overflow water from the horse troughs on the growing mint beds below lent charm to the scene. Stage houses, where travelers took their meals and stage horses were kept and exchanged, were located all along the route at intervals of about 12 miles. The bill of a wagoner, with a six-horse team, for 'putting up' over night, did not exceed $1.75, and this included the feed for the horses as well as meals for the driver and all the drinks he saw proper to take.

"The taverns and stage houses often entertained motley crowd; statesmen and teamsters, homeseekers and magicians, fortune-hunters, actors and actresses and others of greater or less prominence. Circuses and minstrels were constantly traveling over the road, giving performances at the principal towns, and roving bands of gypsies and fortune-tellers pitched their tents and built their camp fires along the wayside. In fact, between the years 1820 and 1850, nearly everything, whether the necessaries or luxuries of life or the things intended merely to amuse, found its way into the west by way of the old pike, and it is still common in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, when anything is especially novel, remarkable or peculiar, to speak of it as having 'come down the pike.'

"The National road was not a turnpike in the literal sense of the word, which means a road upon which pikes were placed to turn travelers thereon through gates to prevent the evasion of toll rates, for toll-gates were not needed on the National road, as it was usually kept in good condition and travelers paid their toll without complaint. Tollhouses were located about 15 miles apart and were all supplied with strong iron gates, swung to massive iron posts. These gates were placed on the road in 1835 to enforce the payment of tolls when necessary. The tollhouses were of uniform size and were usually round or octagonal in shape.

Proof That the War is Over.

Captain Thomas F. McArdell, ex-Confederate soldier, good printer and renowned editor, has accepted the invitation of M. C. Lowry Post, No. 214, Grand Army of the Republic, of Meyersdale, Pa., to deliver the address at the Post's annual picnic at that place next Thursday, July 25th.

The invitation stated, it it is said, that "the Grand Army of the Republic of Meyersdale wants to prove that the animosities of the war are over, and the 'blue' and 'grey' can meet together as friends."

It goes without saying that the Meyersdale Post will get a good speech, for the Captain is still full of the ardor—if not the sentiment, which animated him during the war.—Frostburg Mining Journal.

WOMAN KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Albrightsville Woman Meets Instant Death While At Her Work.

At Albrightsville, Preston county, W. Va., Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock during an electrical storm, Mrs. Thomas Smith was instantly killed.

She was in her yard taking clothes from a wire line, when a bolt of lightning struck the wire. Mrs. Smith had her hand on the wire at the time and in the other arm she carried a bundle of clothes she had just removed from the line.

Mrs. Thomas Birch was with Mrs. Smith at the time and she was knocked senseless. Mrs. Birch is expected to recover.

Mrs. Smith leaves her husband and four children.

"We'll Jolly Along."

Is the title of Mr. O. H. Bruce's latest song, the music for which was written by L. A. Clark, a copy of which has been received at this office with the compliments of the author, who is well known in Masonic and educational circles in Oakland, Mr. Bruce being District Deputy Grand Lecturer of the fraturnity and principal of the Westernport high school.

Entertained House Guests.

Chambers, Fairmont; L. L. Loar, Grafton; Ed. Offutt, Albert Ely, Stanley Mitchell, Mark White, Dr. W. W. Grant, Herbert Shaffer, Joe McComas, Edward Sincell and Milton Sincell.

At a late hour refreshments were served and dancing was resumed until an early hour.

KILLED AT ALTAMOMT.

Prominent Railroad Man Met Death There Friday.

Mr. Wm. A. Durrett, one of the best known railroad men in South Cumberland, was killed last Friday afternoon at Altamont. Mr. Durrett, who was a conductor on fast freight trains on the third division, was returning in charge of a heavy freight train from Grafton. He stopped at Altamont according to to the rules of the railroad and went to the telephone at the station to obtain an order to move his train down the mountain. When he left the office from which he telephoned he started to walk up the westbound track toward the caboose of his train. He failed to observe the approach of passenger train No. 55 and was caught by its engine, hurled from the track and killed almost instantly..

Bishop Bristol, the late President McKinley's pastor, a brilliant lecturer and man of letters, as well as one of the highest officials of the M. E. church, will preach Sunday morning in the Amphitheatre at the Park. He will also lecture on Saturday night preceding.

The Raymore Concert Co. is to give a concert and literary reading at the Maryland Theatre Wednesday night August 7th. The artists to appear will be the well known dramatic reader, Miss Helen Hobbs; Emily Dungan Moore, the contralto singer, and Belle Craddick Ray, a pianiste of note.

The followers of Luther at Grantsville, Garrett county, Md., are making preparations for the erection of a modern church for that town at the cost of about $6000. A recent bequest of Mrs. Sarah Broadwater, deceased, gave for the purpose $1,500 with the stipulation that the church must be erected within two years and the good people of that denomination at once began laying plans for the building. Plans for the collection of the additional funds are now being arranged and the various committees will soon be at work.

TEMPERANCE AND PROHIBITION

Strong Resolutions Adopted by Oakland District M. E. Conference.

At the District Conference held at Mt. Lake Park, July 12 and 13, 1912, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

With reference to the temperance situation in Maryland, be it

Resolved, That we would count ourselves more than happy if in Maryland as in West Virginia we had the opportunity to enter into a state wide campaign for Constitutional Prohibition throughout Maryland. However, opposed as we are to the saloon, we work, under the leadership of any movement that antagonizes the saloon, to the best of our knowledgeand ability.

Resolved, That we regret very sincerely the failure of the Maryland legislature at its last session to pass the state wide local option bill, which would have been the means of closing at least several saloons within the boundary of our territory. It has been reported that the bill was defeated by the vote of a Senator who had given his written pledge that he would vote for a state wide Local Option Bill. If such be the case we hereby record:

1. Our abhorrence of such conduct as opposed to common decency and moraliity, as subversive to pure legislation and the will of the people, and justly open to the contempt of all good citizens.

2. That we feel it incumbent upon ourselves to serve notice upon any political party that wherever or whenever they place in nominalion a politician of such character, we feel it our bounden duty to do our uttermost to secure the defeat of such a candidate and by this statement we record our positive opposition to the renomination of any man who is not ready to give every community in the state, by the passage of a State Wide Local Option Bill, the right to say whether it shall be cursed by the un-American saloon or not.

We hereby pledge ourselves to encourage and promote every effort that may be employed for the passage of a State Wide Local Option Bill at the next session of the State Legislature.

Resolved, That we approve of the Anti-Salloon League and all other temperance organizations that are working for the overthrow of the liquor traffic; and that we endorse with all possible emphasis the splendid leadership of Superintendent Anderson in the contest against the saloon keepers, the brewers, the distillers, and the whole conscienceless liquor outfit.

With reference to National Temperance problems, be it resolved:

1. That we petition the Senate and House of Representatives to pass the Kenyon Bill to prevent the importation of intoxicating liquors into prohibition territory.

2. That we demand in the interest of the right of the people to govern themselves, the enactment of such legislation before the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

3. That our Secretary be ordered to send a copy of these resolutions to the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, to the two Senators from Maryland, the two Senators from West Virginia, and to all the Congressmen of both states urging them to do their utmost to obtain legislation to secure release from National interference with the will of the people in dry territory.

STUNG BY RATTLESNAKE

But Eight Year Old Son of Delpha Brandt Is Recovering.

A little son of Delpha Brandt, aged eight years, who resides on Meadow Mountain a few miles from Thayerville, was bitten in the calf of his leg last Saturday afternoon by a large rattlesnake, the fangs of the reptile sinking deeply into the flesh of the little one. Dr. McComas was summoned to attend the boy, who is recovering as rapidly as possible from his unusual experience.

BLOOMINGTON.

Mr. Benjamin Jackson, of this place, has been appointed, we understand, principal of the Bloomington school for the coming term.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Shultice, of Westernport, were guests of friends in town during the past week.

Masters Jarold and Paul Kemp, sons of Dr. and Mrs. Kemp of this place, are away from home on a visit to friends and relatives in West Union, Parkersburg and Marietta.

Mrs. John Boor, of Luke, during the absence of her husband who is an agent of the W. M. R. R. at the W. Va. Junction, was in town this week visiting Mr. and Mrs. Adam Elliott. She was accompanied by her guest, Miss Russel, of Baltimore.

Mr. Harley Miller a private in the U. S. A., stationed at Ft. Howard, near Baltimore city, is home spending a three month's furlough with his mother, Mrs. Edward Miller.

The Misses Walker, of Blaine, returned home this week after a very pleasant and enjoyable visit to relatives in town and vicinity.

Work on the new county road between this place and Crab Tree has been temporarily suspended until the engineers in charge make their report to the county commissioners.

Mr. Martin McRobie, during the dull times in the coal trade affecting the public works in this vicinity, has secured employment at Blaine. His wife and little daughter, during his absence from home, are guests of Mrs. McRobie's father, Mr. William Glass, of McCool.

Mr. Frank Flynn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Flynn, of Bloomington, left for Connellsville, Pa., on Monday to seek employment.

Rev. Halpeny returned home this week from Allegany Grove, where he spent a very enjoyable week assisting in the religious work going on that place.

Mr. Edward Bradley, of our near neighboring town of Franklin, returned home on Wednesday morning from a visit to relatives near Frankville.

Never since the Johnstown flood, when the big fill at the west end of the B. & O. bridge at this place was washed away has the North Branch of the Potomac river been so high as it was on last Wednesday afternoon, between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock. The constant downpour all day Wednesday along the headwaters of the stream commenced to manifest itself shortly afternoon when it was noticed that the stream was rising rapidly. The floodtide was reached about fifteen minutes after four o'clock, when the river rose seven feet in ten minutes and flooded all the lowlands and river bottoms and threatening to carry away the little iron bridge between this place and Franklin. The water was running over the Maryland end two feet in depth. All the gardens at Franklin, the pride of their owners in the morning, are swept clean and bare and the waters that evening were rushing past the back doors of the dozen or more families living there, as if their homes had been constructed on the river bank. Pig-pens, cowstables and all the outbuildings were the first to go. Fortunately no lives were lost. All the livestock had been removed before the flood reached its highest point. Savage river was at its highest at the same time and combining its waters with those of the Potomac, sent a volume down to Piedmont that threatened at one time to do serious damage to the low parts of the town. As it was Back street was flooded to the depth of four or five feet and many families were taken from their homes in wagons when the waters were runnig in the wagon beds. The water was backed up on Main street as far as Suter's drug store and around the First National Bank to the depth of twelve inches.

The Pirates' Cave

By Clara Inez Deacon

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

It was thoroughly understood when Miss Nettie Shields, eleven years of age, was permitted to accompany her sister Fanny, of twenty, down to Eagle's nest for a few weeks' stay with their aunt, that the young miss must behave herself.

Not that Miss Nettie Shields had ever been arrested for her conduct, but that she was heedless and over-confident and almost satisfied that she knew it all. If she went out for a walk by herself she would follow a hand organ or a fire engine until she got lost, and if she started for the park to feed the squirrels she might bring up at the Battery to feed the fishes. She had solemnly promised to amend her ways and be no cause of anxiety to anyone, and she stuck to that promise for all of half an hour after arriving at the manor house. Then she met the coachman's son, a lad of twelve.

The city lass was looking at the country lad with her nose in the air and a pitying expression on her face when he walked up to her and said:

"You are not so muchy-much!"

"I am a hundred times more muchy-much than you!"

"Oh, you think so! Did you ever see a pirate's cave?"

"N—no."

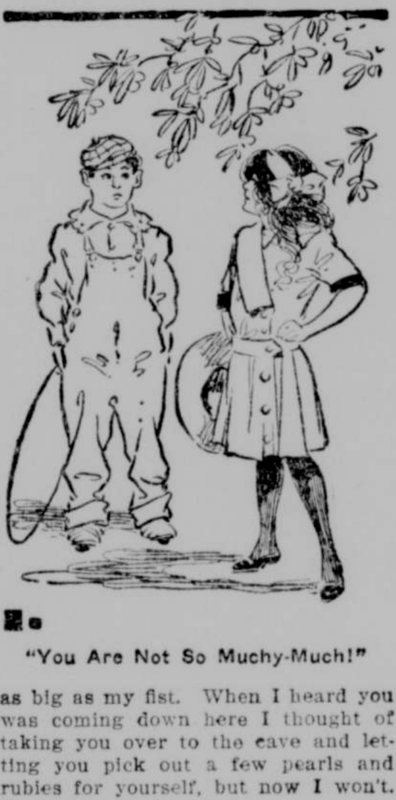
"Well, I have. You may have lots of things in the city, but you haven't got a pirate's cave."

"Where is it?"

"That's telling."

"Young man, I want to know at once, and you point out that cave or there'll be trouble!"

"Hu! No kid can bluff me! That cave is full of gold and silver and sparkling jewels. I've seen 'em. I can go there any time and get a bushel. There are also pirate skulls and bones there. There is one diamond as big as my fist. When I heard you was coming down here I thought of taking you over to the cave and letting you pick out a few pearls and rubies for yourself, but now I won't. You are too snippy."



"You Are Not So Muchy-Much!"

"Then you needn't!"

It was three days later that Miss Nettie got down on her knees to that bad boy and vowed to marry him when they grew up if he would take her to that cave. As a matter of fact, he had been told by a boy, who had it from another boy, that there was such a cave in the hills three miles away. He had lied about the rest of it, but he didn't propose to own up. He wanted to be a hero instead of an Uncle Rube, in Miss Nettie's eyes. He soon discovered that he couldn't be without setting out for the cave, and it took him a whole day to make up his mind. They must set out secretly, and if there was no cave a licking awaited him for sure on their return, and it might be bread and water for a week for the girl.

It was not until Miss Nettie had applied the epithet of coward several times that a start was made. The family dog was old and shackelty and didn't care a cent about pirates' caves, but after much coaxing he consented to go along. The way was across the fields and through the scrub to a range of hills, and the afternoon was hot and the journey toilsome. The dog gave out first. When his aged joints began to creak he knew that he had had enough, and he headed back.

"I don't think I'd want to see pirate bones unless the dog was along," observed the boy.

"But I would," was the reply from the panting but not discouraged girl.

"I took the dog so that he could smell out the cave for us."

"But we'll smell it out for ourselves. We are going right on."

"I don't believe there is any cave."

"Oh, yes, there is. I think I have read about it somewhere. If you are a booby you can trot back home."

Forty rods further on the boy dropped behind a bush for two or three minutes and then legged it for home. He wasn't going to give a pirate's ghost a chance to take him by the throat. Miss Nettie missed him, but did not even call on him to return. She had set out for a cave filled with money and jewels, and she meant to reach it.

The hills were reached at last by a very tired girl. They were covered with pine and spruce and bowlders, but after a rest she started her climb and began looking for the mouth of a cave.

The limbs and briars soon made tatters of her dress, but if she thought of the financial damage she realized also that one single ruby of the bushels in the cave would buy her many new suits. No cave! No sign of a cave! A blue-jay now and then, and a chipmunk now and then, and after an hour the girl realized that she was lost and had come on a fool's errand.

The thing to do was to sit down on a rock and have a good cry to try to figure out how many days it would take for a healthy young girl to starve to death. Miss Nettie didn't do the proper thing, however. She sat down, but before the rest of it could follow a hunting dog burst through a tangle and discovered her and began to bark. He had kept it up for two minutes when a man not far away shouted:

"Go for him, Nero! Hold him till I come!"

Nero redoubled his noise, and pretty soon a young man slid down the bank with a crash and came to a halt to exclaim:

"Well, by George!"

"What kind of a man are you to sic your dog on a lost young lady!" was demanded as the girl rose up.

"Why—why, I thought it was a—a woodchuck!"

"But it wasn't, you see!"

His cap came off and he gave his name as Robert Bonham. Miss Nettie could do no less than give her identity and explain how she came to be a Babe in the Woods. She laughed as she talked, and the young man laughed as he listened. He explained that he was also from the city and visiting relatives, and was out on the hills that afternoon for the sake of the tramp.

"Your name is Robert, but I shall call you Bob," said the little girl. "You can call me Net or Nettie. Of course you will see me home?"

"Oh, certainly."

"I want to get at that boy and roll him in the dust."

"Do you know that you are about six miles from the Eagle's Nest?" he asked.

"Mercy on me!"

"It's a mile or more to the house where I am stopping. We will go first and get a bite to eat, and then I will take you home in my auto."

The coachman's boy had returned to hide out, and although Miss Nettie was missed and inquired for he gave no information until dark. Then there was a rumpus. A searching party started out with lanterns, and the women left at home were crying, and it had got to be nine o'clock when the lost girl was driven up by the finder.

In the interval Mr. Bonham was posted on the Shields family, particularly as to Fanny. Miss Fanny had never been in love; she had a sweet disposition; her aunt was going to leave her $20,000; she would make some one an awfully good wife, and a great deal more.

The cave-searcher knew that she had broken her word, and she was conscience-stricken over it. She must do the square thing to pay for the anxiety and trouble she had caused. She did it like a little brick. As soon as released from her sister's arms she introduced Mr. Bob Bonham, and with a lump in her throat added:

"Fanny, I was intending to marry him, for he is all that a trusting girl could ask for, but being I ran away—and got lost—and tore my clothes—and broke my promise—and am going to have a scrap with that boy, why, take him and love him and marry him!"

This speech was embarrassing enough, but had no fatal effects. It was just a year ago, and Mr. Bob Bonham has made such good use of the time that he can now say he is engaged to Miss Fanny Shields.

WOULD TEACH HOW TO EAT

One Man Bold Enough to Say That Americans Have Much to Learn in This Respect.

"By a little thinking a family of five can save $120 a year in the cost of living and yet have all that they want to eat, for it is not the quantity, but the proper combination and the proper mastication that the body needs," says W. Earl Flynn, commonly known as Daddy Flynn, who is lecturing in this city on health. He is an advocate of the no-breakfast plan and he says that the number of meals that are eaten is largely a habit.

"If you eat no breakfast, cut down the meat and in general regulate the intake according to the expenditure, you will be surprised with the result. Most people eat just as much when the old machine is not working as when it is doing the hardest kind of work. A person should not eat just to satisfy his craving for food. He should eat intelligently, having an object in view, as there are foods for different conditions, foods for thick and thin blood, foods that furnish necessary salts, foods that will make us fat and foods that will make us thin."

Mr. Flynn believes that the people should be educated so that they know the difference between a protein, a carbo-hydrate and the other necessary foods, for it is of more value, he says, to know what to eat than it is to have a knowledge of astronomy and many of the subjects that are taught in the schools. He says the animals are far ahead of man in this, for they know by instinct what they should eat under the conditions in which they are living.—Indianapolis News.

POULTRY

CHICKEN COOP IS PORTABLE

Mississippi Man Invents Device of Knockdown Style—When Not in Use Takes but Little Room.

A new form of knock-down chicken coop has been patented by a Missouri man. When erected it forms a roomy coop and when taken down it occupies little space. The structure is of metal and consists of a bottom piece, a top piece and sides and two ends. The roof is curved to shed rain and has a handle by which the coop can be carried easily. All these parts fiet into each other by means of grooves and extensions. The door is a hinged flap that can be kept open or closed so that only the farmer can open it, and has vent holes in it. With this door closed the chicken or chickens are perfectly safe during the night from cats, rats or other predatory animals that roam through poultry yards and kill so many fowl.

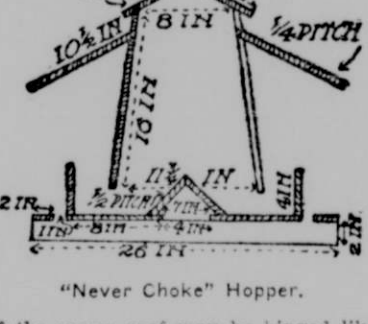
FEED HOPPER NEVER CHOKES

Minnesota Experiment Station Recommends Device as Shown in Illustration Herewith.

A good feed hopper for grain and dry mash feeding is shown in the illustration herewith and is recommended by the Minnesota Experiment station at Crookston. The diagram explains itself. The advantages of this style of hopper are that it will not choke, the chickens cannot get into the feed with their feet, the feed is kept dry even outdoors, and none is wasted. The wing on each side shows the roof over the trough to keep the outside feed dry. One side of the upper roof may be hinged like a lid for filling. The gable shaped projection, running the length of the floor, allows almost every kernel of feed to be reached by the birds, thus preventing feed from getting musty from remaining in the hopper too long.



"Never Choke" Hopper.

Providing Fresh Air.

Birds are so constituted by nature that they require an abundance of fresh air for health and vigor. They never do well with a limited supply of air. For this reason all coops and boxes in which poultry of any kind is kept in the summer should be as open as possible.

Let the roof be tight to protect from rain, but let at least one side be open for the admission of fresh air at all times. The open side may be protected by wire cloth or other material that will let in the air, but keep out rats, etc.

Cleaning Up Old Nests.

The incubating season is over with poultry so far as profit to the owner is concerned, and the Minnesota experiment station advises that all old nesting material be taken out and burned, and that all nesting boxes be disinfected and given a coat of liquid lice killer, after which fresh straw may be placed in them for late layers.

The creosote preparations sold at lumber yards for wood preserving have been used with good effect as lice killers.

Disposition of the Cripples.

The cripple and the malformed chicken should be put to death immediately after hatching. Such little unfortunates will bring nothing but disappointment. They will give you more care than ten well and whole ones. They will make you sick of the chicken business and give your entire flock a black eye from the first. Kill 'em the instant they are born.

AID SUNKEN TORPEDO BOATS

Telephonic Communication Established With Submerged Naval Vessels in German Harbor.

German torpedo boats are all equiped with newly designed submarine telephone attachments. This apparatus is attached to the outside of the boat just forward of the tower. If the boat is sunk, an officer releases the apparatus, which floats to the surface of the water by means of the buoy, which is an essential part of the equipment. This can be picked up by any other boat in the vicinity and telephonic communication be thus established with the sunken craft.

During some recent naval manoeuvers in the harbor of Kiel, the German submarine "U" was sunk, with a crew of 25 men on board. Telephonic communication was at once established with the rescuers, to whom the commander of the disabled vessel reported that the crew was in no immediate danger, as oxygen for 48 hours was available.

For three hours the crew lay prisoners at the bottom of the harbor. All this time a running fire of talk was kept up with the rescuers, whose work was directed much more effectively than if they had been compelled to work blindly and without advice from below.

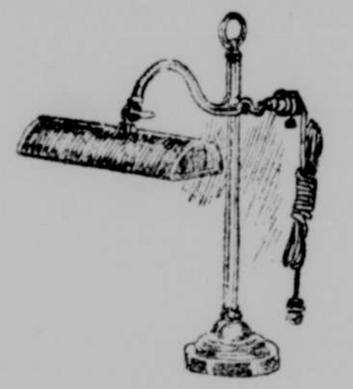
IDEAL FOR WINDOW LIGHTING

Long Lamp Particularly Advantageous for Illumination in All Kinds of Show Cases.

"It is just like an ordinary incandescent lamp, except the current goes in one end and comes out the other," said Ben J. Ballard, of Cleveland, O., in telling about the electric light shown in the illustration.

The light is cylindrical in shape, about 1¼ inches in diameter and 12 inches long. The current passes in one end, through the filament and out the other.

"The lights are peculiarly advantageous for window or showcase lighting," said Mr. Ballard. "Suitable reflectors are provided and the lamps inserted, thus forming a complete line of light across the window, as well as down the sides, if desired."



Show Case Illuminator.

Whether in the window or showcase the reflector may be so arranged that the bare light is not visible to the eye of a passerby, thus bringing out the display of goods.

Solves Water Problem.

Santa Monica, Cal., is considering a unique plan for solving a serious water problem. The supply is already inadequate and an application for a part of the Owens river from Los Angeles has not been granted. Now it is proposed to distill ocean water for domestic purposes, and the municipality may purchase the Burning Mountain, several miles up the coast in the Santa Monica range, for use as a heating plant. It is believed the sea water could be carried through a "U" pipe deep to the hot interior of the smoking hill and distilled at practically no cost. Power might be produced, some engineers think, that would enable the municipality ta maintain an electric lighting plant.

IRON AND STOVE COMBINED

Water May Be Boiled and Food Cooked in Small Way—Heat Is Supplied by Electricity.

Not so very long ago a combination sad iron and cook apparatus was patented, and now comes an Illinois man with an elaboration on this idea. In this new apparatus, as in the first one, an electric fan forms a stove by being inverted, resting upon the handle and two legs that at other times fold along the top. In the new cooker, however, the inventor has designed a cooking vessel of substantially the same shape as the iron and with handles for lifting it on or off the "stove." In this vessel water may be boiled and food cooked as well—in a small way—as on a regular stove, electricity supplying the heat. Owing to the shape of the vessel the entire bottom is heated and food in it cooks better and quicker than if it was an ordinary pan.

PROGRESS OF RACE IS GIVEN

Position of Speeding Automobiles Shown by Electrical Score Board at Santa Monica.

An electrically operated score board was used for the first time in the history of auto road racing at Santa Monica. By means of this device, the grand stand was kept informed as to the position of the racers all along the eight-mile course, as each car number was painted on a sheet of metal which was moved along the score board upon divisions that represented miles and half miles.

The operator of the board was informed as to the position of the cars by means of telephones, temporary stations having been erected at half-mile intervals. An operator was placed at each station, and in addition to reports on progress of cars he sent in notification of tire or engine trouble, of cars that dropped out of the race, and, most important of all, of accidents.

USEFUL AS DUST COLLECTOR

Electric Motor Affords Means of Operating Machine and Gathering Up Little Particles.

More attention is being given to providing safeguards for workmen in shops and factories where dust particles are thrown into the air by grinding, polishing and buffing machines.

The electric motor as shown in the illustration affords a means of operating a suction dust collector on such machines as well as of operating the machine itself, says the Popular Electricity. The grinding and buffing wheels are partially surorunded by a metal hood, while a fan and receptacle below complete the suction outfit.

Heat for Bears.

During a cold snap last winter it was found necessary to furnish heat for the bears at the New York zoo.

As the laying of steam pipes would entail a large expense, it was decided to use electricity. Consequently electric radiators were installed, much to the comfort and surprise of bruin.

Safety Lantern.

Electric watchmen's lanterns are used by many of the largest gas and oil companies. A battery is contained in the lantern, while a miniature Mazda bulb supplies the light. There is absolutely no danger of fire or explosion from this means of lighting.

IT COULD NOT HAPPEN.

A newspaper having offered a prize for the most impossible item of local news, the competition was won by a wildly imaginative genius, who sent in the following brief story:

"A cabman and a bus driver came into collision in the street with their vehicles so that their wheels were locked.

"'My dear sir,' said the cabman. 'I'm very sorry for this accident. Will you kindly excuse me?'

"'Pray do not mention it, my dear sir,' replied the bus driver. 'The fault was mine, rather than yours.'

"And after getting clear of each other they bowed politely and proceeded about their business with a pleasant 'good day.'"—Tit-Bits.

The Call.

"Of course you have repaid the man who lent it, with interest?"

"No. That old friend needs a lesson. I'm going to keep his fifty a few years longer to teach him not to be so careless with his money."

Going Slow.

"Some new potatoes today?" inquired the grocer with a sugary smile.

"I don't know," responded the young housewife. "The old kind have been quite satisfactory. How do these new potatoes differ from the old brands? If they are really an improvement, I might try some."

All Swelled Up.

"What is the matter with Jones? He used to be a modest sort of fellow, but lately he seems almost bursting with self-importance."

"Haven't you heard? Mrs. Jones is suing another woman for alienating his affections, and puts the damages at fifty thousand dollars."—Judge.

REST OF THE DEAD LIVED NOT AGAIN

The General Resurrection and the First Resurrection.

Pastor Russell's Address at the International Bible Students Convention In Scotland—Several Thousand Hear Explained Much-Misunderstood Text.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Glasgow, Scotland, July 28.—Bible students of this vicinity numbering hundreds have had a three days' Convention. Another General Convention of Bible Students will be held in London August 2-5. Today's session, attended by several thousand, was addressed by Pastor Russell. We report one of his addresses, based on Revelation xx, 4-6. It was announced that next Sunday he would address a similar Convention in London.

Christianity Versus Platonism.

Many Christians whose faith cannot accept the Divine promise have turned instead to the theory advanced long before Jesus' day by the Grecian philosophers, headed by Plato. Their teachings respecting death, although less logical than the Bible theory, require less faith. Thus we have it today that Christian faith respecting the future life is supported, not by the Bible, but by the teachings of the heathen from Plato down.

Plato and all the heathen claim without evidence that dying was not the penalty for sin, that, on the contrary, it is another step of an evolution process, a passage-way to a new life, under new conditions, of which they know nothing. Theirs is merely a guess, a philosophy, and, of course, has no use for a resurrection of the dead, because the fact of death is denied and the dead are said to be more alive than when they were alive.

The Bible declares that from the very beginning God purposed the resurrection of the dead and that, therefore, all believers were privileged to speak of the deceased, not as dead in an absolute sense, like the brute, but as being asleep—waiting for the glorious morning of Messiah's Kingdom and the resurrection. Thus the Prophet declares, "Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning." Thus the Bible tells us that "Abraham slept with his fathers," etc., etc.

St. Paul says, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, * * * then those who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." (I Corinthians xv, 13-18.) How could this be true if they have been alive in heaven for centuries?

First or Chief Resurrection.

Not all of the dead will have the same resurrection. Some will be raised to the likeness of the first Adam, while others, members of the Body of Christ, will be granted a superior resurrection—to glory, honor, immortality and the divine nature. Of the latter St. Paul explains, "sown in weakness, raised in power; sown in dishonor, raised in glory; sown an animal body, raised a spirit body." (I Corinthians xv, 43, 44.) Of the same class our text declares, "Blessed and holy are all they that have part in the First Resurrection; * * * they shall be Priests unto God, and unto Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." (Revelation xx, 6; v, 10.)

"But the Rest of the Dead."

Ah! this part of our text is sadly misunderstood and has thrown many Bible students off the track of truth. They have understood the passage to mean that Christ and His glorified Bride class will reign for a thousand years over such of humanity as will be alive at the time of the setting up of the Messianic Kingdom. They think that this passage teaches that all the millions of the world who have died during the past six thousand years will have no share in the blessings of Messiah's Kingdom.

The proper thought is this: Adam had life and the right to continue it unceasingly so long as he was in harmony with God. When he sinned he came under the sentence, "Dying, thou shalt die." Our race, his children, shared his sentence by heredity. Hence we are all dying. From the Divine standpoint none have life. Those who become disciples of Jesus are said to pass from death unto life, although their new life will not be completed until the First Resurrection. But speaking from this standpoint Jesus said, Let the dead bury their dead, but go thou (believer) and preach the Gospel.—Luke ix, 60.

From this Divine standpoint the world in general today is dead, has no right to life and can obtain eternal life only through accepting Jesus: "He that hath the Son hath life; He that hath not the Son hath not life."—I John v. 12.

Thus seen the world, whether in the grave or out of the grave, are all from the Divine standpoint dead. During the thousand years of Messiah's reign these will be helped up, up, up, out of sin and death, back to perfect life and all that Adam lost. The uprising of the world during that thousand years is the general resurrection. This is the meaning of the word anastasis—it does not refer to mere awakening from the tomb. Hence, although the world will be gradually rising out of sin and death conditions, they will not live again in the sense of attaining perfection of life until the thousand years are finished.

Myra's Confidences

"Your new hat is just grand, teacher, and I hope you wear it in good health!" exclaimed Myra Schpock. Myra was exalted monitor of the flower boxes and was attending to them after school.

"Thank you, dear," answered Miss Lord as she marked her fourth grade arithmetic papers.

"It's nothing to thank about," said Myra. "Say, you ought to see my ma's new hat. It's red, with purple flowers. It's got a big green bow across the back. When pa saw it he said, 'Mrs. Sarah Schpock, that there hat is one stunner!' I like yours better than ma's, but I wouldn't say so to ma. It'd make her sore."

"Of course, you wouldn't want to hurt your mother's feelings," agreed the teacher.

"My ma saw you coming to school yesterday with a swell," confided Myra. "Ma said, 'I ain't sure if it's Wednesday or Thursday morning he 'scorts your teacher to school, but I'm going to make it my business to find out.' So she watched to see."

"Child, what difference can it possibly make to your mother?" asked Miss Lord in surprise.

"Ma doesn't want to miss anything like that. She says it just does her heart good to see you and the swell go by so nice like together. Ma hasn't had much pleasure since the twins came, so she enjoys it when you two go by. She says, 'That man can't take his eyes went off your teacher.'"

"You must not talk like that, Myra," reprimanded Miss Lord. "It isn't good taste to say such things about people."

"I don't, honest and true, Miss Lord. I said to my ma, I said: 'Ma, you don't know nothing about it. He ain't really my teacher's man. It's the flit and flutter teacher what likes Miss Lord.'"

"And who may he be?" inquired the teacher with a gasp of astonishment.

"He's our exercise 'structor, Mr. Fillerpson. We kids call him 'flit and flutter,' because he always kept telling us to flit and flutter when we drilled for our butterfly entertainment. I said to my ma, I said, 'P'raps I don't know my long division, but I do know when a man is just crazy about a lady.' Ma laughed so hard she broke her new corset steel."

"Myra, you are impossible," declared Miss Lord. "If you paid as close attention to your long division as you do to other people's affairs you would probably learn your numbers. You are certainly a case for the psychology department."

"We have nicknames for all the teachers," declared the loquacious Myra, not at all abashed. "The singing superintendent is 'Do-Mi-Sol.' We call the sewing lady 'Thimble,' because she gets such a mad when we forget our thimbles. The drawing lady is 'Tiptoe.' She walks as if she was afraid of waking the baby."

"What a disrespectful class of children I have!" exclaimed the amused teacher, trying to wear a disapproving look and failing. As a token of her capitulation she added, smiling: "I wonder if I have a nickname?"

"Dast I tell you yours?" asked Myra.

"I'm eager to hear it."

"Yours is 'Lady Violet,' because you always smell so nice of violets. I hope I will when I'm a big lady."

"Thank you. That's a very nice nickname."

"Teacher," said Myra after a moment's silence, "Izalla Zwick ain't coming to school tomorrow. She's got to go to the doctor's for her nose."

"Is her nose at the doctor's?" laughed Miss Lord.

"No, ma'am, but she has badinoids. That's the reason she's so bad. When they're taken out she won't make no more whisperings in school."

"Poor child, I'm sorry for her. Give her my love."

"Oh! Oh! Miss Lord! Look quick! There's anautomobile. It's your swell; he's coming right into school. My! Your cheeks look pretty and red!"

"Myra, I'm afraid your mother will be worrying about you. Now, you'd better run home, dear. Thank you for helping me so nicely."

"Good-by, teacher. My ma won't have no mad on me when I tell her what I seen."

The Stamp Upside Down.

He was a gallant post office clerk, and business for the moment was slack. Presently, to his joy, there entered a beautiful young lady.

"What can I do for you?" he asked, with unusual affability.

"I want a two-cent stamp," said his customer, "and would you mind weighing this letter for me, as I'm afraid it may be a little too heavy."

Mind? The very reverse. He was delighted, and chatted glibly about the weather while he executed her order. He even volunteered to lick and affix the stamp for her—a courtesy which she accepted with a dainty blush.

Just as he was laying the stamp carefully on the precious envelope, however, she stopped him.

"Put it upside down," she requested.

"Why?" he asked.

"Oh," she replied, "that means something to Charlie!"

And the clerk's interest vanished as the clouds of monotony once more gathered on his horizon.

MONKEY USED IN HERALDRY

A list of the animals having a place in heraldry would embrace not only all the well known beasts, but many weird and impossible creatures, such as unicorns, griffins and dragons. But, so far as is known, there is but one instance of the monkey's admission into the select circle.

Three monkeys figure in the Leinster coat-of-arms. They stand with plain collar, chained. The motto is "Crom-a-boo," which means "To Victory." This device was adopted in the year 1316 by John Fitzthomas Fitzgerald, and an interesting story attaches thereto.

It appears that when the earl of Leinster was an infant he formed one of the residents of Woodstock, now pertaining to the Marlbourough family. There was a fire in the castle, and in the ensuing confusion the child was overlooked. When he was remembered, those who dashed for the nursery found it in flames. The child was, however, soon found in one of the towers, clasped in the arms of a big ape, which, with considerable courage had fought its way through the smoke and flames in order to rescue its young friend. It had carried the child to the top of one of the towers, which, its intelligence told it, was the safest place in the burning structure.

In recognition of this act of devotion the earl, when he attained manhood, actually discarded the family coat-of-arms and adopted the monkeys for his crest, and the family has retained it to this day.

SWAN BANQUET FOR HUNTERS

One of the most prolific writers on natural history in eastern England, entertained the other day, at his home, Ibis house, Yarmouth, at a swan banquet, all the veteran wildfowlers and punt gunners who for years have made a happy hunting ground of Breydon Water, the vast tidal estuary near Yarmouth, which has yielded more bird trophies to the collector than any similar expanse of mud flats along the east coast. The royal bird that graced the board had been shot on the wing, and weighed 21 pounds. It was roasted, being enveloped in a dough crust three inches thick, from which it emerged brown and luscious, after three and a half hours in the oven. A poem composed in its honor by the donor of the feast was read, as the great bird was brought to the table. The guests ranged up to octogenarians, and after a royal repast, many tales were told of prowess with the swivel gun. The story which capped the lot told of 150 birds which fell to a single discharge of one of these weapons from a punt.

FAMOUS WELL OF BEERSHEBA

At Beersheba, in Palestine, are two circular wells of fine, pure water, one of which is known as Abraham's well. Beersheba means, "Well of Oath," or "Seven Wells," and according to one story the place received its name because of the alliance formed here between Abraham and Abimelech, king of Gerar, which was ratified by a gift of seven ewe lambs from Abraham to Abimelech as a witness of the fact that the well was dug by Abraham.

SEA DEVILS ARE MONSTERS

Monster sea devils are frequently caught in the gulf waters off the coast of Texas. These fish sometimes weigh as much as 3,500 pounds. They are ferocious in appearance and are possessed of wonderful strength. The method of catching them is to throw a harpoon into their body and when they have pulled the boat around for some time and begin to get exhausted, to finish them by means of a few rifle bullets. Many thrilling encounters with these giant fish have been had and not infrequently the daring sportsmen have had narrow escapes from being carried far to sea. While they do not in any way resemble the devil fish they are frequently given that misnomer.

INVENTION OF LITHOGRAPHY

Senefelder, a Bavarian playwright, seeking a means of duplicating sketches cheaply, experimented with a porous stone which lay at hand. He drew upon it with a greasy ink, then moistened the stone with water, and then dabbed greasy ink all over it. The water kept the ink from adhering to any part of the stone except where he had first drawn. Putting the stone into a press with a sheet of paper, he obtained a reproduction of his drawing. Thus was lithography invented. Inking rollers quickly replaced his clumsy dabber, and of late aluminum is used in place of stone.

CAUSE OF CRIME AND MISERY

More Wickedness Attributable to Liquor Traffic in United States Than Any Other Source.

(By REV. JESSE HILL, Portland, Me.)

There are three decisions of the United States Supreme Court which we need to keep with us.

1. In the case of Crowley vs. Christensen, 137 U. S. Reports 86: "The statistics of every state show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these liquor saloons than to any other source."

It is undoubterly true that it is the right of every citizen of the United States to pursue any lawful trade or business, under such restrictions as are imposed upon all persons of the same age, sex or condition.

2. In the case of the state of Kansas vs. Ziebold and Hablin, 123 U. S. Reports 623-662: "We cannot shut out of view the fact within the knowledge of all that the public health, the public morals and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks."

3. Once more, in the instance of the license cases in the 46 U. S. Reports 573-632: "If a loss of revenue should accrue to the United States (because of prohibition) from a diminished consumption of ardent spirits, she will be a gainer a thousandfold, in the health, wealth and happiness of the people."

You may not send a letter through the postoffice to exploit a gold mine if there is no gold in the mine, because the United States must protect its citizens from imposition. You may not send a newspaper through the mail with the advertisement of a lottery, because society must be protected from those who get something for nothing. But you may open a saloon and grant to a man "letters patent of state ignobility and decorate him with a cross of the national legion of dishonor—knighted, as it were, to be the dram-seller to the sovereign majesties of the state in which you live."

SALOONS OF NEW YORK CITY

Gotham Holds 30,000 Government Permits to Sell Intoxicating Liquors—Saloons Number 13,000.

New York city holds 30,000 federal licenses, or government permits to sell liquor. Her saloons number 13,000. She has plenty of hotel bars and wet grocers, and plenty of drug stores. Nevertheless, all of these added together leave thousands of licenses for blind pigs and hole-in-the-wall concerns. Her police alone cost more than the money she receives from her drink traffic, and her charities, dollar for dollar, outcost her liquor revenue. Her hospitals and correction houses are full; her jails are overflowing; her courts never close; and she nearly fills Sing Sing with her prisoners alone. That's the way New York city makes money!

Level-Headed.

A handsome young fellow, but given to drink, thought himself in love with a beautiful girl.

She came into a friend's room one night and said: "John proposed tonight. He went down on his knees and said I was the only power on earth that could save him, and that if I did not consent to marry him he should fill a drunkard's grave."

"What did you say?" asked her friend.

"Well," she replied, "I told him that I was not running a Keeley Cure, but if he really wanted to be saved I could give him the address of several which I had heard highly recommended."

That girl was level-headed.—Northwest White-Ribboner.

Never Before.

Never before so many children in school learning the evil effects of alcohol and narcotics.

Never before so many people refusing to take alcoholic medicine.

Never before so many temperance sermons being preached.

Never before so much unfermented wine used at sacrament.

Never before the brewers so persistently advertising their beer as pure, their beer healthful, their beer clean.

Something has happened and the liquor sellers know it.

Saloons in New York.

New York has more saloons than all of the states south of Mason and Dixon's line combined. She pays for them is 27,000 insane (75 per cent. of which are drinkers), and 1,200 deaths a year from alcoholism.

No Use for Drinkers.

Out of 207 business men, taking them just as they came, 97 told a reporter in California that no drinking man need apply to them for work as long as they could get non-drinking employes.

DELEGATES SEATED FAIRLY, SAYS TAFT

President Issues Statement Denying Theft at Chicago.

Washington, July 29.—A statement defending the action of the Republican National Committee, the Credentials Committee of the Chicago Convention itself in deciding the Roosevelt-Taft contests, was given out at the White House yesterday afternoon.

The statement begins:

"The National Committee which passed upon the contests of 1912 was the committee chosen in 1908, when Roosevelt was the leader of the party, at a time when his influence dominated the Convention.

"There were 252 delegates to the Republican National Convention af 1912 whose seats were contested; 238 of these were Taft delegates whom Roosevelt people sought to unseat."

Then follows a statement of the party practice in deciding contests—first by the Credentials Committee of the Convention, and finally by the convention itself. The seats of 74 delegates-at-large from 14 States and 178 district delegates were contested. The statement says:

"There were only four States—Arizona, Michigan, Texas and Washington, having in all 28 delegates, including six district delegates from the State of Washington—where the contests were at all worthy of the name, and in none of the 14 States did the contestants at large bring the matter to a record vote in the convention, and no rollcall was demanded in any such case.

"In no other convention was so much care exercised, or pains taken, or so much time devoted to the careful investigation and fair determination of contests. No delegate was permitted to vote upon any contest affecting the right of his own seat. In no other convention were there ever presented, manifestly for the deception of the public, so many wholly unwarranted and unjustified contests. There were protests filed against 238 Taft delegates, but in two cases only, involving four delegates—two from California and two from the Ninth district of Alabama—was there a rollcall demanded in the convention. In the California case the right of the Taft delegates to their seats was sustained by a vote of 542 to 529, and in the Alabama case by a much larger vote. In a very large number of cases the right of the Taft delegates was affirmed by unanimous consent of the convention, and in others by a viva voce vote, no roll-call being demanded."

The White House statement says Governor Hadley moved to strike out only 92 names and the cases from Virginia and the District of Columbia, 20 seats, were so without evidence that the claim of "stolen" delegates is reduced therefor from 238 to 72, "and this list includes two delegates from the Eleventh Congressional district of Kentucky, one of whom was given Roosevelt, and two from the Ninth Congressional district of Tennessee, a case in which his contest managers had so little confidence that they abandoned and never presented it to the committee on credentials." The 72 contests were then taken up in detail and evidence cited to show that the Taft delegates were regularly seated.

Of the California cases, it is said a State law was passed after the call prescribed the manner of electing delegates had been issued by the National Committee, the purpose of which was to have the State's delegates vote as a unit instead of by district, a practice that has obtained in the Republican party since 1880.

Much space is given to the Indiana contests, where after the State convention had adjourned, 30 Roosevelt delegates—not even all of those who had attended the regular convention—elected contesting Roosevelt delegates while standing in the corner of the convention hall, not even having a secretary to record the proceedings.

NOTICE TO DELINQUENT TAX-PAYERS.

Taxpayers who are delinquent for their 1910 and 1911 taxes are notified to make settlement of the same at once, otherwise I will be compelled to advertise and make the money in the manner prescribed by law, much as I may regret to do so. Orders are coming in daily from the County Commissioners' office which must be met and in order to do so I must have the money on hand. Attorneys and agents for non-residents and those having any interests in the unpaid taxes due upon lands and property are also notified to look to their interests.

This is positively the last notice to delinquents.

Fell From Wagon.

Yesterday afternoon Louis Littman lost his footing and fell from a wagon being driven by Arthur Naylor and was rendered unconscious for an hour or more as a result. He was attended by Dr. Broadwater and this morning his condition is very much improved.

BITTINGER.

A serious wreck occured on Jennings Brothers railroad, near this place, on Wednesday of last week, in which Lloyd Hoover, fireman, was instantly killed and several others slightly injured.

A most delightful entertainment was given in the Lutheran church in this village on last Saturday evening by Miss Anna Manges, daughter of Rev. E. Manges, of Oakland.

Messrs. Urner and Simon Beachy made a business trip to Baltimore and Washington a few days ago.

During the heavy rains last week the streams in this neighborhood were swollen beyond all previous high water marks. Several bridges were swept away and some damage done to crops in the low lands.

Mrs. Cornelius Bittinger and daughter, Mrs. C. E. Newman, of Connelsville, Pa., are spending this week with relatives here.

Mr. William Brenneman, of Meadow Mountain, visited his mother here on Sunday.

It is reported that Prof. J. C. Beahm has been chosen principal of the High School at Salisbury, Pa., and will move his family to that place in the near future.

The remains of Lloyd Hoover, of Jennings, who was killed in a railroad wreck last Wednesday, were laid to rest in the cemetery here on Friday afternoon.

John H. Stark who was seriously ill for some days, we are glad to report is able to be about again.

The wet weather is greatly hindering the making of hay and farmers are anxious for sun shine.

Originated Dinner Custom.

We are told that in Venice originated the custom of giving favors to guests. Henry III. attended a sugar banquet in the doge's palace where plates, cups and even napkins were formed from sugar, and 300 spun sugar effigies were given to the ladies. This dinner of state lasted three hours, and king Henry brought with him his own bottler, who presided over the wines.

Inevitable Result.

"I am surprised to hear that Dubbleigh has broken down," said Stubbs. "He used to have a splendid constitution." "Yes," said Wiggletrope, "but he began amending it."—Harper's Weekly.

Lesson in Humility.

"As long ez I wuz po'," said Brother Williams, at a revival, "I wuz humble enough ter be thankful for what I wuz 'bout ter receive. But one day I found $10 in de big road. After dat I went about holdin' my head so high dat I couldn't see what waz befo' me, an' I fell in a dry well, an' staid dar three days, hollerin' fer folks ter pull me out. Satan hisself wuz once an angel in heaven, but he couldn't stand prosperity, an' look whar he is now!"

Iconoclast Resumes Work.

A Chicago physician has made a translation of an Egyptian papyrus which, it is claimed, dislodges Hippocrates from his place as "father of medicine" by anticipating his discoveries some 5,000 years. Even appendicitis, it is asserted, is described in the old papyrus. It now remains for some one to show that Ecclesiastes' dictum, "There is nothing new under the sun," was really written by Pharaoh or Thothmes.

Heart Controls Life.

The Modern Voice.

Marvelous Storm Detector.

Flageolet is the musical name of a French scientist who has invented a wireless receiver so delicate, according to the description recently given before the French Academy of Sciences, that it can detect the advent of a storm three hundred miles away.

Genius Simply Concentration.

MORERI II,

20279.

Having lost my Percheron Stallion Herve, I have purchased MORERI II 20279, a Registered Percheron Stallion, bred by R. D. NcGonigle & Sons, of Ashley, Ohio.

Moreri II was foaled May 9, 1908. He is a brilliant black with star, weight 1850 pounds.

Moreri is of kind and gentle disposition, good style, good action, well ribbed, heavy boned and the very best of feet and legs. He is pronounced by experienced horsemen to be one of the best, if not the best Stallion that was ever brought to this locality, and when mare owners once see him he will not have to be peddled to get patronage. Positively there is no better bred horse in the State.

Will Stand at my Barn on the Farm for the Entire Season 1912.

TERMS: To insure a colt on foot $12.00. A lien will be retained on both mare and colt until insurance fee is paid. The best of care will be taken by experienced horsemen, but will not be responsible for accidents.

No. 1808 Equity In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this bill is to procure a decree for the sale of the real estate of Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson, both late of Garrett County, deceased, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay and discharge the claims of their several creditors.

1st. The Bill states that the said Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson were during their lifetime engaged in the mercantile business in Garrett county, under the name of C. M. Wilson and Brother, and became indebted to the above named plaintiffs in various sums, and to numerous other creditors.

2nd. That being so indebted, the said Charles M. Wilson departed this life on or about the day of , 1912, and the said Milton O. Wilson departed this life the day of , 1912, both dying intestate, the said Charles M. leaving a widow, L. Blanche Wilson and the following children, William L. Wilson, Robert Wilson, Hollis Wilson, Harry Wilson and Virginia Wilson (the children being infants) as his heirs at law and that they reside in Garrett county, that the said Milton O. left the following sisters and brothers as his only heris at law: Stella T. Feeley who was intermarried with W. A. Feeley, A. I. Wilson, Jr., all of whom are of full age and reside in Tucker county, West Virginia, Bessie Homan, who intermarried with H. C. Homan and J. T. Wilson, all of whom are of full age and reside in Mineral county, West Virginia.

3rd. That letters of administration was granted by the Orphans' Court of said Garrett County to Thomas Markwood, both on the personal estate of Charles M. Wilson and the personal estate of Milton O. Wilson.

4, 5 and 6. That the said Charles M. Wilson had executed three separate mortgages on his real estate one to Michael Boyle, Hugh G. Hamill, Maria Watson and G. S. Hamill; the second to Marmaduke Best and G. S. Hamill, and the third to Charles I. Best and G. S. Hamill, all of which are unpaid and are liens on the real estate of which said Charles M. Wilson died seized and possessed.

7th. That both the Charles M. Wilson and Milton O. Wilson were seized and possessed of valuable real estate at the time of their respective deaths.

8th. The Bill then charges that the personal estate of the said decedents is not sufficient to discharge all of the just debts due and owing by them at the time of their decease, and in order that said creditors may be paid in full, the real estate or a part thereof, will have to be sold.

9th. The Bill then sets out in part the real estate owned by the said decedents at the time of their respective deaths, or so much thereof, as may be necessary to pay that portion of said indebtedness as may remain unsatisfied after application thereto of said personal estate.

The bill then prays for general relief and states that the said Stella T. Feeley and William A. Feeley, her husband, A. I. Wilson, Jr., Bessie Homan and H. C. Homan, her husband and J. T. Wilson are non-residents of the State of Maryland.

It is thereupon this 19th day of July, 1912, ordered by the Circuit Court of Garrett County, in equity, that the plaintiffs by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett County aforesaid, once in each of four successive weeks before the 9th day of August, 1912, give notice to the absent defendents of the object and substance of the bill, warning them, and each of them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 26th day of August next, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

THREE SERIOUSLY INJURED IN A RUNAWAY

Entire Family of Mr. Albert Marshall More or Less Hurt Monday Afternoon

The entire family of Mr. Albert Marshall, of Uniontown, Pa., consisting of himself, Mrs. Marshall and their daughter Miss Virginia, were more or less seriously injured in a runaway accident which occured Monday afternoon on the road leading from Conneway's Tower down the mountain to Gortner.

The team was being driven by Vernon Lyon, a trustworthy young man in the employ of Mr. Jacob Echard, when an automobile passed and one of the horses gave a sudden forward lunge which broke the trace, following which the pole of the vehicle fell and the horses sprang forward. After running a short distance the carriage toppled over the side of the road and threw the occupants out upon a mass of rock. Mrs. Marshall was the most seriously hurt, her injuries being of such a nature that from the time of the accident until last night she was lying in an unconscious state at the residence of Mr. Henry Rider, near the scene of the accident, to whose home the injured were removed.

Miss Marshall's injuries consisted of cuts and bruises on her face and body and Mr. Marshall was badly shaken up and had his leg injured.

Mr. Marshall is one of the editors of the Uniontown News-Standard, published at Uniontown, Pa.,

Dr. Broadwater is the attending physician.

Big Peach Crop.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is operating special express trains out of Romney and other towns in Hampshire county to expedite the movement of the peach crop, which is unusually large this year. The peaches, claimed to be the equal of the finest raised in California, are in great demand in the eastern and middle-western markets and are being rushed to distributing points as fast as steam can carry them.

The crop is just beginning to ripen. As the season advances and the fruit becomes more plentiful the number of trains will be increased.

The apple prospect continues glitteringly bright in the great Berkley belt, and special arrangements will also be made by the railroad company to handle the shipments which will begin in the near future.

Orchard values continue to mount steadily upward throughout the eastern part of the State, the latest sale figures being given at $220 per acre.

SINCELL'S

A clean-up sale worth your consideration, your time and your money. At the time of making the purchase of goods for this season we contemplated a big season, but, on account of the long rainy season, we have fallen short in our sales and consequently have the greater part of the stock on hand at this time. We are going to lose a lot of money in this sale but you can find it and keep it for the finding.

We will put on sale for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 15th, 16th and 17th, 300 Pairs of Women's Queen Quality White Buck, Patent Leather, Gun Metal, Suede, Satin and Tan Oxfords in such styles as Colonial, Lace, Button, one and two strap, and plain toe. Your choice of any of the above goods at $2.00 a pair that sell for $3.50 to $4.50.

200 pairs Children's Strap, Gun Metal, Suede, White Canvass, and Patent Leather at a discount of 1-3 off the regular price.

250 pairs Men's Oxfords in Black, Tan and Patent Leather, that sold for $3.00, $3.50 & $4.00, will be on sale at just 60 cents on the dollar.

150 pairs Women's Queen Quality Shoes and Oxfords, a little out of style, but worth $3.00 and $4.00, will be on sale at $1.00.

The entire line of white Wash Waists, Skirts and Dresses in all sizes made by the famous Waldorf Mfg. Co., and for this season's sale will be on sale at just 1-2 the regular price.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis.

CHAPTER II—Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life.

CHAPTER III—A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Postoffice Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case.

CHAPTER IV—Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery.

CHAPTER V—Kent nad Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, "Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J." Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook."

CHAPTER VI—A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case.

CHAPTER VII—Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing.

CHAPTER VIII.

A New Clue.

"So, Davis," I concluded, "you see that every new clue points to Hugh Crandall."

The post office inspector sniffed.

"What have they done with the dead woman's clothes?" he asked. "I want to see them at once."

I had been anxiously awaiting Davis' arrival, not without some little feeling of triumph, to tell to him the startling developments in the mystery since I had left him hardly more than twenty-four hours before at the ferry. I was at the station awaiting him, and led him at once to the little hotel. The noise of his coming had been bruited about by the village gossips, and as his fame had penetrated even to the obscure Jersey village, there was a curious crowd gathered at the station. Some of them even followed us as far as the hotel lobby, pressing so close that private conversation was impossible. To avoid interruption, I took him at once to my room and ordered our supper served there.

While we waited for it I summarized as briefly as I could the new features of the case, beginning with my finding the post office deserted, the name missing from Lock Box 17, the suicide of the woman, the calling up of the Bridgeport police, the testimony of the maid that the woman had been crying over a yellow letter, the discovery of the five thousand dollars in new hundred-dollar bills in the cash-drawer, the coincidence in the initials of Cook and Crandall that had first attracted my attention to the missing guest in the hotel, his peculiar conduct the minute I mentioned the yellow letter and his flight from the town behind the fastest horse obtainable.

While I was only an amateur in criminal investigation, I prided myself that I had followed everything as far as Davis himself could have done. I doubted if even he, with all his shrewdness, could learn the identity of the dead woman or could explain what the postmaster was doing with such an unusually large sum, left so carelessly hid in the cash-drawer. My private opinion was that the money was probably counterfeit and that when we had solved the mystery we would find that Hugh Crandall was at the head of a band of skilful rogues who were defrauding the government. More than likely they had headquarters somewhere in the vicinity. Probably with the connivance of the postmaster they conducted some sort of green-goods or other swindling game through Lock Box 17. It seemed to me more than possible that Crandall, taking advantage of Katharine Farrish's love for him, had snared her father into some nefarious scheme. Such a theory would explain her sudden break with him and might even account for her father's terror at the sight of the yellow letter that had revealed to her his error. The knowledge of her father's plight, too, might have driven her to try suicide. Old Elser possibly was one of the gang's dupes or agents who saw exposure coming, through Katharine's activity, and feared to face it. The one flaw in my theory, it seemed to me, was that it in no way accounted for the second woman's suicide, and in spite of Davis' prophecy that there would be more suicides, I was inclined to believe that perhaps, after all, it was only a coincidence. Learning her identity, I did not regard as half so important as to locate Crandall. I almost wished that I had gone in pursuit of him alone. I would have felt an unholy joy in rounding him up single-handed, while Davis followed other minor clues. I felt considerably annoyed that Davis apparently was more interested in learning who the dead woman was than in discovering Crandall's whereabouts.

"I have no idea what they have done with the clothes," I said almost crossly. "I suppose they are still in the room. The inquest was adjourned until tomorrow morning. Maybe they have been taken to the undertaker's. He came this afternoon and took the body away. I forgot to tell you that Crandall called up the Farrish house this morning and asked for Katharine—right from this very hotel."

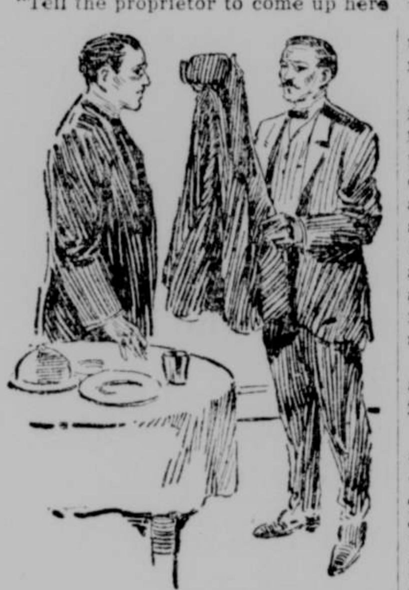
"What did he say?" he asked apathetically.

I repeated the conversation with Louise word for word as she had told it to me.

"That," said I, "is definite evidence that Crandall, the man whom we suspect, was here in the place where you sent me—here under an assumed name. What greater proof of guilt can you have, unless it is actual confession?"

"The man you suspect," he corrected with some asperity, turning abruptly to the waiter, who had entered with our supper.

"Tell the proprietor to come up here at once," he said, "and tell him to bring with him the garments worn by the woman who killed herself."



"Look Closely at It," He Commanded.

If I had sent Mahlon Williams such an order I am positive he would have paid no attention to it, but Davis' was obeyed. So quickly that it almost seemed as if Williams had been listening outside the door the landlord appeared carrying the black coat and skirt the woman had worn. Perhaps it was something in Davis' authoritative manner, perhaps it was due to respect for his position, but at any rate Williams brought the clothes at once.

"There's no use in your looking these over," I said. "They were carefully examined today, and there is not a mark on them. The only clue is the letter 'S' on two black-bordered handkerchiefs and a return ticket to Bridgeport. She signed her name as Mary Jane Teller, but there is none of the Bridgeport Tellers who answers her description, nor are any of them missing. I found out all that long ago."

Davis was paying little attention to my conversation. I doubted if he was even aware that I had spoken. With a small pocket tape measure he was taking the various dimensions of the coat and skirt. He turned up the hem of the latter and inspected it as carefully as if he expected to find a name written there. He did the same thing first with one sleeve and then with the other.

"You say that she registered as Teller and that her handkerchiefs were marked with an 'S?'" he suddenly asked me, showing that he had heard all I said.

Both the landlord and I answered him affirmatively.

"Where is the telephone?" he asked, "I want to call long distance."

There was a note of excitement in his voice that indicated to me that he believed himself on the verge of some discovery, though what it was I could not imagine. If there were any clues that had been revealed in those rusty garments his methods were too much for me.

He dashed away to the telephone, the landlord following. I ate my supper alone and waited. Just as I was finishing he came back into the room, and, seating himself, began to eat, apparently indifferent to the fact that everything had grown cold in the half-hour he was absent.

"Well," I said inquiringly, "did you learn anything?"

He nodded and calmly finished drinking his cold coffee, seemingly with a relish.

Expectantly I sat there, waiting for him to go on. He seemed not to notice my impatience, though it must have been apparent, and waited until he had pushed back his chair and lighted a cigarette. He always rolled his own, and never before had I realized what an irritating operation rolling a cigarette can be made. It seemed to me that he was taking entirely unnecessary pains to have the ends twisted just so. Finally I could brook no further delay, and burst out with: "Well, what have you discovered, Mr. Inspector?"

I supposed that he might have obtained a clue to where the woman's garments had been manufactured, some tiny thread by which he hoped to run her identity to earth. Little was I prepared for the startling discoveries he volleyed at me, so tersely, so concretely put that I could not doubt the accuracy of his information.

"The woman was Sarah Sackett, spinster. She lived on a little farm just outside Bridgeport with her brother Robert, who is somewhat older than she. They inherited the farm from their parents and have lived there all their lives. The brother is employed as cashier in a little country bank about ten miles away. Every morning he drives into Bridgeport and takes the train. When his sister left, two days ago, he came with her to the station. He evidently is not aware of her death, though he seems greatly worried over her absence. He presumably expected her to return last night, for he waited over several trains. This morning he was asking the station agent if he had seen her."

The dry, matter-of-fact way in which he recited the facts he had learned added to the value of his narrative. More and more I marveled at the man's detective ability. I was overwhelmed with a sense of my own incapacity. All day long the coroner, the constable and I had been trying to ferret out the mystery of the unfortunate woman's identity with practically the same properties to draw deductions from, the inspector in a very few minutes had not only learned her identity, but many other important facts about her. Nor did it occur to me to doubt the truth of his information. The assurance with which he spoke was in itself a sufficient guarantee.

"How on earth did you learn all this so quickly?" I asked in amazement.

He smiled with that grim tantalizing smile of his that I had seen before. His cigarette had burned itself to a stub as he spoke. He turned it carefully in his fingers, inspecting it as if to see whether he could extract another puff before throwing it away. He finally decided that he could not, and drew forth his cigarette papers and tobacco, preparatory to rolling a new one. Meanwhile I awaited his answer in suspense.

"Go on," I continued. "Tell me about it. I must know how you did it."

"The principal part of a magician's art," he said as he lighted his new cigarette, "lies in what is called 'misdirection.' With a glance from his eyes, with a sudden movement of his hand he attracts your attention to his right side. Meanwhile his left is doing the trick. Now, misdirection, in my business, has just the opposite effect. Amateurs, in investigating crime, examine the evidence and see clues pointing in some direction. They follow those clues and find themselves floundering. They have the right clues, but they go in the wrong direction. You read the evidence aright as to Miss Sackett coming from Bridgeport, but all your efforts to locate her as Mary Jane Teller were simply a waste of time. In the clothes she left behind her was her real name."

"Look here," I said, "you can't string me in that fashion. I myself examined those garments closely. There was no name in them and there no marks by which she could be identified."

"Is that so?" There was deep sarcasm in his tone.

"And not only that, even if I overlooked any marks that might have been there, the landlord, the coroner, the constable and half a dozen others examined them closely. If there were any marks, some one of us surely would have discovered them."

For answer he got up leisurely and walked across to a chair where the garments were still lying. He picked up the skirt and held it by the lower hem.

"Look closely at it," he commanded "Do you see nothing there?"

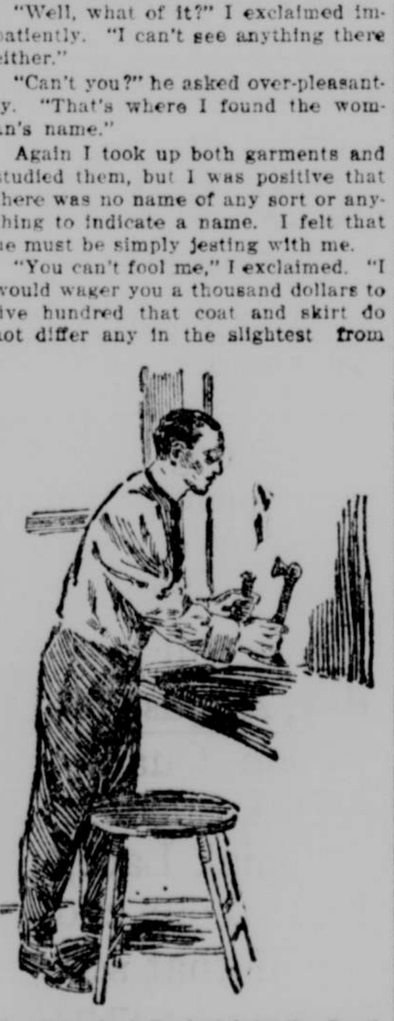
I scanned the dusty cloth intently and shook my head. He picked up the coat and offered it gravely for my inspection, even turning it inside out, sleeves and all.

"Well, what of it?" I exclaimed impatiently. "I can't see anything there either."

"Can't you?" he asked over-pleasantly. "That's where I found the woman's name."

Again I took up both garments and studied them, but I was positive that there was no name of any sort or anything to indicate a name. I felt that he must be simply jesting with me.

"You can't fool me," I exclaimed. "I would wager you a thousand dollars to five hundred that coat and skirt do not differ any in the slightest from hundreds of other coats and skirts worn by hundreds of other women."



Breathlessly I Rushed Into the Booth and Grabbed the Receiver.

"You lose," he responded tersely. With one finger he began to trace an almost invisible line on the goods where there had once been a seam. "Do you see that mark?"

"Yes," I replied. "I noticed that long ago. It simply means that the skirt has been lengthened or shortened, but what of it?"

"It means more than that," he answered almost severely, as if reproaching me for my lack of observation. "It means that a thirty-eight skirt has been lengthened an inch and a half. Look at this coat. The sleeves have been lengthened two inches. It is a thirty-eight coat. Can't you see how simple the problem has become?"

"I confess I can't see it at all."

"Let me state it for you: A woman from somewhere in Connecticut buys a black suit of a rather peculiar texture from a cloak and suit house that receives a great many mail orders. She requires a thirty-eight coat with sleeves lengthened two inches and a thirty-eight skirt let down an inch and a half. That's enough to identify any person."

"I must confess I still don't see how that knowledge will help you."

"In these days of system every house that sells women's garments has elaborate card indexes. The greatest expense they have is in alterations. They figure that a roll of cloth that costs so much will make so many suits of a certain pattern which they will sell for so much in a certain length of time. They figure on making so much profit on the suits. If the cloth is all right, the pattern popular and the price reasonable, they can figure to a certainty on their profits, except for one factor—alterations. Alterations require the time of skilled work-people and also correspondence and frequently extra express charges. The aim of the manager is to reduce alteration to a minimum. For that reason he keeps a record of every alteration made. This particular dress happened to come from a store where I know the manager well. It is their busy season just now, and I took a chance on finding him in his office. I described the goods in the suit, gave him the size and the sort of alterations that had been made on it and asked him to have his card index looked up. I told him in all probability the woman I wanted to know about came from Bridgeport, Conn., or near there. It happened that only three of the eight suits they had made from this piece of goods—at least the only ones entered on the alteration cards—had gone to Connecticut. Of the three, two were thirty-six coats, so they could be eliminated at once. The third one had had the sleeves lengthened and also the skirt. The sizes corresponded, so there was very little doubt that it had been this woman who had bought it, Miss Sarah Sackett, the woman who committed suicide here."

"But even so," I protested, still marveling at his revelations, "how did you get the rest of your information about her so quickly?"

"The address she had given was 'in care of the express agent' at Bridgeport. Such an address in a large city would mean nothing, but in a place the size of Bridgeport the inference was plain that the agent was probably an acquaintance. If she lived in Bridgeport, she would have given street and number. I concluded at once that she lived in the suburbs near Bridgeport. I called up the express agent, and he gave me the rest of my facts."

"Did he tell you why she committed suicide?"

"He doesn't dream that she has," the inspector replied. "I put my questions in a guarded way and he happened to be a garrulous fellow, who readily followed my leads. All I asked him was where a letter would reach Miss Sarah Hackett, saying I had forgotten which rural free delivery route it was that she lived on. He told me that she and her brother were still living on the old Sackett place, Route No. 1. I explained that I wanted to make sure of an important letter reaching her at once. He told me she was away, explaining that he had seen her come down to the station with her brother, and suggested that it might be a good idea to send the letter in her brother's care, and told me the address of the bank where her brother could be reached. So you see it is all quite simple when you know how."

"I don't see, though," I objected, "how anything that you have learned in any way connects this woman with the Farrish mystery."

"I told you there would be other suicides, didn't I?"

"It looks to me like a mere coincidence."

"How about the yellow letter she was reading?"

I started. For a moment I had forgotten the strange, tinted link that seemed to bind the Farrish tragedy, the Elser case and the Sarah Sackett suicide together in the terrible chain of mystery.

"We've got to find Hugh Crandall!" I exclaimed. "I will not be content until we do. There is no doubt in my mind that he is the author of those letters. We've got to find him, Davis, and make him explain. I promised the girl I love I would not rest until I had cleared away the mystery, until I had lifted the cloud that is hanging over her father and her sister. Nothing, nothing shall stand in the way! Think what it means to me! The one I love, the one who is dearer to me than anything else in the world, is living in constant dread of an unknown terror. I feel that Crandall is responsible. I am positive that he is guilty. Help me find him, Davis! We must find him."

As I spoke Davis sat regarding me with unmoved countenance. He puffed leisurely at his cigarette two or three times, and then, with cutting asperity, without the slightest indication of sympathy for my anxiety, said slowly:

"Harding, I told you that one of the reasons for my success was that I never undertake anything that I can not accomplish. I came out here to find the man who has been using the mails illegally to terrorize people to such an extent that they are driven to suicide. I am confident that we will quickly locate him and his accomplice in crime. Rest assured that you can safely leave the plan of action to me."

"But—but," I stammered, "what is your plan of action? What are you going to do now?"

"I'm going to bed," he replied, yawning as he rose from his chair. "There's nothing more that can be done tonight."

Impatient as I was, and anxious though I was to alleviate Louise's fears at the earliest moment possible, I could not but feel that he was right. There was nothing that could be done that night. I showed him where the room was that I had engaged for him—next to mine—and, feeling much depressed and perplexed, was preparing to turn in when I was startled by a sharp rap on my door.

"Come in," I called, thinking, of course, it was Davis with some new theory to suggest.

Instead it was the clerk from the office below.

"You're wanted on the telephone," he said.

I had already taken off my coat and waistcoat and I did not wait to put them on. Just as I was I sped through the hall to the telephone booth. Who could it be that was calling me at this hour? It must be long after ten. I could think of only two persons who know of my being in this hotel, Louise and Hugh Crandall. I felt that it must be Louise. Why should Crandall call me up? True, he could have learned my name from the hotel register, and from my question about the yellow letter he must know that I was on his trail, but having escaped from the village, why should he communicate with me? No, it could not be he. It must be Louise. She would not call me at this time unless something had happened. That was it. Something terrible had happened! Katharine was dead, or perhaps her father. Perhaps both of them. Or maybe Katharine had spoken again. Perhaps she had given some information that Louise felt would aid me in the investigation that meant so much for both of us.

Isn't it strange how fast we can think? It could not have taken me more than thirty seconds to race from my room to the telephone booth in the hall below, yet in that brief period all these thoughts and a hundred other queries and fears pursued each other in mad tumult through my brain.

Breathlessly I rushed into the booth and grabbed the receiver. It was the voice of Louise that I heard. Faint though it was, I recognized it at once, and was overjoyed to note that there was nothing in it of the sadness there would have been if the worst had come to her father or Katharine.

"Is that you, Mr. Kent?" she asked.

"Yes, yes," I cried. "What is it?"

"This is Louise Farrish speaking. I want you to promise me that you will drop your investigation at once and return to the city."

"What's that?" I cried, not believing my ears.

"If you love me"—she was speaking slowly and enunciating with labored distinctness that there might be no mistake—"you will drop all investigation at once without any questions. Do you hear me? Repeat what I have said so I can be sure you understand."

Word for word I repeated her message, amazed beyond thought at its import. As I finished repeating it, I cried, "Why, tell me why—" but I heard the thud of the broken connection.

Frantically I called central. I pleaded, urged, demanded that she get the person at the other end of the wire again. It was no use. I called for the Farrishs' number. Central reported, "Don't answer." I said that I had been called just now from there. After weary, impatient minutes of waiting and wrangling, she told me the call had come from another number, from a pay station. I demanded that number at once and finally she got it for me. It was a drug-store near the Farrish home. The druggist's clerk said that the young lady who had been telephoning had left the store. I tried to get him to send a messenger around to the Farrishs' to ask Miss Louise Farrish to come to the telephone. He refused. It was useless. I was forced to give it up.

I emerged from the telephone booth perspiring, frantic, puzzled beyond measure at the sudden and startling turn in affairs.

What could have induced Louise to send me such a message? What could have happened?

The shortest and surest way to live with honor in the world is to be in reality what we would appear to be; all human virtues increase and strengthen themselves by the practice and experience of them.—Socrates.

MORE ROOM.

A man seeing an advertisement in the paper, "A five-room house to let," went to have a look at it. It was just the size he wanted, but was sadly out of repair. He went to the agent's office and said he didn't want a six-roomed house.

"That isn't a six-roomed house," said the agent.

"Oh, yes, it is."

"But I say it is not." And the agent began counting. "There's the kitchen, the dining-room, reception-room and two bedrooms—that's five, isn't it?"

"Yes; but there's the room for improvement," said the prospective tenant, "and that's bigger than any of the others."—Tit-Bits.

A Chance for Trouble.

"I see that somebody proposes to have a law making it necessary for every married man to pay his wife a salary for looking after his house and caring for his children."

"Well, it seems to me that a wife who does this is entitled to a salary."

"Yes, but there will be one trouble about it."

"What?"

"Some men will be sure to get in bad if they pay their wives higher salaries than their stenographers draw."

"That, my boy, is a government in which a few people do all the ruling."

"Is our government an oligarchy?"

"Not at present. The party I belong to is in power; but it will be one if the other side wins."

The Division.

What His Wife Wears

"I am going to offer a prize," said the woman who had the floor, "to any one who will take my husband off and sequester him by threat, main force or guile long enough for me to buy a spring and summer wardrobe. It is absolutely impossible to do it so long as he remains at large.

"When I married John I had no idea he was so fussy. I think I spoiled him by unwisely complimenting his good taste and judgment in regard to clothes, and he got conceited about it. He shouldn't have taken me seriously, for a woman has a right to say anything nice to a man that comes into her head when she is trying to ensnare him into matrimony! If he played the game fair he would charge all her compliments up to profit and loss and use common sense after he was married just as a woman does—but men are so foolish!

"John's conceit was a great shock to me, because everything I had done or worn or said had invariably been a little better than just all right with John.

"My awakening came when I purchased the linen dress. I found it in one of these exclusive little shops where they have clothes all ready to wear that are beyond your wildest dreams of style. The linen dress was the last cry. I can't exactly describe it except that it was a coarse, heavy, natural ecru linen with panels of heavy lace to match and an odd crimson suede belt and fascinating snatches of thin net let in here and there. Any woman can tell from this description that it was exactly the stunningest, most unusual thing you can ever hope to see.

"I simply grabbed it and had it fitted to me. When it came home I donned it and casually walked out in front of John.

"I hadn't exactly formulated what I expected him to say, but it was something to the effect that he was overcome totally by my air of magnificence. Instead, he was strangely silent. I had not expected him to be so overcome.

"'Don't you like it?' I hinted.

"John coughed. I looked at him in surprise. Then he took hold of a sleeve with a gingerly thumb and forefinger. 'What is it?' he asked, hesitatingly. 'It looks—er—it looks like potato sacking. Of couse,' he added, hastily and politely, 'I know it isn't. But—er—isn't it queer?'

"Oh, he tried to be polite, he really did. But he suffered so while he was doing it that, having a tender heart, I couldn't stand it. He simply couldn't see that linen dress. To him it was a monstrosity, a blot on the landscape, and at the thought of his wife appearing in a garment which to him was going to draw the scorn and amazed amusement of the populace was unendurable.

"So long as that dress was in the house John was nervous, anguished and tormented, so I took it back. I told the store people that I'd pay them to take it back, because if I kept it I knew it meant a divorce in the family, but they were very nice and said I could change it. So I bought a lovely taffeta gown. It was a changeable silk with puffings and quillings and a quaint lace fichu.

"My dear, you'll never believe me, but when I put that dress on John just sat and looked puzzled. 'Isn't it terribly old fashioned?' he asked, timidly. 'I remember my great aunt in a dress like that. Why don't you get something new and stylish?'

"Wasn't that hopeless? I explained to him carefully that it was the latest style, but John vowed that it was ancient and that they had imposed on me and anyhow he disliked changeable silk. So I sold it to my sister for $5 less than I paid for it. I was now $15 to the bad, as the second dress had cost $10 more than the original linen. I told John that when he could take a day off and accompany me on a shopping tour I'd buy a dress, but until then I would devote my attention to hats.

"I got a perfect love of a hat with a bunch of these white uncurled ostrich feathers on that everybody knows cost like sixty—and John threw up his hands! He said I looked as though I had been caught out in the rain and hadn't money enough to get the feathers recurled. He raved so about it that I sent the hat back.

"Then I sat down in front of John, and by painstaking labor extracted from him the description of the kind of clothes he would like to see me in. He said he liked tailory things with shirt waists that had collars and cuffs—they've been out five years you know—and sailor hats. John said that nothing on earth looked so trim and stylish as a perfectly plain sailor hat. What would they do to me at a fashionable tea if I appeared in such garments?

"Oh, no, I didn't ask John that. Anyhow, I was in luck, because I know one woman whose husband wants everything she buys to be red. He says red looks so cheerful. John is bad enough, though. I've made my mind up to stop worrying and buy clothes anyhow.

"All I'm waiting for is some one to distract him while I'm buying clothes and then soothe him at the moment he first catches sight of me! He might just as well get broken in to having a stylish wife and get it over with!"—Chicago Daily News.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

"X. Y. Z." Replies To Rev. C. W. Hudson.

To the Editor of The Republican.

In your issue of July 25th the Rev. C. W. Hudson takes me to task for making the statement, and challenges the proof, that Protestant ministers generally have discarded their belief in a literal lake of fire and brimstone for the eternal torment of the wicked, as punishment for sin.

First, let me express my surprise that Bro. Hudson has not found even one out of several hundred of his brethern in the ministry, whom he personally knows, who has repudiated this doctrine of the dark ages. I am constrained to wonder as to how zealously he has prosecuted his inquiries!

But the proof! The following is clipped from the Detroit Times, Saturday July 20, 1912:

"FIRE AND BRIMSTONE"
DOCTRINE POETIC IDEA

Dante and Milton Responsible for Modern Hell Fire Theory, Says Dr. Young.

Asked by the Times for his views in regard to the recent action of the International Bible Students' Association, in going on record against the doctrine of a fire and brimstone torture for sinners after death, the Rev. T. W. Young, pastor of the North Woodward Baptist church said:

"The resolutions adopted by the recent International Bible Students Association, in session in Washington, D. C., repudiating the hell-fire and brimstone theory as unscriptural, remind one of the famous bull concerning snakes in Ireland. After all was said it was decided there are no snakes in Ireland. And these wonderful resolutions are aimed at something that only does not exist, but which practically nobody believes, or with few exceptions, ever did believe. There have been straggling and fantastic things about the Bible, and there are still. The widely diffused ideas in modern times about the devil and a hell of fire and brimstone for the wicked, comes from Dante and Milton—which is poetry—and not from the Bible. Some of the ancient church fathers—that fruitful source of heresy—also held fantastic views about the future torment of the wicked. But no great religious creed and no great religious denomination as such has ever advocated any such literal interpretation of the Bible. No present-day creed, or church, as far as I know, believes in a hell of fire and brimstone. Some few straggling literalists may, but they have little or no following. If there are any outsiders who think the religous denominations stand for this conception, they are simply belated onlookers. They do not know. But this is not saying that the scriptures do not teach that sin inflicts its own appropriate penalty on evil-doers. Every man shall reap just what he sows."

Dr. Young is a prominent minister of the Baptist church, to which faith Brother Hudson also subscribes. Dr. Young's statement, while more sweeping than any which has yet come to my notice, is in line with what the majority of Protestant ministers privately believe, but who have not declared themselves publicly, particularly in their pulpits, thus denying themselves the privilege, nay the great honor of assisting in the work of removing from our Heavenly Father's name the foulest of slander and the grossest of misrepresentations regarding His character and as a result of this silence on their part, they continue to keep their flocks in ignorance of the real facts.

For proof that this horrible doctrine is being discarded in other lands than our own, I quote from the Press report (as it appeared in the Washington Star, Saturday July 13th), of the preceedings of the I. B. S. A. convention then in session in Washington:

"Delegates to the International Bible Students' Association convention are jubilant over cablegrams from London being printed in the press of the country and quoting Canon Henson of Westmininster Abby, speaking for the Church of England, as declaring that his church repudiated the literal Hell fire theory years ago. The published statement of Rev. R. J. Campell, speaking for the non-conformists of Great Britain, and averring that no English devine indorses the theory in question has also given much satisfaction."

The statments of Canon Henson and Dr. Campbell here referred to were current news about July 12th or 13th, the full text of which we regret we have not at hand, but which we personally read in the columns of the New York World at that time.

Dr. Campbell, as most persons know, is the greatest nonconformist preacher in England today, and in the news item referred to, he not only states that "hell fire had not been preached in England for twenty years, but that he himself did not think there was an intelligent educated minister in the United Kingdom who believed in it. So much for the proof which Brother Hudson challenges.

"Come now, let us reason together,, Isa. 1:18. Hear the word of the Lord as to the end of the wicked: "The wages of sin is death," and in contradistinction to this the apostle adds, "but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," Rom. 6:23. For it is only through the merit of the Redemptive work of our Lord Jesus that we can hope to come out from the death sentence, into which the entire race was plunged by or through Father Adam's disobedience. It is therefore a free gift "for by the law there shall be no flesh justified in His Sight," Rom. 3:20.

To what is death likened in the Scriptures? Listen to the words of Jehovah: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," Gen. 3:19. If the penalty were other than death, did God sufficiently inform His creatures as set forth in Gen. 2:17, 18? For a further discription of death hear the words of the wisest man: "In death man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, as the one dieth, so dieth the other, all go unto one place: all are dust, and all turn to the dust again." Ecc. 3:19, 20. This is in line with the words of the psalmist! "In death there is no remembrance of Thee: in the grave who shall give Thee thanks?" Psa. 6:5.

The testimony of God's Word from Genesis to Revelation is that the dead are dead and know not anything, Ecc. 9:5. The penalty for sin is death and not torment, and all who go into death are in a state of silence: they know nothing, and will remain in that condition until the Resurection morning when all who are in their graves shall hear His voice and come forth (John 5:28, 29) to be tested and tried as to their fitness for everlasting life, perfection of being on the human plane.

A higher salvation than human perfection is offered now, for those who have the hearing ear, God having provided some better thing for those who follow in our Lord's footsteps now, and which class the Scriptures tell us is being gathered out from every nation, kindred and tongue, and I varily believe from every religious denomination. These constitute the "bride class" who when completed and united to her Lord will with Him say "Come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst say come, and whosoever will let him take the water of life freely," Rev. 22: 17.

As death was the penalty for Adam's sin, so we understand that it will still be the penalty for sin in the next age when "everyone shall die for his own iniquity," Jer. 31:29, which will be the second death from which there will be no resurrection for "Christ dieth no more," and "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death.

Those who who uphold the doctrine of eternal torment for the wicked have only the parables and dark sayings of our Lord and the symbolism of Revelation, etc.; to support their belief. Our Lord when asked why He spoke to the multitude in parables replied that it was for the purpose that they should neither see no understand, Mark 3:12. Hence the call in this age has not been to all, but to a particular class who has ears to hear.

Finally, if God has created all things, and for His pleasure, (Rev. 4:11), could we imagine Him taking pleasure in the creation of a great place called hell in which untold millions of his hapless creatures would suffer the tortures of the damned throughout eternity? Think of children on account of their lot accusing their parents of improper training and laxity of parental obligations, and the whole writhing mass hurling curses at God and blasphemihg His name for bringing them into existance under unfavorable conditions only to such a bitter end!

I verily believe. Mr. Editor, that Brother Hudson himself does not truly believe in such a place!

I would be pleased to send free, some interesting literature showing how God's great plan of redemption which He is accomplishing through His son will eventually cause "every creature which is in heaven and on the earth and such as are in the sea and all that are in them to say blessing and honor and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever," Rev. 5:13.

Setting of Ochards.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Saturday, August 3rd, 1912, shoold mark an epoch distinguished in Keyser's history. For some while back enterprising combinations have been active ascertaining a route and building a railroad, rather less than the standard width, from a point just east of the town limits and from the south side of the B. & O. railroad, and to be known as the "Twin Mountain and Potomac Road." The point yet reached is much short of that designated by the promoters. In both grading and construction are evident proof of skill and thoroughness. The engineering accomplishment is of no mean merit in the face of such physical difficulties. Mountains of rock and earth rises along the line accepted as natural and, apparently, insurmountable barriers against railway possibilities. These formidable discouragements have been more subservient to skill, energy and means and the selected route meanders through regions beggaring description in their picturesque wilderness. The train moving out this morning was the initial passenger train over this artery of a waiting commerce. In this excursion two leading enticements stimulated the pleasure seekers—the novelty of a ride on the maiden trip of a new railroad and the confident expectation of pleasures at the picnic scheduled for "Arnold's Grove," about eight miles out, under the management of fruit-growing and agricultural societies. Rapidity of improvement with the importance of extension of fruit developments in this section of Mineral county created the main demand for the Twin Mountain and Potomac Road, enabling shippers to quickly disperse their products among markets most ready for their reception. The road penetrates many of the largest and best ordered orchards of the county, perhaps, of the State. Leaving the train in the midst of a vast and thoroughly cultivated orchard, we had to lift our heads in catching a view of the justly popular grove crowning a lofty eminence and already alive with visitors centering there. Serpentine roads and paths took us by hard climbs to the mount all were seeking. The flat was covered with luxurient green grass under the shade of shapely trees, while an improvised but inviting looking rostrum indicated the platform for speaking, recitals and lessons in the best mode of packing.

Professors educated in the art of agriculture and of fruits were there to enlighten the country producer in the most modern discoveries and safest methods known to date in the many branches of these marvelous industries. Among these educators was the Hon. W. D. Zinn, Democratic nominee for Commissioner of Agriculture in West Virginia.

Well, it nearly took the breath from me listening to instructions that shattered the teachings in Maryland upon the subjects treated. The treatment observed upon the growing trees here, and the speeches delivered, positively reverse cardinal rules recorded in Maryland. We are advised in Maryland to set out the trees for apples, leaving three prongs from which the matured tree will receive its shape, settling, to a large extent, in the incipiency of the tree and the problem of future pruning, and then keep the branches left thin by judicious trimming. Now we are taught by the growing tree and by expert instruction to put out the tree with its branches beginning close to the ground, just as thick as they may grow, do no thinning, but so annually cut back the branches as to keep the tree in a brush form and but little taller than the reach of a man,s hand. One of our Garrett county trees will yield more than half a dozen of this new pattern. Attention was directed to the better prices obtained by western producers, explaining that such advantage does not arise from any disparity in values but from a better way the west has in packing, placing the first layer over the bottem then causing each in the hollows created by the coming together of two or more in bottom layer, no one resting directly on another, but placed over crevice below. These addresses were interpersed with recitations most pleasingly rendered by two young ladies.

About the noon hour, in an hour or so of respite from speechts, recitations, demonstrations with sallies of humor and flashes of wit, such lunches were served as only Keyser ladies can devise and only their hospitality can dispense. Your columns will admit of a deserving enumeration of the substantials and delicacies of this repast, after the multitude had been filled more than fragments remained for many baskets.

Rather in advance of train time a walk out to the edge of the commanding summit gave a view of the vast proportions of these splendid orchards, one it is said, containing four thousand trees, with many others not quite so large but large indeed, reaching in all directions with the appearance of large bushes, beginning to branch out less than two feet above the ground, simliar in sizes and planted in mathematical precision in rows.

Nature lavished her glories in a perfect day, with just clouds enough to sober the glitter of a mid-summer's sun and tone and sweeten the stiff breeze habitual to such an altitude. Look from so superb a height over range after range fading in the haze of far-away lines touched by the rim of the horizon; and then back over the altering panorama of peaks and hills, fields and forest suffulgent under the mellow lights of a waning sun, the truism came home a it seldom comes to so many: "This is a beautiful world in which we live."

OCTOBER 27TH IS TUBERCULOSIS DAY.

National Observance to be Planned in 100,000 Pulpits—Consumption Causes 50,000 Church Deaths Annually.

Churches and religious socities, to the number of at least 100,000, will be urged to give special attention to the prevention of tuberculosis on Sunday, October 27th, or on some day during the week preceding or the week following that date. This season has been set apart and designated as the Third National Tuberculosis Day by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, which makes this announcement to-day.

Tuberculosis Day was originally set on April 28th, but was postponed because of a conflict with Conservation Sunday of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, which was held on that date. The observance of Tuberculosis Day in the Fall this year will be utilized by anti-tuberculosis workers not only for the general education of churchgoers on consumption, but also for the purpose of interesting them in the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals.

Every one of the 600 and more anti-tuberculosis associations allied with the National Association, will be urged to promote Tuberculosis Day in their respective communities. While last year over 50,000 churches observed this occasion, it is expected this year that this number will be doubled. Millions of circulars and other forms of literature will be distributed. The support of every religious denomination will be asked for.

That tuberculosis is a serious problem among church congregations is evidenced by statistics which the National Association gathered last year, which show that 10 per cent. of all deaths among church members are caused by tuberculsois. Based on these figures and on the mortality statistics of the Census Bureau, over 52,000 of the 33,000,000 communicants in churches in the United States die from tuberculosis every year. This figure assumes that the death rate of 1.60 per 1,000 population in the Registration Area applies to all churchgoers, when, as a matter of fact, the rate would probably be higher.

Edmund Burke's Fame Secure.

Among the great men of the world few have been the subject of higher panegyric than Edmund Burke, and, on the whole, few have better deserved praise. No public man was ever more pure in his politics and more pure in his life, and few have been as noble minded. He possessed indefatigable industry. There was no subject that he could not master, and none which, having mastered, he could not expound with unparalleled richness of language.—Exchange.

Way to Meet Work.

The beauty of work depends upon the way we meet it—whether we arm ourselves each morning to attack it as an enemy that must be vanquished before night comes, or whether we open our eyes with the sunrise to welcome it as an approaching friend who will keep us delightful company all day, and who will make us feel at evening that the day was well worth its fatigues.

What His Wife Wears

"I am going to offer a prize," said the woman who had the floor, "to any one who will take my husband off and sequester him by threat, main force or guile long enough for me to buy a spring and summer wardrobe. It is absolutely impossible to do it so long as he remains at large.

"When I married John I had no idea he was so fussy. I think I spoiled him by unwisely complimenting his good taste and judgment in regard to clothes, and he got conceited about it. He shouldn't have taken me seriously, for a woman has a right to say anything nice to a man that comes into her head when she is trying to ensnare him into matrimony! If he played the game fair he would charge all her compliments up to profit and loss and use common sense after he was married just as a woman does—but men are so foolish!

"John's conceit was a great shock to me, because everything I had done or worn or said had invariably been a little better than just all right with John.

"My awakening came when I purchased the linen dress. I found it in one of these exclusive little shops where they have clothes all ready to wear that are beyond your wildest dreams of style. The linen dress was the last cry. I can't exactly describe it except that it was a coarse, heavy, natural ecru linen with panels of heavy lace to match and an odd crimson suede belt and fascinating snatches of thin net let in here and there. Any woman can tell from this description that it was exactly the stunningest, most unusual thing you can ever hope to see.

"I simply grabbed it and had it fitted to me. When it came home I donned it and casually walked out in front of John.

"I hadn't exactly formulated what I expected him to say, but it was something to the effect that he was overcome totally by my air of magnificence. Instead, he was strangely silent. I had not expected him to be so overcome.

"'Don't you like it?' I hinted.

"John coughed. I looked at him in surprise. Then he took hold of a sleeve with a gingerly thumb and forefinger. 'What is it?' he asked, hesitatingly. 'It looks—er—it looks like potato sacking. Of couse,' he added, hastily and politely, 'I know it isn't. But—er—isn't it queer?'

"Oh, he tried to be polite, he really did. But he suffered so while he was doing it that, having a tender heart, I couldn't stand it. He simply couldn't see that linen dress. To him it was a monstrosity, a blot on the landscape, and at the thought of his wife appearing in a garment which to him was going to draw the scorn and amazed amusement of the populace was unendurable.

"So long as that dress was in the house John was nervous, anguished and tormented, so I took it back. I told the store people that I'd pay them to take it back, because if I kept it I knew it meant a divorce in the family, but they were very nice and said I could change it. So I bought a lovely taffeta gown. It was a changeable silk with puffings and quillings and a quaint lace fichu.

"My dear, you'll never believe me, but when I put that dress on John just sat and looked puzzled. 'Isn't it terribly old fashioned?' he asked, timidly. 'I remember my great aunt in a dress like that. Why don't you get something new and stylish?'

"Wasn't that hopeless? I explained to him carefully that it was the latest style, but John vowed that it was ancient and that they had imposed on me and anyhow he disliked changeable silk. So I sold it to my sister for $5 less than I paid for it. I was now $15 to the bad, as the second dress had cost $10 more than the original linen. I told John that when he could take a day off and accompany me on a shopping tour I'd buy a dress, but until then I would devote my attention to hats.

"I got a perfect love of a hat with a bunch of these white uncurled ostrich feathers on that everybody knows cost like sixty—and John threw up his hands! He said I looked as though I had been caught out in the rain and hadn't money enough to get the feathers recurled. He raved so about it that I sent the hat back.

"Then I sat down in front of John, and by painstaking labor extracted from him the description of the kind of clothes he would like to see me in. He said he liked tailory things with shirt waists that had collars and cuffs—they've been out five years you know—and sailor hats. John said that nothing on earth looked so trim and stylish as a perfectly plain sailor hat. What would they do to me at a fashionable tea if I appeared in such garments?

"Oh, no, I didn't ask John that. Anyhow, I was in luck, because I know one woman whose husband wants everything she buys to be red. He says red looks so cheerful. John is bad enough, though. I've made my mind up to stop worrying and buy clothes anyhow.

"All I'm waiting for is some one to distract him while I'm buying clothes and then soothe him at the moment he first catches sight of me! He might just as well get broken in to having a stylish wife as to ever get it over with!"—Chicago Daily News.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

"X. Y. Z." Replies To Rev. C. W. Hudson.

To the Editor of The Republican.

In your issue of July 25th the Rev. C. W. Hudson takes me to task for making the statement, and challenges the proof, that Protestant ministers generally have discarded their belief in a literal lake of fire and brimstone for the eternal torment of the wicked, as punishment for sin.

First, let me express my surprise that Bro. Hudson has not found even one out of several hundred of his brethern in the ministry, whom he personally knows, who has repudiated this doctrine of the dark ages. I am constrained to wonder as to how zealously he has prosecuted his inquiries!

But the proof! The following is clipped from the Detroit Times, Saturday July 20, 1912:

"FIRE AND BRIMSTONE" DOCTRINE POETIC IDEA

Dante and Milton Responsible for Modern Hell Fire Theory, Says Dr. Young.

Asked by the Times for his views in regard to the recent action of the International Bible Students' Association, in going on record against the doctrine of a fire and brimstone torture for sinners after death, the Rev. T. W. Young, pastor of the North Woodward Baptist church said:

"The resolutions adopted by the recent International Bible Students Association, in session in Washington, D. C., repudiating the hell-fire and brimstone theory as unscriptural, remind one of the famous bull concerning snakes in Ireland. After all was said it was decided there are no snakes in Ireland. And these wonderful resolutions are aimed at something that only does not exist, but which practically nobody believes, or with few exceptions, ever did believe. There have been straggling and fantastic things about the Bible, and there are still. The widely diffused ideas in modern times about the devil and a hell of fire and brimstone for the wicked, comes from Dante and Milton—which is poetry—and not from the Bible. Some of the ancient church fathers—that fruitful source of heresy—also held fantastic views about the future torment of the wicked. But no great religious creed and no great religious denomination as such has ever advocated any such literal interpretation of the Bible. No present-day creed, or church, as far as I know, believes in a hell of fire and brimstone. Some few straggling literalists may, but they have little or no following. If there are any outsiders who think the religous denominations stand for this conception, they are simply belated onlookers. They do not know. But this is not saying that the scriptures do not teach that sin inflicts its own appropriate penalty on evil-doers. Every man shall reap just what he sows."

Dr. Young is a prominent minister of the Baptistchurch, to which faith Brother Hudson also subscribes. Dr. Young's statement, while more sweeping than any which has yet come to my notice, is in line with what the majority of Protestant ministers privately believe, but who have not declared themselves publicly, particularly in their pulpits, thus denying themselves the privilege, nay the great honor of assisting in the work of removing from our Heavenly Father's name the foulest of slander and the grossest of misrepresentations regarding His character and as a result of this silence on their part, they continue to keep their flocks in ignorance of the real facts.

For proof that this horrible doctrine is being discarded in other lands than our own, I quote from the Press report (as it appeared in the Washington Star, Saturday July 13th), of the preceedings of the I. B. S. A. convention then in session in Washington:

"Delegates to the International Bible Students' Association convention are jubilant over cablegrams from London being printed in the press of the country and quoting Canon Henson of Westminister Abby, speaking for the Church of England, as declaring that his church repudiated the literal Hell fire theory years ago. The published statement of Rev. R. J. Campell, speaking for the non-conformists of Great Britain, and averring that no English devine indorses the theory in question has also given much satisfaction."

The statments of Canon Henson and Dr. Campbell here referred to were current news about July 12th or 13th, the full text of which we regret we have not at hand, but which we personally read in the columns of the New York World at that time.

Dr. Campbell, as most persons know, is the greatest nonconformist preacher in England today, and in the news item referred to, he not only states that "hell fire had not been preached in England for twenty years, but that he himself did not think there was an intelligent educated minister in the United Kingdom who believed in it. So much for the proof which Brother Hudson challenges.

"Come now, let us reason together,, Isa. 1:18. Hear the word of the Lord as to the end of the wicked: "The wages of sin is death," and in contradistinction to this the apostle adds, "but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord," Rom. 6:23. For it is through the redemptive work of our Lord Jesus that we can hope to come out from the death sentence, into which the entire race was plunged by or through Father Adam's disobedience. It is therefore a free gift "for by the law there shall be no flesh justified in His Sight," Rom. 3:20.

To what is death likened in the Scriptures? Listen to the words of Jehovah: "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," Gen. 3:19. If the penalty were other than death, did God sufficiently inform His creatures as set forth in Gen. 2:17, 18? For a further discription of death hear the words of the wisest man: "In death man hath no pre-eminence above a beast, as the one dieth, so dieth the other, all go unto one place: all are dust, and all turn to the dust again." Ecc. 3:19, 20. This is in line with the words of the psalmist! "In death there is no remembrance of Thee: in the grave who shall give Thee thanks?" Psa. 6:5.

The testimony of God's Word from Genesis to Revelation is that the dead are dead and know not anything, Ecc. 9:5. The penalty for sin is death and not torment, and all who go into death are in a state of silence: they know nothing, and will remain in that condition until the Resurection morning when all who are in their graves shall hear His voice and come forth (John 5:28, 29) to be tested and tried as to their fitness for everlasting life, perfection of being on the human plane.

A higher salvation than human perfection is offered now, for those who have the hearing ear, God having provided some better thing for those who follow in our Lord's footsteps now, and which class the Scriptures tell us is being gathered out from every nation, kindred and tongue, and I varily believe from every religious denomination. These constitute the "bride class" who when completed and united to her Lord will with Him say "Come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst say come, and whosoever will let him take the water of life freely," Rev. 22: 17.

As death was the penalty for Adam's sin, so we understand that it will still be the penalty for sin in the next age when "everyone shall die for his own iniquity," Jer. 31:29, which will be the second death from which there will be no resurrection for "Christ dieth no more," and "sin when it is finished bringeth forth death.

Those who who uphold the doctrine of eternal torment for the wicked have only the parables and dark sayings of our Lord and the symbolism of Revelation, etc.; to support their belief. Our Lord when asked why He spoke to the multitude in parables replied that it was for the purpose that they should neither see no understand, Mark 3:12. Hence the call in this age has not been to all, but to a particular class who has ears to hear.

Finally, if God has created all things, and for His pleasure, (Rev. 4:11), could we imagine Him taking pleasure in the creation of a great place called hell in which untold millions of his hapless creatures would suffer the tortures of the damned throughout eternity? Think of children on account of their lot accusing their parents of improper training and laxity of parental obligations, and the whole writhing mass hurling curses at God and blasphemihg His name for bringing them into existance under unfavorable conditions only to such a bitter end!

I verily believe, Mr. Editor, that Brother Hudson himself does not truly believe in such a place!

I would be pleased to send free, some interesting literature showing how God's great plan of redemption which He is accomplishing through His son will eventually cause "every creature which is in heaven and on the earth and such as are in the sea and all that are in them to say blessing and honor and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever," Rev. 5:13.

Setting of Ochards.

To the Editor of The Republican:

Saturday, August 3rd, 1912, shoold mark an epoch distinguished in Keyser's history. For some while back enterprising combinations have been active ascertaining a route and building a railroad, rather less than the standard width, from a point just east of the town limits and from the south side of the B. & O. railroad, and to be known as the "Twin Mountain and Potomac Road." The point yet reached is much short of that designated by the promoters. In both grading and construction are evident proof of skill and thoroughness. The engineering accomplishment is of no mean merit in the face of such physical difficulties. Mountains of rock and earth rises along the line accepted as natural and, apparently, insurmountable barriers against railway possibilities. These formidable discouragements have been more subservient to skill, energy and means and the selected route meanders through regions beggaring description in their picturesque wilderness. The train moving out this morning was the initial passenger train over this artery of a waiting commerce. In this excursion two leading enticements stimulated the pleasure seekers—the novelty of a ride on the maiden trip of a new railroad and the confident expectation of pleasures at the picnic scheduled for "Arnold's Grove," about eight miles out, under the management of fruit-growing and agricultural societies. Rapidity of improvement with the importance of extension of fruit developments in this section of Mineral county created the main demand for the Twin Mountain and Potomac Road, enabling shippers to quickly disperse their products among markets most ready for their reception. The road penetrates many of the largest and best ordered orchards of the county, perhaps, of the State. Leaving the train in the midst of a vast and thoroughly cultivated orchard, we had to lift our heads in catching a view of the justly popular grove crowning a lofty eminence and already alive with visitors centering there. Serpentine roads and paths took us by hard climbs to the mount all were seeking. The flat was covered with luxurient green grass under the shade of shapely trees, while an improvised but inviting looking rostrum indicated the platform for speaking, recitals and lessons in the best mode of packing.

Professors educated in the art of agriculture and of fruits were there to enlighten the country producer in the most modern discoveries and safest methods known to date in the many branches of these marvelous industries. Among these educators was the Hon. W. D. Zinn, Democratic nominee for Commissioner of Agriculture in West Virginia.

Well, it nearly took the breath from me listening to instructions that shattered the teachings in Maryland upon the subjects treated. The treatment observed upon the growing trees here, and the speeches delivered, positively reverse cardinal rules recorded in Maryland. We are advised in Maryland to set out the trees for apples, leaving three prongs from which the matured tree will receive its shape, settling, to a large extent, in the incipiency of the tree and the problem of future pruning, and then keep the branches left thin by judicious trimming. Now we are taught by the growing tree and by expert instruction to put out the tree with its branches beginning close to the ground, just as thick as they may grow, do no thinning, but so annually cut back the branches as to keep the tree in a brush form and but little taller than the reach of a man,s hand. One of our Garrett county trees will yield more than half a dozen of this new pattern. Attention was directed to the better prices obtained by western producers, explaining that such advantage does not arise from any disparity in values but from a better way the west has in packing, placing the first layer over the bottem then causing each in the hollows created by the coming together of two or more in bottom layer, no one resting directly on another, but placed over crevice below. These addresses were interpersed with recitations most pleasingly rendered by two young ladies.

About the noon hour, in an hour or so of respite from speechts, recitations, demonstrations with sallies of humor and flashes of wit, such lunches were served as only Keyser ladies can devise and only their hospitality can dispense. Your columns will admit of a deserving enumeration of the substantials and delicacies of this repast, after the multitude had been filled more than fragments remained for many baskets.

Rather in advance of train time a walk out to the edge of the commanding summit gave a view of the vast proportions of these splendid orchards, one it is said, containing four thousand trees, with many others not quite so large but large indeed, reaching in all directions with the appearance of large bushes, beginning to branch out less than two feet above the ground, simliar in sizes and planted in mathematical precision in rows.

Nature lavished her glories in a perfect day, with just clouds enough to sober the glitter of a mid-summer's sun and tone and sweeten the stiff breeze habitual to such an altitude. Look from so superb a height over range after range fading in the haze of far-away lines touched by the rim of the horizon; and then back over the altering panorama of peaks and hills, fields and forest suffulgent under the mellow lights of a waning sun, the truism came home a it seldom comes to so many: "This is a beautiful world in which we live."

OCTOBER 27TH IS TUBERCULOSIS DAY.

National Observance to be Planned in 100,009 Pulpits-Consumption Causes 50,000 Church Deaths Annually.

Churches and religious socities, to the number of at least 100,000, will be urged to give special attention to the prevention of tuberculosis on Sunday, October 27th, or on some day during the week preceding or the week following that date. This season has been set apart and designated as the Third National Tuberculosis Day by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, which makes this announcement to-day.

Tuberculosis Day was originally set on April 28th, but was postponed because of a conflict with Conservation Sunday of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, which was held on that date. The observance of Tuberculosis Day in the Fall this year will be utilized by anti-tuberculosis workers not only for the general education of churchgoers on consumption, but also for the purpose of interesting them in the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals.

Every one of the 600 and more anti-tuberculosis associations allied with the National Association, will be urged to promote Tuberculosis Day in their respective communities. While last year over 50,000 churches observed this occasion, it is expected this year that this number will be doubled. Millions of circulars and other forms of literature will be distributed. The support of every religious denomination will be asked for.

That tuberculosis is a serious problem among church congregations is evidenced by statistics which the National Association gathered last year, which show that 10 per cent. of all deaths among church members are caused by tuberculsois. Based on these figures and on the mortality statistics of the Census Bureau, over 52,000 of the 33,000,000 communicants in churches in the United States die from tuberculosis every year. This figure assumes that the death rate of 1.60 per 1,000 population in the Registration Area applies to all churchgoers, when, as a matter of fact, the rate would probably be higher.

Edmund Burke's Fame Secure.

Among the great men of the world few have been the subject of higher panegyric than Edmund Burke, and, on the whole, few have better deserved praise. No public man was ever more pure in his politics and more pure in his life, and few have been as noble minded. He possessed indefatigable industry. There was no subject that he could not master, and none which, having mastered, he could not expound with unparalleled richness of language.—Exchange.

Way to Meet Work.

The beauty of work depends upon the way we meet it—whether we arm ourselves each morning to attack it as an enemy that must be vanquished before night comes, or whether we open our eyes with the sunrise to welcome it as an approaching friend who will keep us delightful company all day, and who will make us feel at evening that the day was well worth its fatigues.

WHAT OAKLAND OWES TO MOUNTAIM LAKE PARK

THE REPUBLICAN wishes to call attention to the necessity of the people of Oakland and vicinity coming to the help, even to the extent of some personal sacrifice and inconvenience, of the Mountain Chautauqua. It should be remembered that the continued rains through June, July, and so far in August, and the extreme cold of the latter part of July and the first week of August, have made the patronage very small.

The program has never been better, and the entertainment features, entirely independent of the great lectures, which are scheduled for the next few weeks, would command enthusiastic support anywhere. When it is realized how much of the success of this vicinity, to merchants and farmers, depends upon the crowds that are brought here by the Mountain Lake Park Association, it ought to appeal to every one that in their hour of need the Association could depend upon loyal local support.

THE REPUBLICAN calls attention to the wonderfully strong program of the next week or ten days. Two evenings with one of the greatest magicians of the land; three evenings of great pictures culled from all over the world; eight or ten strong musical programs; "Old Soldiers Day" and "Governors' Day," with every promise, that as last year at the very last moment, some of the greatest men of our land may be persuaded to visit the Park

Let us all take off our coats and roll up our sleeves and get to work to give the Mountain Chautauqua a successful season even yet. As they say out West, "Boost, boost, let everybody boost!"

A DIVIDED HOUSE

A long time ago it was said, "A house divided against itself cannot stand." At the present time—there is no denying it—the Republican party is split in twain. For half a century this great party has been a strong cohesive organization, which has controlled the policy of the country. What progress has been accomplished in that time, in so far as governmental polices promote progress, is due to the Republican party. It must also accept the failures that come from the same source.

The Republican party has a glorious history. It has enacted a great many wise and progressive laws. While we do not believe in living in the past, we do believe that we have no way of judging the future except by the past. The very fact that the Republican party has successfully met and solved great economic questions in the past guarantee that it will continue to do so. We must confess, however, that the party is important because it is, and not because it was. But we believe even though it be measured by this standard, it will not fall short.

The Democratic party has been the great opponent of the Republican party. They have met and fought many battles, notably among which were secession, slavery, the tariff, free silver, imperialism, and many of less importance. In every one of these contests the Republican party has been the victor, and the judgment of mankind, by even many of those who fought against it is, that it has been right in all these contests.

A third party, of more potential force than any new party since the Republican party, has been launched. It remains to be seen what this new party will accomplish. Such a party is the outgrowth of the ultra-radical ideas that have existed among the two old parties. It perhaps would not have been launched this year had it not been for the bitter fight waged within the ranks of the Republican party. In any event it would, sooner or later, have been formed. Those who are extremly radical and yet too conservative for Socialism must have some avenue or channel through which they may direct their energies.

The question that now presents itself to every member of the Republican party, and which every member of the Democratic party will have to meet sometime in the future is whether the principles as advocated by the Republican party, the democratic party or the new party, best meets his idea of government; and whether he can best bring about the desired end by remaining a member of one of the old parties or by becoming a member of the new. For there is no question about it one cannot remain a member of one of the old parties and at the same time claim allegiance to the new. There is more difference between the new and either of the old than their is between the old parties. This is what will make the new party live, if it lives at all.

We have a good deal of admiration for the one who boldly sets out to sail the unknown sea; but think little of the one who attempts to launch his boat with one end of a rope attached to it and the other end firmly attached to the land. "To be or not to be is the question."

THE DEATH RECORD

SARAH PEARL SHARTZER.

Miss Sarah Pearl Shartzer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Shartzer, of near Oakland, died at her home last Friday morning, after an illness of about eight months, being confiued to her bed for three months. She suffered from heart trouble and rheumatism, and was a very patient sufferer. She was born March 29, 1894, and was aged 18 years, 4 months, 12 days. The funeral was conducted by Rev. J. M Davis, assisted by Dr. A. B. Riker, Sunday afternoon, with interment in the Oakland cemetery. The pallbearers were: Misses Lorene and Bernadine Dewitt, Abbie Chance, Katherine Dawson, Beulah Kimmel and Mrs. Perry Frantz. The flowerbearers were: Misses Bessie Hendrickson, Mable White, Louise McLaughlin and Alice Quaid. Besides her father and mother, she is survived by five sisters—Mrs. Nora Frazee, of Terra Alta; Mrs. Bertha Smouse, of near Gortner; Mrs. Maud Blamble, of Shaw, W. Va.; Mrs. Florence Wright, of Keyser, and Miss Irene Shartzer, at home—and two brothers—Marcellus Shartzer of Farmington, Pa., and William Shartzer, of California.

MRS. R. M. FORTNEY.

Mrs. Sarah Fortney, wife of Mr. R. M. Fortney, of Oakland, died at Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, of Bright's disease, on last Sunday, aged 55 years. Besides her husband, one son, Walter Fortney, and one daughter, Mrs. Orpha Martin, wife of Mr. Willis Martin, of Oakland, survive. Mrs Fortney's body was taken from Baltimore to Teyerbaugh, near Worthington, W. Va., her former home for interment.

Broke Arm Throwing Ball.

At a game of base ball last Saturday between the Crellin and Tunnelton teams, being played at the Knights of Pythias picnic at Carmel, John Collins, of Oakland, in throwing a ball from the field to one of the basemen, broke his right arm midway between his shoulder and elbow.

A Series of Accidents.

Last Sunday a series of runaway accidents occurred south of Oakland in which several people were more or less injured, the most serious being Mrs. Levi Strawser, who was thrown from a buggy and suffered a fracture of the jaw.

Miss Dessie Lohr, of near Sunnyside, was another victim of a runaway, but escaped with slight bruises.

Picnic at Steiding.

There will be an all-day picnic at Steiding on Saturday, August 17th. In the morning Childrens' Day services will be conducted and all sorts of refreshments will be sold for the benefit of the new church to be erected at that place. Everybody invited to come and bring their friends. The Deer Park and Armistead bands will furnish music throughout the day. Committee.

Picnic.

S. E. BAUMAN.

Maryland Gets Nothing.

The fact that the oyster beds of Rhode Island, which are but one-fifth as large as those of Maryland, nets that state a revenue of more than $100,000 yearly, while those of Maryland do not net this state anything, created considerable comment.

B. & O. Abolishing Jag Cars.

Following the lead of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the Baltimore and Ohio has issued orders discontinuing the sale of intoxicating liquors in the dining cars of its service between Baltimore and New York. For some time the Baltimore and Ohio has been systematically cutting out the sale of liquor on its trains. Three years ago it put the ban on the sale of liquors in the Pullman coaches, following a shooting affray in which an irate Texan sought to avenge his outraged dignity by taking a shot at a Pullman porter. Until the most recent order went out, however, the company continued to sell liquor with meals in the dining-cars. The Company will continue to sell intoxicants in diners on trains in the District of Columbia, West Virginia and Ohio. Illinois has been prohibited territory for a number of years.

Surplus Increased.

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Garrett National Bank of Oakland an additional sum of $5,000 was placed in the surplus fund of the bank, making the total surplus $55,000, or $5,000 more than the capital of the institution.

AUTOMOBILE BARGAINS.

One Model T Ford Five Passenger Touring Car, rebuilt all worn parts replaced with new. New Tires.

One Two Passenger Maxwell Runabout, in good condition, a Bargain if sold quick.

One Five Passenger Hupmobile in fine running order, in use every day, a bargain. LAWTON'S GARAGE.

MOTORCYCLE ACCIDENT.

Mr. S. H. Jackson Was Badly Bruised Sunday Afternoon.

Last Sunday Mr. S. H. Jackson, of Oakland, in company with Mr. Joseph Rathbun, of the Park, and Dr. Selby, were on a motorcycle trip to Romney, and when at a point a few miles east of Gorman on their way to their destination Mr. Jackson to avoid a collision with a wagon steered his machine to one side of the road and ran into a rut. He was thrown from the machine and badly bruised on his hip. The injured man was brought home in Dr. Drinkwater's car later in the day and is still confined to his bed.

FIREMAN KOCH KILLED AT BLASER

Third Son of Mr. C. Koch of Oakland Who Met Death on the Railroad.

Last Friday Mr. Ernest C. Koch, son of Mr. Christian Koch, of near Oakland, was killed at Blaser, a mile or two east of Tunnelton, when the locomotive upon which he was engaged as fireman, became derailed and turned over on its side, crushing the unfortunate young man to death. He is the third brother to lose his life on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad within the past two or three years. He was aged about twenty-five years and was unmarried. He is survived by his father and one sister, who live on the farm five miles west of Oakland, and one brother, W. H. Koch, a brakeman who lives in Cumberland. The funeral was in charge of the Loyal Order of the Moose, of which the deceased was a member. He was also a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and of the Knights of the Mystic Chain.

Woman's Civic Club at the Park.

Patrons and friends of Mt. Lake Park and of the Woman's Civic Club will be glad to know that they are once again to have the oppotunity and pleasure of attending another Civic Club Lawn Fete. These fetes have been a delightful feature of the Park for a number of years and every effort is being made to make this one especially attractive. The splendid work accomplished by the ladies of the Civic Club in beautifying the Park, in adding to its natural attractions, golf links, tennis courts, and bowling alleys, speaks for itself and we feel that each and everyone will be glad to assist in the work so ably started. Those who in previous years have attended the lawn fete need no urging. Those who have never been, have in store for them a treat. Ice cream, the finest home made candy and cake, a fish pond stocked with mysteriously shaped fish, a fancy table that each year becomes more famous for its wonderful bargains and beautiful works of art. Special features of interest to the children as well as to those who are older. A "Mother Goose" pantomine entitled "Little Peggy's Dream" will be given by the children of the Park in the old auditorium at 3:30 o'clock. Bring the children.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

The crowds are here and increasing from day to day, yet the Chautauqua exercises are not patronized as the program deserves.

Saturday afternoon a lawn fete under the auspices of the Women's Civic Club will be held on Chautauqua Park and Germain, the magician, will hold the platform at 8.00 o'clock.

The coming week will be a strong one at the Mountain Chautauqua. Lots of fun; lots of good music. Plenty of entertainment. Thursday, Friday and Sunday nights Colonel C. H. French, the famous traveler, will give his wonderful illustrations of pictures gleaned from all over the world. This will be a great treat to all our patrons. Germain the great magician, appears twice this week on the program. He carries a tremendous amount of apparatus; has two assistants, and is reputed to be one of the greatest magicians of the age. Friday and Saturday nights are his dates.

The Cecilia Quartette, a company of the greatest musicians of our time, make their first appearance on next Monday afternoon at three, and will furnish the vocal music for the rest of the season. These ladies and gentlemen are musicians of national reputation. Their repertoire includes oratorio and grand opera, as well as the simpler musical forms, and the management is to be congratulated upon securing musicians of such high artistic ability.

Bishop W. P. Thirkield, one of the newly elected bishops of the Methodist church, and one of the most brilliant preachers of the day, will be heard next Sunday morning at 10.30. He lectures Monday evening at 8.00 o'clock.

The Second Excursion Day, Governors' Day will be Tuesday, the 20th, Governor Phillips Lee Goldsborough, of Maryland, and Governor W. E. Glassock, of West Virginia, have agreed to be present. They will speak in the morning in the Amphitheatre, and a reception in their honor will follow. There will be three band concerts during the day by the Mountain City Band. Dr. H. W. Wiley will be the great attraction of the day. It will be remembered that Dr. Wiley has fought a tremendous fight to secure wholesome food products and honest weights of the same during these many years. At times he has had to fight against not only cabinet officers, trusts and combines, but rumor has it that Wiley and the people have even been victorious over the executive head of the country. At night a grand operatic concert by the Cecilias. Selections from grand and comic opera. A great treat.

An Old Fiddlers contest will be held here August 31st, at which three grand prizes will be awarded and a prize will also be given to all who take part. Mr. W. H. Mallett will furnish information to all who wish to enter the contest.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Marshall and daughter, of Uniontown, Pa., are at the Virginia Homes for a short stay.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Ferguson and daughter Leonore, of Fairmont, are spending a week here. On Sunday they will motor to Hoyes to be with friends in that neighborhood for several days.

Mr. Jerome Fordyce, a noted character from Fayette county, Pa., was here last Saturday.

Mrs. C. E. Wilson and daughter Stella, of Dunbar, Pa., are attending the Chautauqua.

The services at the M. E. church Sunday evening last were quite enjovable. Rev. George Avery Neeld, of Meyersdale, Pa., preached a most excellent sermon, and Rev. S. W. Davis gave a short talk referring to his early ministry and church building at Meyersdale and referred briefly to his work in the coke mission. The young ladies of the McCrum Training school sang delightfully.

Rev. C. H. Howard, of Fairmont, will preach in the M. E. church Sunday at 8.00 p. m.

Have The Republican in your home.

AN EXPLANATORY NOTE

From Messrs. Mathews & West Concerning The Aviation Meet.

We could not afford to have an aviation meet here free to the public and we did not feel that it would be right for us to charge admission to the grounds for this meet when we were having the town lot sale. The Curtiss Exhibition Company had an open date on the 17th and Gonder Brothers decided to make the engagement with them and accept the proposition they made to us.

This arrangement has been made and entered into with the understanding that the aeroplane flight will be made after the lot sale is over, so that the admission fee is charged to those only who remain for the exhibition.

The aviators are coming here under a guarantee that if the fail to fly no money is to be paid to them. If the aviators fail to comply with their contract the money received from sale of tickets will be refunded to the purchasers.

This will be a rare treat to the people of Oakland and vicinity. Gonder Bros. have to pay $500 to secure the bird men, and their enterprise deserves your liberal patronage.

MATTHEWS & WEST.

Don't Miss This Great Exhibition.

The most wonderful sight in this most wonderful age. Man by the power of his mind over matter, lifts himself off the earth and soars like a bird in the free air of heaven.

THE CURTISS RECORD

The first Aeroplane to make a previously annouuced flight in public, July 4, 1908, by Glenn H. Curtiss at Hammondsport, N. Y.

The first Aeroplane to win a prize in open competition in America, Scientific American trophy, July 4, 1908, won by Glenn H. Curtiss.

The first Aeroplane to make a city to city flight, May 29, 1910, Albany to New York.

The first Aeroplane to carry a message from one official to another, May 29, 1910, Governor Hughes, Albany, to Mayor Gaynor, New York.

Ex-Judge Daniel Wilson, of the Orphans Court brought to this office where it is now exhibition, some thirty or more stalks of oats of the White Tartar variety, grown upon his farm this season. One stalk in the number at this office, selected at random, contains nearly two hundred grains, all well developed and rather large.

Mr. Charles F. White, who has secured the timber on the Oakland Hotel grounds, blown down by the recent cyclone, has a force of men at work on the property engaged in cutting the timber into log lengths. As soon as this portion of the work has been completed Mr. White will have a mill on the property to manufacture the timber into marketable lumber.

Last Friday at the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad crossing at Mountain Lake Park the automobiles of County Commissioner D. M. Dixon, driven by his son Lawrence, and that of Dr. Henry W. McComas, came into collision. Fortunatly the occupants of neither car were injured. Both machines, however, were somewhat damaged but both were repaired at local garages.

Mr. Wade H. Hinebaugh, who recently purchased the James W. Leathers store property on Second street, is making some alterations and improvements on the property. The old building that for years answered the purposes of an office and occupied by Dr. Colardeau during the war, which later became a stable, has been torn down to afford room for a rear porch to the property which is now in course of erection.

The Naylor building, wrecked by the cyclone which passed over this city on Wednesday afternoon, July 24th, is in course of repair, work upon which has been in progress for some time. The third story, which was completly wrecked, has not been rebuilt. A roof has been erected over the two lower stories of the building and as soon as men can be secured to do the work the second floor will be plastered and finished into flats or for office purposes.

Automobile excursionists from a number of states have been in Oakland the past week or ten days. Cars bearing tags from Pittsburgh, Uniontown, Wheeling, Johnstown, Indianapolis, Richmond, Cumberland, Columbus, and other points in West Virginia, Ohio and Pennsylvania, are seen almost daily. Oakland has excellent accomodations in its various garages for the repair and storage of the machines and this fact is becoming generally known throughout the country.

The new operating and waiting rooms built by Dr. McComas as an addition to his office building on Second street, have been completed and are now being fitted up for the purposes for which they are intended. The new addition is of brick, with a concrete floor in the operating room, flanking which are a number of booths for patients who may be operated upon and whose resultant condition may be such as to preclude their immediate removal to their homes. The building is well lighted by a skylight as well as large windows in the rear and everything is arranged for the convenience of both physician and patients.

August 25, Frostburg will begin to carry out the program of its Centennial celebration and Home Coming, by services in all the churches of the city. On Thursday Koster Co., of New York city, start putting up the decorations under the contract with the committee on decorations. These decorations will be the most elaborate and beautiful ever attempted in Frostburg. The handsome Centennial souvenir, illustrated history of Frostburg, with biographical sketches of its prominent citizens, will perhaps be ready for sale the latter part of the present week. A unique feature of this book will be its cover, which will be in black and gold, the black symbolical of Frostburg's chief industry, coal, and the gold, the wealth that comes from the coal. The colors, black and gold, also being the Maryland colors. The book will be sold for 25 cents a copy and will be a valuable keepsake and will advertise the town far and near.

The New Manager

By Mary Barrett Howard

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Mrs. Amos Rood was bustling happily about her neat kitchen, her pleasant face even more beaming than usual.

"Amos is sixty years old today," she explained to the milkman from whom she bought a half-pint of cream besides the customary pint of milk, "an' I'm goin' to get an extra nice dinner."

The 12 o'clock whistle had sounded. The peach meringue pie which was to be the crowning touch of the feast had been brought from the pantry and set upon a side table; the roast chicken was done to a turn; the tomato bisque was ready to pour into the tureen, and as every housewife knows, tomato bisque will curdle if allowed to stand.

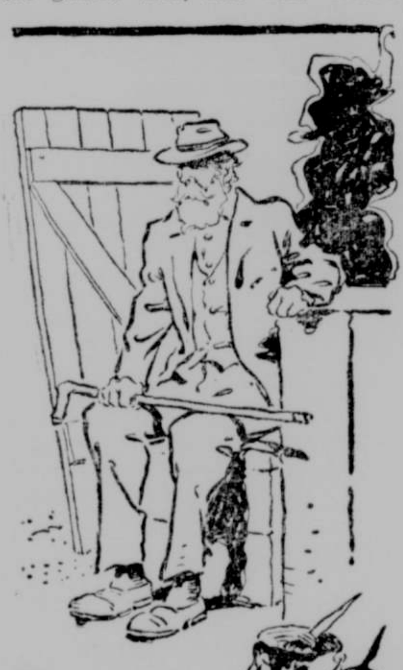
"I do wish Amos would come," the little woman fluttered. "That cream o' tomato won't be fit to eat."

Glancing uneasily out of the window she started at sight of a curiously familiar, yet unfamiliar, figure coming slowly up the street. Sure that bowed, bent old man could not be Amos! He had never looked like that, even when his rheumatism was at its worst. But the next instant she had flung open the door and was running down the garden walk.

"Oh, what is it—what ails you, Amos?" she cried, putting her arms about him to help him up the steps.

"Don't be scared, Lucy—I ain't sick," the man said, with a brave attempt at a reassuring smile.

But once under the shelter of his own roof, safe from prying or pitying neighborly eyes, Amos Rood broke down altogether. Sinking into a chair he dropped his head upon the little table, so gayly decked in honor of the day with tea-roses and heliotrope from the garden beds, and Mrs. Rood's cherished "wedding" china, and his big, shrunken frame shook with a man's painful, tearless sobs.



Found the Solitude He Craved.

His wife silently unclasped his clenched fingers from a letter which bore the seal of a great corporation, and as she swiftly scanned the few curt lines it contained she wailed aghast:

"O Amos, it must be a mistake! The company wouldn't take your pension from you just because you are able to earn a little something extra, now and then?"

"It's the new manager, Lucy," Amos Rood responded dully. "He's trying to cut expenses, and he says it's no part of the company's policy to pension able-bodied men."

"Able-bodied!" the little woman echoed, with a hysterical laugh. "I guess I know what you suffer, Amos, even on your best days. But don't you worry, dear—we'll get old Dr. Moore to write that new manager a letter that will make him ashamed of himself."

"It wouldn't do a mite of good, Lucy," the man said, shaking his head. "He says he's got proof I can earn a good living if I'm a mind to—but—I'm afraid I can't. I'm pretty good at figurin', and when the merchants here get their accounts balled up they're apt to send for me to straighten 'em out, but it's hard for a man of my age to get a steady job, even if I could keep it up day in and day out. Perhaps I was foolish to snap up those chances to add a little to our income. And yet," he added with a sigh, "that pension wasn't a very big one for two people to live on."

"I should say it wasn't!" agreed Mrs. Rood vehemently. "I call it pretty doin's!" she went on fiercely. "Here's you all broken down, and all those years your salary was so small that though I've been as saving as I knew how, we've just managed to pay for this place and put a few hundred dollars in the bank."

"We'd never have done that much if it hadn't been for you, Lucy," her husband said gratefully. "You're a master hand at contriving. But it ain't the company's fault that I got all crippled up with rheumatism, so's I couldn't do my work."

"I'd like to know if it ain't, Amos Rood!" she flashed. "I'd like to know if you wa'n't kept all those years in a damp, underground office and not allowed half the help you'd ought to have had?"

"Well, well, Lucy," the man said pacifically. "The company was good to me that time I had typhoid, ten years ago. Didn't I get three months' leave of absence with full pay and passes for us both so we could take a nice trip?"

"Three months' leave in twenty-five years!" moaned Mrs. Rood. "And now that new manager's going to take away your pension. Oh, I know you think I'm awful, Amos, but I just hate that grasping, greedy old company that works its men to death just the way it does its poor horses, so's to save a little more money!"

"It hurts me to hear you talk like that, Lucy," Amos Rood protested loyally. "The company does the best it can—it has troubles of its own."

"Well, I won't say another word if you don't want I should, Amos," the little woman promised, brushing the angry tears from her eyes. "I ain't afraid but we'll get along some way. It just made me mad to think how little the company seemed to appreciate how honest and faithful you've been. Now you come and wash up and eat your birthday dinner before it's all spoiled."

But though Amos Rood valiantly attempted to do justice to the little feast, it was evident to the anxious wife who watched him that the dainty viands that she had prepared with such care were as dust and ashes to his palate. He looked stunned and bewildered by the unexpected blow which had been dealt him, and as he pushed back his chair from the table, he said slowly:

"I'd calculated to finish up that job of Brown's this afternoon, but when I got that letter I sent 'em word not to expect me—I didn't feel equal to tacklin' figures today. But I'll paint them storm-doors you wanted done, Lucy. It'll be quiet out there in the barn, and I—I want to think things over."

Mrs. Rood looked after him wistfully. "I guess maybe he would be better by himself," she thought humbly. "I wouldn't wonder if my everlastin' gabble bothered him some when he's got things he wants to think over. Well, I'll fly around and straighten up so't will look pleasant to him when he comes in, an' maybe if I was to fix that chicken into a scallop he'd relish it for supper. He didn't eat scarcely a mite o' dinner."

But although Amos Rood had found the solitude he craved, there was something terrifying to him in the emptiness of the great barn, and as he resolutely set himself to the task of painting the "storm doors" he had mentioned, he began to wish vaguely that old Dolly were still alive to stamp her iron shod feet and to nicker to him socially from her stall.

Then, with a sudden pang, he realized that he was glad that the old horse who had been his and Lucy's friend and companion for so many years, had died last month, for how could he have brought himself to sell her when their little home was broken up? The brush dropped from his nerveless hand as he muttered, yes, it would come to that!

Lucy said that they would manage some way, but Lucy, with all her cheery common sense and thrift, had a woman's ignorance of the grim fact that two and two always make four, and never by any chance five or six.

Perhaps, by selling their little place and living on the proceeds they might manage to keep together for a few years more, but the end was inevitable. Sooner or later Lucy would be obliged to go to the well-to-do sister who had never attempted to conceal her conviction that the pretty, energetic girl might have done better than to marry Amos Rood.

As for him, there would be nothing left but the shelter of the county poor house.

Something seemed to snap in the man's brain. Why shouldn't he quietly get out of it all, while there was still something to keep Lucy from entire dependence on a woman like prosperous, self-satisfied Jane Thorn? She would mourn for him he knew, but death is easier to bear than some other things.

Suddenly he paused, arrested in his grim preparations for the deed on which he was resolved.

"Amos! Amos!" his wife was calling.

Ten, yes, five moments more and he would have been forever deaf to that tender voice, and Lucy would have come and found him—he shuddered with a sick repulsion. He had been selfish—cowardly—mad—! But Lucy's light feet were running along the garden paths and she was calling again:

"Amos! Oh, Amos, do please hurry!"

The man stumbled blindly to the door. The next instant he was standing in the warm sunlight he had never thought to feel again, with Lucy's arms about his neck; her happy tears upon his cheek.

"Oh, Amos," she was bubbling joyously, "the general superintendent himself is in the house! It's perfectly lovely to hear him swear. He says the new manager has exceeded his authority altogether, and that the company does know how to appreciate faithful service such as yours has been! And only think, instead of taking away your pension, he intends to increase it! Why, Amos, we'll be rich!"

Acme of Enjoyment.

"Jimmy, what would you do if you was rich?"

"I'd have pie fer dinner every day."

"Anything else?"

"Yes; I'd have a scoreboard in de dining room, wit' de butler marking up de scores from all parts of de country while I eat."

HOT WEATHER POULTRY CARE

Remove Every Window and Substitute Wire Netting for Ventilation of Hen House.

It does not require much hard work to keep a flock in good condition in the summer, but absolute neglect will often completely destroy the winter egg-producing qualities of not only the old hens, but the pullets as well.

If you have not removed every window in the chicken house and substituted wire netting, in order to provide perfect ventilation, do so at once.

Better that the chicks roost in the trees than that they be confined in a vermin-ridden building.

Body lice will worry a flock to death, or so nearly so as to destroy its usefulness. These can be killed, but not easily.

Good insect powder will do the business. It should be applied with a powder spray by one person, while another holds the fowls by the legs so that the powder may reach every part of the skin through the disturbed feathers.

TURKEYS NEED LARGE RANGE

Small Pen in Town Is Absolutely Not Suitable for Rearing Meat For Christmas Dinner.

For those persons in town who are thinking of raising a turkey or two in their back yards there is trouble in store. The back yard or pen is not the place for a bird which refuses to be domesticated, W. A. Lippincott, head of the poultry department at the Kansas Agricultural college, says.

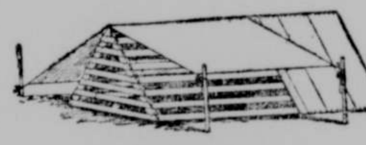
The farm is the place to raise turkeys. They must have a good range. During the first few months it is better to give them no grain, but let them forage and eat bugs. If small turkeys are cared for in this way, the fatality will be much less.

Professor Lippincott suggests that you let some farmer take your young turkeys and rear them. You might arrange to pay a little rent to a farmer for allowing your birds to roam in his pastures. Then, along about Thanksgiving, all you have to do is to go out and harvest your turkey.

SHADE FOR CHICKEN COOPS

Shelter Is Provided by Means of Sail Cloth Where Trees or Bushes Are Found Scarce.

By means of a sail cloth, duck, or factory cotton curtain shade may easily be supplied chickens where there are no trees or bushes. In such a case as illustrated herewith the stakes are about 2 feet long, and driven 4 to 6 inches in the ground. The curtain is tied only at the corners. On the windy side the tying is closer to the ground than on the lee side. This is of special help in spring.



Shading Chicken Coop.

Keeping Birds Graded.

Be sure to grade your birds according to size as the weeks pass. When you find that some are outstripping the others, take them away and put them with birds of their own size. If you have toe-marked the feet and have put on legbands, you will be able to tell the facts regarding them at any time.

Here is where the value of records comes in. Keep an accurate record of every hatch, and then grade the birds without having to feel that if you mix them up you will not be able to tell them again when you want to know certain things about them.

POULTRY NOTES

The contented and happy hen is the laying hen.

Round pebbles will not do for rough edges to grind the grain.

A writer recommends boiled rice for diarrhea in young turks.

Imitate nature as closely as possible and your turkey crop will pay out.

Eggs should always be protected from the hot sun while being taken to market.

Windows should now be out of the poultry house and wire netting tacked in their places.

A floorless brood coop on clean, dry ground is better than one with a board floor in it.

The average hen outlives her usefulness in two years, and is more profitable sent to market.

Whether kept for hatching or market eggs ought to be kept free from any form of moisture.

When eggs are soft shelled the hens are either too fat or do not get enough mineral matter in their feed.

Don't neglect the water supply as plenty of water helps to keep the hens in good laying condition.

A safe rule to follow in chick feeding is to give them just as much as they will clean up nicely at each feed.

The incubator is no longer an experiment, and the demand for poultry products suggests its more general use.

The "utility" bird is one that is not without its faults, but it is often from a good strain, hence has its own economic values.

One feeding rule is to give the hens half as much as they will eat of a morning, nothing at noon and a full meal at night.

GOWNS FOR INDOORS

Highest Type of Sartorial Elegance in Their Construction.

Boudoir Toilettes, Whether the Negligee or the Teagown, Are Things of Grace and Beauty—Short or Long Matinees Worn.

NEW YORK.—For a quarter of a century past the teagown has steadily been growing in grace and beauty. Each season the special artists in that sartorial line, striving to outdo one another, turn out confections of such loveliness that few feminine economists can resist them. The woman of liberal dress allowance doesn't try to overcome their allure for herself. She simply buys here one and there several of the comfortable garments and only occasionally does she admit that she might have managed with a less number. In fact, the teagown in common with the simpler order of negligees, is the one type of garment not greatly affected by the vagaries of fashion. From season to season there are, to be sure, slight differences made in the sleeves and the trimmings, but the negligee that was the last cry 12 months ago, will look exceedingly smart after it has been cleaned and generally repaired.

Flowered chiffons are decidedly in the lead this summer as a teagown material. There is something really picturesque about the folds showing roses, daisies, violets, and the various familiar perennials in natural shades upon a white or creamy ground. When these patterns are blurred by a veiling of shadow or other allover lace the effect is delightfully filmy and illusive. The princess slip of flowered chiffon veiled by an over-robe of lace undeniably makes the most bewitching of all the summer teagowns, but if these materials are a trifle too expensive for the would-be owner of such a model, she may produce practically the same effect by using figured and plain muslin. If she must have something which will endure indefinitely she is advised to test the wearing and laundering qualities of figured China silk and white cotton net.

Lines Held to the Figure.

While each and every one of the new teagowns is so made that its wearer may temporarily eliminate her corset, none of the lines is actually voluminous. The straight and slender silhouette belonging to the ordinary frock is partially preserved in the negligee by a system of gathers placed a few inches above the normal waist line. But this fullness is so cleverly distributed that it is difficult to believe that some of the breadths are not sharply gored. In many cases the empire teagown model is built in one piece and shaped to the figure by tacking the garment on to a ribbon and silk lining, which also performs the duties of the brassiere.

Ruches and plaitings play a leading role on some of the flimiest of the tea gowns. Whether the materials selected are wholly or semi-transparent, the garment must needs be weighted in order to make it fall in below the knees and drag against the carpet as the skirt portion should do if it is to be really effective. Pinked and frayed ruchings of taffeta are put in several rows unless in their place are two-inch wide box-plaited lengths of silk or satin. Either type of garnishing is at present more fashionable than the inset bands of lace and net, although these, too, are frequently used. But in that event the hem of the robe must be weighted with leads and these are almost certain to wear through the thin fabric.

Sashes Give Chic Appearance.

Sashes add a chic appearance to the boudoir toilettes of many sorts, but they are chiefly seen on the flowered chiffons and muslins or on the empire gowns, which look a bit complicated but are as easily gotten into as is the Cleopatra dress. The Egyptian robe is prettiest in a plain silk bordered about the neck and sleeves with a handbag of ribbon having an oriental pattern in gold or silver. The robe, which is drawn over the head after the manner of a football player's sweater, fastens over the shoulders. That is to say, the seams running from the throat to the arm-tops are hooked of lace after the robe has been adjusted.

Fichus of self material are frequently used to cover the figure from throat to waist line. They greatly simplify the matter of trimming that portion of the negligee and may be draped to become a figure of either slender or plump proportions. But they are always prettiest if the chosen fabric is chiffon, muslin or not, as the soft folds may be brought far over the sleeves and the edging of the one made to serve as a finish for the elbows of the other. A wide collar of lace or net or lawn is the prettiest of all the garnishings for a hot weather negligee and nearly always such an accessory may be pieced out by adding a ruffle of contrastting sheer material or a band of coarse net covered with tiny ruchings of ribbon.

Length a Matter of Choice.

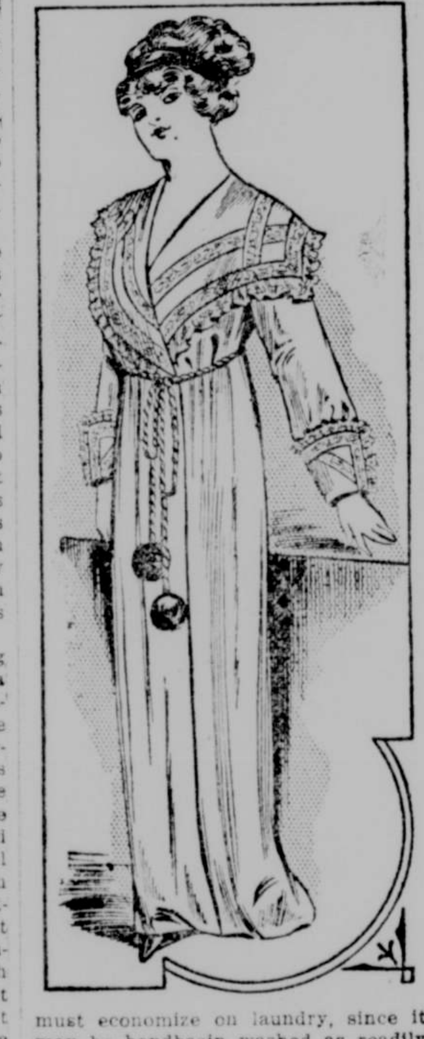
The short matinee is equally as fashionable as the long matinee and the choice of one should be governed by whether the figure looks best in a 24 or a 40 inch jacket. There is, however, this to be said in favor of the greater length, that with it a less elaborate petticoat will answer. And as the matinee negligee wearer generally expects to use various passe evening petticoats with the one jacket she would best seriously consider their conditions before purchasing a short boudoir jacket of lingerie and lace, or flowered materials or of silk and ribbons.

Combing jackets are mere apologies for shoulder coverings. Nearly all of them are cut after the Egyptian manner in two pieces, including the elbow sleeves, but, instead of hooking or buttoning the shoulder openings, the neck is made wide enough to admit the head and the garment is allowed to shake itself into position. After the hair has been dressed, however, no risks are taken, and the ribbons tied into a big bow on the shoulders are loosened, thus making an opening that permits the garment to drop to the floor as does a petticoat. Even more scanty is the fichu combing jacket cut like an enormous shoulder cape with deeply pointed back and fronts. Under the arms the edges of this cape are tied together with broad ribbons and, to a certain extent, form sleeves. But the fichu negligee does not permit the same freedom of movement afforded by the Egyptian jacket. Nor is it so modest looking.

Latest Models the Prettiest.

Several changes are noted in the shaping of the kimonos of flowered silk, muslin or challie and the new cuts are undeniably an improvement upon the former models. Most of all marked is the treatment of the back form, which is now slightly gored from the neck to the hips. The straight out front forms are gathered into a neck band which is a continuation of the one bordering the garment and the narrow straight sleeves are set into long shoulders and really cover the arms.

Glove silk lingerie has evidently come to remain indefinitely. And small wonder, for there seems to be no "wear out" to it. Moreover, it fits the figure as nothing in linen, batiste, crepe de chine or China silk can hope to do. Made on precisely the same lines as the lingerie garments in other materials and trimmed with hand embroidery or lace, it is exquisitely dainty and a real boon to the woman who must economize on laundry, since it may be handbasin washed as readily as a pair of silk gloves.



Virtue of the "Mule."

Mules are fetching creations of brocaded or figured silk, lined with plain satin, edged around their tops with ruchings of lace or ribbon and secured by bands of ribbon which wind about the insteps in sandal manner. They absolutely must match the color of the negligee, but obviously should be of a less perishable fabric.

Hand-embroidered in self-color borders a jacket matinee of white china silk which is modeled after the prevailing lines of the tailored cutaway with the exception of the under-arm seams which are straight instead of slightly curved. The wide, turned-over collar of all-over Valenciennes is edged with the same lace and fastens under a knot of white satin ribbon. Near the waist line, other ribbons starting from under the plaiting of chiffon edging the entire jacket, are loosely tied against a waistcoat of accordion-plaited chiffon. The English cap of white satin ribbon entre deux with Valenciennes, is trimmed with lace and ribbon and the gored petticoat is of white charmeuse.

Use of the Lorgnette.

With the tailored summer suit of white mohair or serge the ultra-smart young woman is wearing a monocle lorgnette, which swings from a narrow black ribbon of grosgrain silk, upon which are tiny slides of gold. These small lorgnettes, which fold together like a single glass, give a smart and sophisticated suggestion to the costume, and as a lorgnette is never a cheap trinket—a suggestion of elegance also.

For the dainty and useful gown pictured, turquoise blue delaine is used. It has a big, prettily shaped collar of the material, edged with white Valenciennes lace and trimmed with two rows of insertion to match, the cuffs being also trimmed to match. A girdle of white silk cord draws the gown in at waist; silk pom-poms trim the ends of girdle.

Materials required: 5 yards delaine 40 inches wide, 6 yards insertion, 3½ yards lace.

COULDN'T READ THEN.

An optician said, when humor was mentioned: "My business sees fun occasionally. I had a case myself a day or two ago. An old darky came into the store and said he wanted a pair of spectacles. The clerk tried one lens on his eyes, and pointed to the paragraphs on a piece of cardboard. 'Can you read that?' he asked. 'No, suh,' replied the darky. The customer tried another pair, and another pair, and many others, declaring he could not read with any of them. Finally the clerk, out of patience, asked: 'Well, say, can you read at any time?' The negro smiled broadly and answered: 'No, suh, that's why I wants glasses. My wife she read yo' advertisement sayin' as how anybody could read with you' glasses, so I thought I might as well come an' try 'em all.'"—New York Tribune.

Better Business.

The $10,000 pitcher disputed a decision, kicked vigorously, and got put out of the game. The manager took him aside.

"You're new to the team and I'll excuse you this time."

"What's that?"

"Listen to me. Don't never get put out of the game again for kicking. You're too expensive. Let one of them cheap outfielders do the kicking. Get me?"

The pitcher said he did.

BUT WHAT IS MAN? THE BIBLE ANSWER

Man Never Fell From the Angelic Nature

And Has Not Been Promised Angelic Nature In Future—He Is "of the Earth Earthy"—Christ Redeemed Him With a View to His Restoration.

PASTOR RUSSELL

Paris, August 11. —One of Pastor Russell's addresses today was from Psalm viii, 4, "What Is Man?" He remarked that although he had been several times in Paris this was his first public address there—on invitation of the local Class of Bible Students Association. He had heard that Bible students were scarce in France, but already he had found some very alert for clearer light upon the Word of God now due because we are in the dawning of the New Dispensation.

Once he and other Bible students, confused with the errors of the Dark Ages, thought of man as a spirit being inhabiting a body of flesh, coming into it at birth and departing from it at death. Bible study is rapidly driving away that error. The Bible clearly tells that the genus homo is an animal being, of the earth earthy—not a heavenly or spirit being. This is in harmony with what science has been telling us—that which we could not receive until we found it to be the Message of God. The Bible does not place man upon an equality with the brute, but far above. His superiority is that of form and species. His larger brain and its better shape than that of the brutes indicate his knowledge and intellectual superiority over them. He is to them God's representative—their king, created in the moral image and likeness of his Creator.

The fact that man dies has led some to the conclusion that he is a spirit being and at death merely finds release from his body of flesh and soars back again to a spirit condition in which he once was. How inconsistent! How illogical! The Bible tells, on the contrary, that God made man as He desired to have him—adapted exactly to the conditions provided for him—an earthly Eden, Paradise. The Bible tells that God proposed to him everlasting life as a man on condition of continued obedience. It explains that dying is not going home, nor going to eternal torment, but ceasing to be.

"Joy In the Morning."

This penalty passed upon Father Adam—he lost the right to live and fell under the sentence, "Dying, thou shalt die;" "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground from which thou wast taken." (Genesis iii, 19.) The fallen, death-sentenced Adam could not give to his children rights which he had lost. Hence we are all sinners by inheritance. We are all dying. By one man's disobedience sin entered into the world, and death as a result of sin, and thus death passed upon all men, because all are sinners.—Romans v, 12.

The Scriptures speak of the past and present as a night time of sorrow and pain and trouble, but tell of the New Dispensation, when the curse shall be removed, and style that a Glorious Day, in which the Sun of Righteousness shall arise and drive sin's clouds away. God through the Prophet declares, "Weeping may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning."

The signs that we are in the morning, the gray light of the New Day, are already manifest to those who are awake. The wonderful blessings that have come to mankind during the last century, and particularly during the last fifty years, are foregleams of the great Day of Messiah, the Day of earth's reconciliation, the Day of the cancelling of the penalty of death, the Day in which God, through Messiah, will wipe away all tears from off all faces. The result of that Day, a thousand years long, will be that all the willing and obedient will be uplifted and all the wilfully disobedient and wicked will be remanded to death—"the Second Death."—Revelation xx, 14.

Why So Long Delay?

It is easy to see why these blessings of Restitution and uplifting out of sin and death conditions did not begin before the first advent of the Redeemer. The uplifting work could not be accomplished until two things would first be done. One was that a redemptive price needed to be given. Adam's life was forfeited. The life of a Redeemer must be given in his stead. This was what Jesus did. He left His heavenly glory, humbled Himself to human nature, and then the Man Christ Jesus gave Himself a Ransom-price for all. This is plain.

But, according to the will of God, instead of beginning the blessing of the world, He did first another work, namely, the gathering of the Church to be His Bride. Their invitation is to suffer with Him and to reign with Him—to present their bodies living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God through Christ. (Romans xii, 1.) So consecrated, the flesh of all believers is counted as the flesh of Jesus, and suffers, as such, trials, ignominies—"Let us go to Him outside the camp, bearing His reproach;" "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus."—Hebrews xiii, 13; II Corinthians iv, 10.

PEACOCK FEATHERS

By Clarence O. Robbins

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"I wouldn't have the critters around," muttered Aunt Agatha as the beautiful peacocks strutted proudly along the terrace.

"Why don't you like them, Aunty?" asked Bess Long as she tossed a biscuit to one of the birds.

Mrs. Long shook her head mournfully. "It means bad luck to have 'em around," she said.

"I don't believe it," declared Bess stoutly. "I think I am lucky to own them. I always admired Hester's peacocks, and when she went to Europe and gave these to me—you know how delighted I am!"

"My Aunt Emeline had a peacock feather fan that I believe caused her death," declared Aunt Agatha dismally.

"But Aunt Emeline was nearly ninety when she died; I thought she died from the effects of a fall."

"She was carrying the fan when she fell. She always carried it, although the whole family warned her against ill-luck. She dropped the fan and stooped to pick it up. She turned dizzy and fell down the front stairs."

"But she might have been picking up her handkerchief in the same manner," protested Bess.

"She was picking up the peacock feather fan," returned Aunt Agatha obstinately, "and so we burned the fan in the kitchen stove."

"It was a pity," murmured Bess, watching the sunlight play on the gorgeous feathers of the outspread tails of her pets.

Aunt Agatha arose and shook out her cashmere skirts. "I must be getting back to the farm," she said primly. "I can't abide the screech of those birds. 'Tain't fine feathers make fine birds, nor never will!"

Bess said nothing, for she was quite accustomed to her aunt's openly expressed dislike for the peafowls, but herself a great lover of beauty in anything, she almost loved the splendid coloring of the feathers of the peacocks that strutted on the terrace.

She watched the old-fashioned figure of her country-bred aunt enter the modern automobile which Uncle Fred insisted was a necessity on the farm, and waved them a gay good-bye before she returned to her slow pacing of the terrace.

Woodmere was a beautiful estate, for Mr. Long was very rich, and this country place was his pride. The peacocks were the finishing touch to the formal garden with its clipped hedges, fancifully trimmed trees and stiff beds of glowing flowers.

"Aunt Agatha has declared against peacocks," she said to her father at dinner that night.

"Agatha nourishes a foolish vein of superstition," observed Mr. Long. "By the way, have you seen our new neighbors?"

"You mean the Allyns?"

"Yes."

"No. Nora said they were occupying the house, but of course we cannot even get a glimpse of it except from the west terrace, and I haven't walked there."

The next afternoon when the sun slanted warmly on the western terrace of the Long house the peacocks took a sudden fancy to sun themselves there.

Bess, drowsing in a hammock in an upper balcony, saw the beautiful creatures leave the terrace and drag their sweeping plumage across the grass to the brick wall that separated the two estates. It had been Mr. Long's great grief that he could not purchase the adjoining property and thus enlarge his own grounds on that side; but the Allyns had had a long lease of the property, and had never occupied it until this season.

From the upper windows of the Long house one could see quite over the high brick wall into the quiet garden of the other house.

"I do hope that the peacocks will not bring bad luck—to—old Mr. Allyn," thought Bess, as she dropped into a light slumber.

The harsh scream of one of the birds brought her to her feet wide awake and trembling.

"How dreadful—it fitted into my dream so vividly. I must go down and bring them back." Bess yawned and shook a dimpled fist at the peacocks now sitting on the brick wall and screeching outrageously.

At that moment she saw a lean hand reach up from the other side of the wall and neatly catch one of the birds by its ugly feet and drag it down out of sight. An instant later the other frightened bird also made its screeching exit only to be promptly muffled in some manner. Then followed intense silence.

Miss Long stared incredulously from the window for several moments and, seeing nothing except the tangle of the old garden beyond the wall, and hearing not a sound of her vanished birds or of their captor, she marched grimly downstairs and, obtaining a big rusty key from the gardener, she made her way through the little pine grove to a small door set in the brick wall.

The lock was rusted and the key was unwieldy. Bess struggled bravely until the key turned creakingly and she could pull open the closed door.

It admitted her to a long, vine-covered arbor where in the green gloom a young man swung in a hammock, reading a magazine and smoking industriously.

"Hello!" he exclaimed at the sudden apparition of a white-gowned maiden in his retreat, and then having slipped to his feet he stared blankly at the extremely scornful though charming countenance presented to his.

"Er—is anything the matter?" he stammered.

"Nothing—much!" retorted Bess warmly, "but I would be greatly obliged if you will return the peacocks to my garden."

"Return the what to your garden?" he asked in ludicrous dismay.

"My peacocks."

"But, I haven't seen your birds—I wouldn't steal 'em anyway—I detest the creatures," he returned frankly.

"They are very beautiful," said Bess stiffly. And then in a few words she described the scene she had witnessed while the young man rumpled his hair and looked very much as if he believed she had been dreaming.

All at once his face cleared. "By Jove, I believe it was Yang!" he shouted, and dashed out of sight.

"He is crazy," said Bess darkly. "I never was mixed up in such mysterious happenings in my life. I wonder if it can be the ill-luck that follows peacock feathers?"

She lingered uneasily near the door of the garden wall. In the distance she heard shrill protesting shrieks, and the thunder of a deep masculine voice lifted in stern reproof. Then there followed a scuffling sound on the graveled path, and presently her new acquaintance appeared, dragging the reluctant form of a Chinese cook.

In the Chinaman's grasp were the limp and lifeless forms of her precious peacocks.

"Oh!" cried Bess sharply, and bit her lip to keep back the tears.

"I can't tell you how sorry I am," said young Mr. Allyn humbly. "Yang swears by all his gods that he believed the birds were common barnyard fowls, and he was about to prepare them for my dinner. As a matter of fact I think he had a covetous eye upon the plumage. What can I do to rectify this matter?"

"It is too late now," murmured Bess. "They ought not to have been trespassing, of course. It was horrid of your man to kill them—they are so beautiful and looked so splendid trailing back and forth on the terrace."

"If you would permit me to replace them—" he was beginning, but Bess shook her head decidedly.

"I would rather not, please. Aunt Agatha said they would bring bad luck, and I believe there is something in it after all. You see they've lost their own lives to begin with."

"And Yang has lost his job," said Allyn darkly.

"Ai Yi!" wailed Yang mournfully.

A little smile dimpled the corner of the girl's mouth. "Let's change things about," she said suddenly. "If peacocks have always carried ill-luck, we will have things different. To begin with, Yang shall keep his job, and that means good luck to him, see?"

"Now that's real sporting of you, Miss Long," said Allyn heartily, and when Bess blushed beautifully he added: "I wonder what luck they will have for me—I was going to sail for Europe Wednesday, but I've changed my mind. I'm going to stay right here."

"That sounds like bad luck," remarked Bess.

"It seems like mighty good luck to me," declared Allyn.

Bess pretended not to understand, but her heart beat faster as he held open the door in the wall and she passed through to the other side.

That was only the beginning, and when October came with her golden measure of days Bess Long became the bride of Jack Allyn. His gift to her was a splendidly jeweled fan of peacock feathers at sight of which Aunt Agatha threw up mittened hands in horror.

"But peacock feathers bring such bad luck," she groaned.

"Not for us," explained Jack, meeting his bride's trusting eyes. "We have changed all that. Peacock feathers means nothing but happiness and good fortune for us."

NOTHING GAINED BY WORRY

Oppose Depressing Thoughts With Good Nature and Hustle, and Note the Results.

Sickness may come; death may be at the door; but the man who does not give up cuts down the doctor bills and cheats the undertaker altogether.

Business deals may go wrong and financial disaster may threaten, but the man who takes stock in himself and remains on the job seldom enters the bankruptcy court.

Poverty may be at the door, and hard luck may bring adversity, but the man who takes his fortune with a smile will be at the dock when his ship comes in.

So, why worry?

Worry saps vitality, brings gray hairs, produces wrinkles, and it can turn a sunshiny day into a dreary one.

Without a cloud in the sky, worry can make one believe there will be a downpour any minute.

Worry discounts bills receivable, adds interest to those which are to be paid, and disturbs the scheme of things generally.

It never won a battle. It never cleared a situation. It never solved a problem.

Its antithesis, good nature, and its lifelong enemy, optimism, have many victories to their credit. Its antidote, hustle, is responsible for many good things which man has enjoyed.

So, again, why worry?

Temperance

VIEW OF WARDEN HELLSTROM

Would Strengthen Temperance Laws in Every Way and Teach Children Folly of Liquors.

F. O. Hellstrom, warden of the state penitentiary of North Dakota, in an address before the W. C. T. U. of Jamestown, said:

"I would strengthen the temperance laws in every possible way. I would start in by teaching the children in the schools the folly and evil of the use of intoxicating liquor, drugs and narcotics; instil in the minds of the youth that nothing but shame, poverty, degradation and crime can possibly result from their use and the traffic in them. I would make laws with the aim and object to completely abolish the traffic. There is not one word that can truthfully be said in favor of the business. If I had the power to draw the veil so as to expose to view its evils I could show you the slimy coils of hades, intensified a million-fold worse than the mind of man can imagine. You can see and imagine the crime and wanton abandonment, but a true picture of the evils would cause your imagination to pale into insignificance. To sum up, I will say that it is beyond the power of man to invent a lie that will in the least libel the traffic in intoxicants, opium or other stimulants unless, perchance, something good should be said."

DRINKING MEN ON THE SHELF

Railroads Do Not Want "Fuddle-Brained" Engineers to Run Trains and Endanger Lives.

"The passing of fuddle-brained kings and fuddle-brained generals, and fuddle-brained engineers and bookkeepers and mechanics, is one of the sure achievements of the century," says Rev. John F. Cowan, in a "straight-from-the-shoulder" article in the Christian Endeavor World.

"The handwriting on the wall today is against 'fuddle-brain.' The railroads do not want to put him in their engine cabs. The electric companies dare not trust him where the reckless handling of a switch may send thousands of volts of energy on death-dealing errands. Uncle Sam cannot trust Captain Fuddlebrain to navigate the delicate machinery of his dreadnaughts. Bankers and merchants cannot have their accounts kept by a young fellow who comes back from his lunch stupid with beer. The insurance companies and fraternal orders do not want to insure a 'cigarette heart' or 'beer kidneys.' Even the docks and mills do not want him to handle pig-iron or shovel ore.

"Not only in athletics, but in business and in public life, young men are being weighed in the balance on the score of their self-control."

A Device of Man.

God no more "made liquor" than he made a faro table, or a resort of debauchery. He no more made it than he made the tools of the burglar or the vile inventions which the customs seize. He made it only in the same sense as he made the dynamiting bombs of the anarchist thugs. Wheat and corn and rye are wholly useful and wholesome food as nature yields them, but by the devices of man strong drink is produced from them, and it ruins men if they take too much of it, as many of them do if they drink it at all. Instead, therefore, of putting the responsibility for liquor on God, we advise the clergy to lay the whole blame for it on men, as a dangerous luxury which God compels them neither to produce nor to consume any more than he compels them to do anything else.—New York Sun.

Breeds a Proper Pride.

We are warned against the sin of pride. Now whisky is the best thing to destroy pride that I ever heard of. When a man is sober he likes to have clean food, respectable-looking clothing and a comfortable bed. When he is drunk he isn't a bit stuck up; it matters little for him if his clothes are ragged or dirty, whether his home boasts of one pane of glass or of five; when it comes to sleeping he would just as soon lie down in the gutter as any other place, and thinks a curbstone quite as good as a pillow.—Janette C. Beach.

Public Sentiment in Iowa.

Iowa has 99 counties. Sixty-nine of these have outlawed saloons for all time. Thirty are battleground, declaring now for the saloon, now against it. The last few months have seen a steady current toward prohibition in these 30 counties. When Fort Dodge, that hitherto stronghold of the liquor traffic, outlawed her saloons, the hand writing on the wall was visible to everybody. Iowa will vote on constitutional prohibition within the next four years.

Government's Duty.

It is the duty of government so to legislate as to make it easy to do right and difficult to do wrong.—William E. Gladstone.

Abstainers Favored.

The United States bureau of labor reports that 51 per cent of American employers discriminate in favor of total abstainers.

GRAFT INVESTIGATION IN NEW YORK BRINGS IN NAME OF PARK RESIDENT

He Is Alleged to Have Been Victimized Out of $10.000 by Tapping Game.

The investigation in New York into the official conduct of Police Lieut. John Becker, who is under arrest in connection with the Rosenthal murder, yesterday revealed the attempt of a confidence man, who is said to have a nation-wide reputation, to swindel L. T. Yoder, proprietor of the Mt. Lake Hotel, out of $10,000 by the time-worn wire tapping game.

Whether or not the game was successful is a question. Mr. Yoder, over the long distance telephone from his summer home in Mountain Lake Park, last night declared to a Pitsburgh paper that it was not. He admitted, however, that the attempt had been made and said that he had been warned before he had put up any real money.

Dective William J. Kenny, who is connected with the office of Deputy Police Commissioner Dougherty in New York was in Pittsburg yesterday looking for Mr. Yoder so that he might get a better description of the man who, Kenny said, had taken Mr. Yoder's $10,000. The detective left for Mountain Lake. Kenny said that the matter had been reported to the New York police and had passed through the hands of Lieut John Becker, who is now under investigation and that Becker, although he had seen the man with Mr. Yoder several times, had failed to make an arrest. Kenny said Mr. Yoder gave the swindler a check for $10,000 and it was cashed by the confidence man. Mr. Yoder told his friends that he had stopped payment of the check in time, and was not out of pocket.

The plans for the swindle were laid cleverly. Mr. Yoder is the owner of large coal lands in the southern part of the state. During the first week in July he received a letter from a man in New York who said that he had a purchaser for the coal lands. He advised Mr. Yoder to come to New York and talk the matter over. After a few more letters had passed between the men Mr. Yoder left for New York to meet the supposed purchaser of the coal lands. They were said to be brother and sister, who had recently inherited a large sum of money and were anxious to invest it to the best advantage.

On the first trip to New York the brother and sister failed to appear and Mr. Yoder returned to Pittsburg. Several days later he received a telegram which told him to hurry to New York as the deal was about to be closed. This time he met the supposed purchaser in the Murray Hill Hotel. It was explained that the sister was delayed in getting to New York, but would be along in a few days. Mr. Yoder was invited to be the guest of the men while waiting for the sister.

Mr. Yoder was taken out to see New York. It was then that the subject of horse racing was broached. The man who was to act as the middleman in the coal deal told Mr. Yoder that he had a friend who could obtain advance information on a race being run that day. He also explained that if they could get enough money together they could clean up $10,000. According to Mr. Yoder this conversation took place in the lobby of the Murray Hill Hotel. Then, according to Mr. Yoder he was approached by the house detective of the hotel, who warned him not to have anything to do with the man or he would be apt to lose money.

The house detective notified the police of the presence of the man in New York and a trap was laid for him. Mr. Yoder was to take dinner with him so that the police might arrest the confidence man. According to Mr. Yoder decided to call off the coal deal and returned to Pittsburgh. His companion said that he was going to Cleveland and would communicate with Mr. Yoder as soon as the deal could be brought to a head.

According to the New York police they were notified that Mr. Yoder had been swindled out of $10,000. The failure to arrest the swindler is the cause of the investigation of Lieut. John Becker ordered by Police Commissioner Rhinelander Waldo.

Old Fiddlers' Contest and Concert.

Arrangements are being perfected for an old fiddlers' contest and concert to be held at Mountain Lake Park, on Saturday evening, August 31st, at 8 o'clock. Prizes will be given to all contestants. There will be two classes, for those over 50 years and those under 50 years. To the one playing three pieces the best, in either class, a prize of $10 will be awarded; to the second best in either class $5 will be awarded; to the third best a prize of $2.50. Each player will be allowed to select his own music. In addition there will be special music. Don't miss this entertaiment. Admission will be for adults 25 cents; for children, 15 cents.

Boy Poisoned.

The four-year-old son of Raymond Broadwater, of Merrill, drank iodine from a bottle which was carelessly left within his reach last Monday and will probably die. Medical aid was had as soon as possible, but the poison had a long start on the doctor. The child is living at this writing.

THE LOT SALE LAST SATURDAY.

About Forty Lots Disposed of by Local Firm—Aeroplane Flight.

The widely advertised sale of Highland Park lots came off last Saturday morning and afternoon when the local firm of real estate men, Messrs. Matthews & West, sold at public auction about forty of the most desirable unimproved building lots that can be had, the proceeds of the sale amounting to about $5,000. Among those who bought largely at the sale where Messrs. W. R. Stull, of Alderson, Pa., Walton Miller, of Fairmont, W. Va., and D. E. Offutt, Jr., of Oakland.

In the morning the attendance at the sale was not large, but in the afternoon the crowd was estimated at seven hundred or more.

The Mountain City Band of Oakland was on duty nearly the entire day and rendered some very excellent music.

The feature of the afternoon was the areoplane flight made by Mr. Wm. Hemstrought, of New York.

About five o'clock the navigator made an unsuccessful attempt to fly in which his machine was more or less wrecked. Repairs were made, however, and at about 6.30 the machine rose from the ground like a bird and circled over Mountain Lake Park and Oakland two or three times, the descent being made more graceful than the ascent. To Messrs. Gonder Bros., who financed the affair and were wholly responsible for the appearance here of the aviator, the thanks of those who never before witnessed the like, are due.

Civic Club Meeting.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I—Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis.

CHAPTER II—Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life.

CHAPTER III—A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Postoffice Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case.

CHAPTER IV—Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery.

CHAPTER V—Kent nad Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, "Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J." Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook."

CHAPTER VI—A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case.

CHAPTER VII—Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing.

CHAPTER VIII—Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up the investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sackett of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation.

CHAPTER IX.

A New Mystery.

I was up with the dawn the next morning and down-stairs to find a train schedule. The only thought in my mind was that I must go to Louise at once. I could not understand her sudden amazing change of front. Why, after pledging me to solve the mystery, should she all at once be as insistent that I should immediately stop all inquiry? I had lain awake the whole night, pondering the situation and seeking a solution. What reason could she have? Who could have influenced her to such action?

The first train, I found, left two minutes before six. I ordered breakfast, though in no mood for eating, and went to Davis' room. I felt that I needed his advice. I found him awake, smoking a cigarette in bed. Briefly I related to him the amazing telephone conversation I had had with Louise the night before.

"What possible reason could have influenced her to make such a strange request?" I concluded.

"A woman doesn't have to have a reason," he answered—flippantly, it seemed to me.

"You don't understand!" I cried. "Louise is not the ordinary flighty girl. She has the finest, best-balanced mind of any woman I ever knew. She never acts on impulse."

Davis looked at me with that exasperating smile of his.

"Kent," he replied, "when you have been married as long as I have, when you know women as well as I do, you will realize the folly of trying to find reasons for the things women do. Their minds are not governed by reason, but by impulse. Every sane woman knew that the hobble skirt was an absurdity, yet when Fashion decided in favor of the hobble skirt it was worn. I doubt very much if Miss Farrish herself could tell you why she asked you to discontinue your investigation. Probably she acted on impulse. By this time she undoubtedly is just as eager as she ever was for you to go on."

"What would you advise?"

"I'd go on," said Davis laconically, as he lighted another cigarette.

For a moment I was almost shaken in my determination to do nothing until I had seen Louise. It seemed as if Davis might be right. Perhaps she had acted only on impulse. Perhaps her love for me had made her feel that the investigation might lead me into danger. But I reconsidered. She had given me her love and trust and confidence. She surely was entitled to full confidence from me. I could not honorably continue the investigation without first seeing her.

"I am going to town on the first train," I said decisively. "I shall do nothing until I have seen her."

"And I shall go on with the investigation," said Davis with that exasperating smile of his.

Impatiently I turned and left him. I choked down a cup of coffee and hurried to the station. The journey seemed miles and miles long, though the train made few stops. As soon as the ferry landed me in New York I sprang into a taxi and ordered the driver to take me at once to the Farrish house. Not until we had turned into their street did I realize that it was still too early for me to try to see Louise, even on such an urgent mission as mine. A few doors away from the house I stopped the chauffeur and bade him drive up the avenue to the entrance of Central park.

I dismissed him there and strolled aimlessly into the park. I would wait until ten o'clock before I tried to see Louise. Still pondering the situation, I strolled along one of the park walks and found a bench by the little lake where the swan boats are. There was no one about at that early hour and I was glad of it. I wanted to be alone and think.

How long I sat there I do not know. I was so deep in thought that there was neither sight in my eyes nor hearing in my ears. Yet the eyes will not be denied their rights. A feeling came over me that some part of my brain was trying to tell me something. It came more and more forcefully. My eyes were seeing something which they were trying to compel me to notice.

What was it?

I pulled myself together with a start and looked about me.

With an exclamation of horror I sprang from the bench and gazed into the lake just in front of me. Floating on the surface, not fifty feet from where I had been sitting, was the body of a woman.

"Other suicides, other suicides"—Davis' remark of two days before kept jigging through my brain. Other suicides! Katharine, Elser, the woman at Ardway—his prophecy had been right—and was this another in the terrible chain?

I ran like a madman toward the park entrance, where I remembered I had passed a policeman. It was with relief that I found him still there.

"There's a woman—drowned—in the lake!" I gasped, pointing over my shoulder.

He ran back to the lake with me and together we waded out in the shallow water where the body lay. In my horror at the unexpected sight I had not stopped to note her appearance, nor could I have told whether she was young or old, dark or fair.

I looked at her now with more than interest—with a feeling of sorrow, of understanding. The deed of Katharine Farrish had brought me to a closer sympathy with unfortunate persons influenced to seek death. As I saw that this poor girl was young and fair I sadly wondered what tragedy had driven her to drowning.

Never shall I forget the impression the picture of this suicide made on me! She lay on her back, with long blonde tresses of well-kept hair floating out on either side of her shapely head. Her eyes were closed, but her shapely brows and long dark lashes made her face comely even in death. Her clothing, I observed, was well-made, and though wet and soiled as it was by the water it still gave the impression of neatness.

We grasped the body gently by the arms and drew it in to the bank, where we lifted it to the park bench on which I had been sitting.

"I wonder if there is anything about her to identify her by? said the policeman, and together we looked.

Apparently there was nothing. There were no rings on her hands, though the fingers were those of a woman of refinement. The officer turned back the collar of her coat, but the name of the maker had been cut away.

"She didn't want nobody to know who she was, I guess," he said after a hasty examination. "They generally try to hide their names."

"Yes, I suppose they do," I said apathetically.

"I've got to go over to the arsenal and report this and send for the wagon. Will you wait till I come back? I won't be long."

"I'll wait," I said.

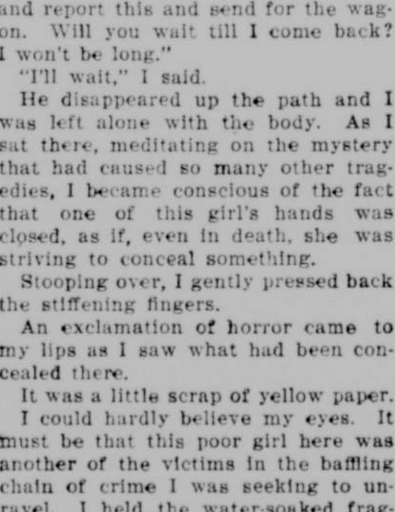
He disappeared up the path and I was left alone with the body. As I sat there, meditating on the mystery that had caused so many other tragedies, I became conscious of the fact that one of this girl's hands was closed, as if, even in death, she was striving to conceal something.

Stooping over, I gently pressed back the stiffening fingers.

An exclamation of horror came to my lips as I saw what had been concealed there.

It was a little scrap of yellow paper.

I could hardly believe my eyes. It must be that this poor girl here was another of the victims in the baffling chain of crime I was seeking to unravel. I held the water-soaked fragment up to the light, but there was nothing on it—not a word. Yet there was no mistaking the color and texture of the paper. It was undoubtedly the same that Louise and I had found in Katharine's room after she had tried to kill herself. It was the same that the police had discovered in Andrew Elser's room. There was no question in my mind but that it was the same that the woman in Ardway had torn up before she hanged herself in the little hotel. But what was the tie between them? What could be the mysterious import of this yellow letter that drove its recipients to death?



I Gently Pressed Back the Stiffening Fingers.

Here was one fragment. Perhaps I could find other scraps—perhaps the whole letter. I ran down to the bank of the lake and began a systematic search of the water along shore. Foot by foot I studied it carefully. For ten minutes I searched unavailingly and then I caught a glimpse of something yellow half hidden by an overhanging tree. Carefully I parted the branches. Sure enough, submerged in six inches of water, were more of the yellow scraps. I waded in and, scooping them up carefully in my hands, laid them on the grass to dry, for they were all but falling apart and I hardly dared handle them. Meanwhile I continued my search for other yellow scraps—this time without avail. If she had carried a torn-up letter with her as she sprang to death, the other pieces had floated away.

At last, convinced that there was no possibility of recovering more of them, I gave up my search and returned to where I had spread the recovered scraps on the grass. One by one I studied them. They were evidently a part of a type-written letter, but the ink had run so that it was impossible to read a single word on them. From their shape, too, it appeared that they were not consecutive, so there was little hope of learning anything from them.

Just two of the inky smears seemed to have a possible meaning.

On one of them I was almost positive that I could trace the word "youth." On another scrap was a word that a little stretch of the imagination might decipher as "her."

"Youth" and "her."

They might mean much or nothing. They might have some bearing on the great mystery I was trying to solve. They might have none. Perhaps they were, after all, merely phrases from a letter that had brought disappointment to a loving woman. In all likelihood this suicide had no connection with the others. But why, then, the yellow paper?

So intent was I on my thoughts that I did not observe the return of the policeman until I heard his voice.

"What have you got there?"

There was suspicion in his tone—the natural suspicion of the representative of the law. It was on the tip of my tongue to say: "Another yellow letter."

For once prudence restrained me. I recalled how my too hasty speech at the coroner's inquest had led me into trouble. I could hardly expect a twelve-hundred-dollar policeman to assist in solving the mystery that was still perplexing Davis.

"Just some scraps of paper," I said carelessly. "After you had gone I noticed that she was clutching a bit of paper in one hand. I searched around the lake to see if I could find more. I found these. It is evidently part of a letter, but the ink has run so you can make nothing out of them."

"Let's see them."

I handed him all of them.

"This," I explained, "I found in her hand and the others were over there under those bushes."

One by one the policeman examined them, turning them carefully over and over.

"There's nothing to them," he finally announced. "The wagon will be here in a minute. I don't suppose you'll want to be claiming any credit for finding the body?"

I had feared that he would insist on my accompanying him to testify to its finding. It was quite a relief to hear him take this view of it.

"Of course not," I answered hastily.

"Then," said he with utmost candor, "you might as well beat it. It don't do a cop no good to have other people finding things on his post. If you ain't here when the wagon comes, there ain't nobody to say it wasn't me that found the body. I want to thank you, though, for coming and telling me about it. There's a lot of fools would have gone and telephoned the arsenal and then I'd been on the carpet for not covering my post properly."

I was glad indeed of the opportunity to get away. It was nearing ten o'clock. My trousers and shoes were in such condition that I wanted to get to my apartments for a change before seeing Louise. I hastened to the park entrance and hailed a taxi. By the time I left my rooms and reached the Farrish home it was ten minutes after ten.

As my taxi turned into the street I saw another one stop before the Farrish door. At first I thought it must be the doctor or one of his assistants, but as the front door closed behind the tall figure of a man who had been admitted to the house I realized that it was some one I had seen before. There was something reminiscent in the broad shoulders, in the walk. It was some one I knew, or ought to have recognized, yet who he was or where I had seen him I could not at the moment recall.

I was not three minutes behind him in reaching the door. Though the other visitor had been admitted at once, there was no immediate response to my ring. I waited a while and rang again. It seemed minutes before any one answered, then one of the maids opened the door a trifle and peered out.

"Mr. Kent to see Miss Louise," I said.

To my great amazement she did not open the door to me, but still holding it just barely enough to enable her to talk to me, said: "I'm sorry, sir, but I have orders to admit no one to the house."

Dumfounded at such a reception, I still thought she was only carrying out a general order, the wisdom for which I could readily see.

"Of course, I understand that you have your orders, but please tell Miss Louise that Mr. Kent is here."

"I'll tell her, if you wish," she said doubtfully, carefully closing the door before she went on the mission.

The shutting of the door in my face gave me an odd sense of desolation. It seemed as if I were being shut out of the life of the woman I loved. Yet on second thought I smiled at my perturbation. The maid was only carrying out a necessary order. As soon as Louise knew I was there she would come running to the door herself. In a minute she would be folded in my arms and all misunderstanding would be cleared away. Undoubtedly she would have a good explanation for her telephone message of the night before. I told myself that it was only lack of sleep and the incident in the park that had upset my nerves. My misgivings were utterly foolish.

At length the door opened slowly. I had expected to see Louise herself behind it, but it was the same maid. This time she held the door hardly as wide as before.

"I'm sorry, sir, she said, "but Miss Louise says she can not see you now."

"What?" I gasped.

She repeated her message while I stood there dazed. There must be some mistake. Louise must have misunderstood the name.

"Did you tell her it was Mr. Kent?"

"Yes, sir, I told her."

"What did she say?"

"She said she could not see you or any one else now."

I was puzzled beyond expression. Why should Louise refuse to see me? I was conscious of having done nothing to offend her. If only I could see her for just a minute to find out what was the matter! I felt that I must reach her. For an instant I was tempted to brush past the maid and force my way in. Surely Louise of her own accord would not treat me thus. She must be beside herself with grief. Perhaps she was under the same malign influence that so distressed her sister. Yet even in the depths of despair we observe the conventionalities.

"Will you ask Miss Louise when she can see me?" I found myself saying in calm tones to the maid.

Again she closed the door in my face. Again I waited.

"Miss Louise says that she will see you if you will return in an hour," was the message that was brought me.

I left the Farrish door and stumbled blindly up the street. The plight in which I found myself seemed inexplicable, maddening. I was sure Louise loved me. Had she not turned to me in the first hour of her distress? Had she not telephoned me when her sister shot herself? Had she not permitted me to take her in my arms? Had she not commissioned me to solve the mystery of the yellow letter? Yet why had she bade me discontinue my search? Why had she shut her door to me? What could be her motive? What could have influenced her against me?

Torn by a hundred conflicting emotions, I traversed street after street, not knowing or caring whither my feet were taking me. I must have retraced my steps, for I found myself in the block where the Farrishs lived. I looked at my watch and saw it was still half an hour before the time I had been told to return. I turned away from the house and wandered aimlessly on. There was some mystery in Louise's conduct I could not fathom. She refused to see me, yet just ahead of me some one else had been admitted to the house. A wave of jealousy swept over me. Who was this other man? I racked my brain, striving to recall his appearance, trying to remember what there was that was familiar about him.

All at once it came to me. A wild rage filled me. I knew now who he was. A picture of the office in that little hotel in New Jersey came to my mind, as it looked when I stood by the stove drying my clothes. A man had come to the desk and got his key and had walked past me as he went to his room. I knew now where I had seen that man who was admitted to the Farrish home. It was the man called Cook.

It was Hugh Crandall.

CHAPTER X.

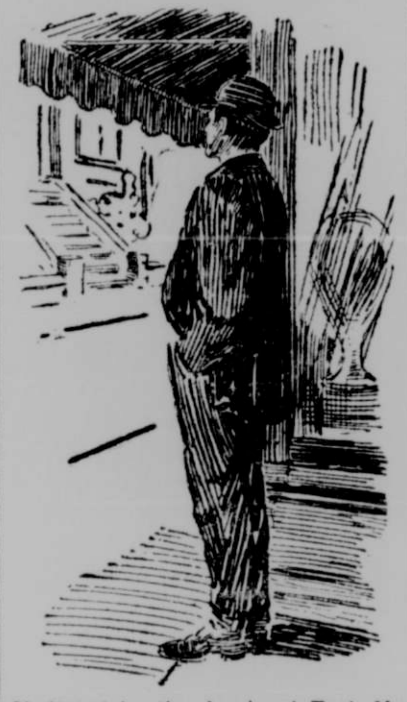
Who Was the Thief?

An unbidden and unwelcome guest, jealousy came and sat by the altar of my heart, stirring the fires of my love for Louise into furious darts of flame that scarred my soul. That Crandall—for I was positive now that the visitor who had entered the Farrish home had been he—should have been admitted to the house with so many things pointed to his guilt, while I, an accepted lover, and certainly Louise's faithful servitor, had been barred with such scant courtesy, filled me with dumb, unreasoning rage. I felt that all claims of friendship and of service, even disregarding the still stronger claims of honest love, entitled me to far different treatment.

Yet even in the burst of anger that overwhelmed me there was not a single thought of harshness toward Louise. I felt that if I could see her she would explain everything satisfactorily. It was toward Crandall that all my wrath was directed. Feeling, as I did, sure that he was responsible for Katharine's attempted suicide and for her poor father's plight, I feared that his visit to the house boded ill for Louise. Undoubtedly his malign influence had persuaded her to bid me drop my efforts to solve the mystery. He must have realized that I was close on his trail, so dangerously close that the daring criminal had ventured to come to the house in one last effort to thwart my plans for his exposure.

As I became calmer I resolved on a course of action. Louise's strange request to me over the telephone must have been made because she was dominated by the fear of this villain who had brought disaster on her father and sister. Perhaps she feared that some evil might befall me if I persisted in trying to run him to earth. Possibly she was afraid that still greater evil might come to those she loved. I felt that for her own happiness it was necessary that I should continue my course. I would go on with my investigation and once for all free her from the crushing thrall of this hidden evil. I would wait where I was until Crandall had left the house, then I would insist on seeing her and telling her my resolve, nor would I permit her to dissuade me from it.

On the corner was a drug-store. Sheltered by its awning I took my stand to wait until Crandall left the house. I could see the Farrish door, yet my presence there under the awning would hardly be noticed. I had not long to wait. In about five minutes the door opened and the caller emerged. This time I had an opportunity to get a good look at him. I was right. His face was that of the man who had been registered in the Ardway hotel as Henry Cook, who had so abruptly left the room when the inquest was being held as I had begun to ask questions about the yellow letter, who had driven from the town behind the fastest horse obtainable.



Sheltered by the Awning I Took My Stand to Wait Until Crandall Left the House.

He came swinging down the street past where I stood. As he came closer I was amazed to note that his face was not the unnatural color of the morphine user's that I expected, but ruddy with health. His eyes, however, wore a strained expression and his brow was knotted with wrinkles. I was strongly tempted to spring out from where I stood as he passed, to seize him by the throat and to make him tell me all I wished to know about the hideous mystery. Yet better judgment withheld my hand. After all, the evidence I had against him was not of the tangible sort that would convict. Even though I knew of his telephoning Katharine just before she shot herself, even though General Farrish had learned something about him that barred him from the house, even though we had found in his rooms a hypodermic syringe and the address in New Jersey where the third suicide had taken place, even though I myself had noted his suspicious actions there, there was nothing definite enough to warrant seizing him as yet. I watched him as far down the avenue as my eye could follow and then turned toward the Farrish house. This time I was admitted without delay. Apparently the maid had new instructions.

"I'll tell Miss Louise you are here," she said as she showed me into the reception-room.

As I waited I tried to think how I should greet Louise. While there was much that I might reproach her for, I felt that surely it had not been her fault. I knew she must be acting under compulsion. I was determined, though, to let her know that I knew that Hugh Crandall had been in the house.

INDUSTRY AND MECHANICS

DEVICE TO GENERATE STEAM

Texas Man Invents Apparatus That Can Easily Be Attached to Ordinary Kitchen Range.

A steam generating device that can be attached to an ordinary kitchen range has been invented by a Texas man. The generator runs through the back of the stove and is supplied with water from a reservoir at the ends of front. A burner is connected with the generator and the reservoir has a conductor, which connects with the generator, and has a nozzle with a discharge orifice that extends inside. By this means air is forced through the generator to the burner. Of course, the amount of steam generated in this way will not give as much heat as a furnace, but it will heat a few rooms or keep a small house comfortable, and is especially convenient for those days of spring and fall when the furnace fire has been allowed to go out.

There are now made cigar boxes of cardboard in such exact imitation of Spanish cedar boxes that they might anywhere be taken for the real thing.

Three layers of a cardboard specially made for the purpose are pressed together to produce a board of precisely the right thickness, and then upon the outer side there is printed, from an engraved plate and with correct coloring, a photographic reproduction of a sheet of actual Spanish cedar; this reproduction showing the grain of the wood with all its variations and even the tiny little knots, if there are any.

The bottom and the sides for a cardboard box are cut out all in one piece, so that they require neither nailing nor sewing. The end pieces, cut out separately, are wire stitched in by machine, and then the cover is put on, being hinged with the usual piece of muslin.

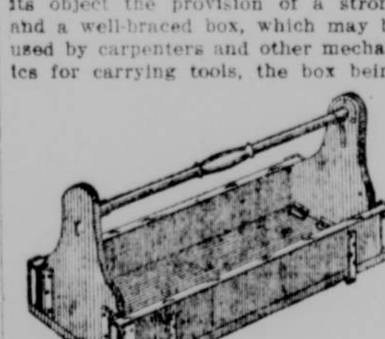
These cardboard boxes made in imitation of cedar are finished in regulation manner, paper lined and with the usual paper flap to cover the cigars. The outer edges are paper bound in the usual fashion. In its finished state the box contains one nail, the nail always found at the center of the front edge of the cigar box to hold the cover down. These boxes sell for about 30 per cent. less than boxes made of wood.

FOLDING BOX FOR MECHANICS

Strong and Well-Braced Device for Carrying Tools of Any Kind Invented by Easterner.

The Scientific American in describing a folding box for the use of carpenters and other mechinics, invented by J. C. Gordon of New London, N. H., says:

"Mr. Gordon's invention relates to improved folding boxes and it has for its object the provision of a strong and a well-braced box, which may be used by carpenters and other mechanics for carrying tools, the box being so constructed that it may be conveniently packed in a small space. The handle, held securely to the end members, assists in bracing the box. The accompanying engraving illustrates a perspective view of the invention."



Folding Box.

Excludes Plant Roots.

In their search for water, plant roots often penetrate the joints of sewerpipes, and to prevent this, N. H. Castle of Norfolk, Va., fills the joints with cement and before this is quite hard covers the surface with coarse salt. The salt crystallizes into an adherent coating that repels all roots.

Breaking the News

"Papa," began Bobby, after dinner, does it cost very much to build a house?"

His father laid down the newspaper he was reading and considered the question.

"It depends, of course, on how big a house you want to build and how deep your purse is," he said at length. "Are you thinking of building a house?"

"I've been thinking about how much it costs," Bobby said. "And I wondered. There's so many winders and doors and things. Of course, parlor winders cost more'n cellar winders, 'cause they're made of better glass. Now, Jimmy, he says some parlor winders cost $2, but then Jimmy always puts prices up awful high. Gee, I wisht it wouldn't rain such a lot. We don't hardly get outdoors any."

"It's rather hard on baseball and picnics, isn't it?"

"Well, we ain't had any plans for picnics yet, hardly. Billy says our room at school oughter get up one, but he begins talking picnics soon's Christmas is over. Nellie Foster's had one all thought out long ago, but it ain't fair to get up one that way.

"I ain't in a awful hurry for any picnics long's it's so wet. It's baseball that I'm looking for. I'd like to know how anybody could run in all the mud, less'n he was a fish. It was baseball started me thinking about houses an' things like that."

"I suppose your idea was to build a grandstand to protect the baseball fans. Is that it?" asked the father.

"N-not exactly," Bobby acknowledged. "You see, we don't get any fans 'cept fellers that don't want to sit down. They get so excited they just jump up and down, an' run all around. Jimmy he's a swell player this year. We was playing yesterday and this morning before it started in to rain in the same dinged old way."

"Hold on! That's no way to talk."

"Why, 'dinged' isn't bad. You just oughter hear that feller from over on Aunt Mary's street. Gee, that's going some, the way he talks."

"I don't like that sort of boy, myself."

"Oh, well, he ain't so bad," Bobby said, hastily. "He don't say 'em, you know. He just knows 'em and keeps still. Only he told some words to us fellers wunst and they're worse than 'dinged.' He's a swell player, only he gets sore when the fellers butt in. You see, the fellers get so excited they pick up the ball and throw it in when they ain't on the team at all, and it makes him awful sore. I don't blame him, do you?"

"No, I should think not. They have no business to touch the ball."

"Well, he made me crazy talking about houses. It was him started me and Jimmy talking and he said houses often cost more'n a thousand dollars. He said you divide up a thousand dollars into winders and doors and you'd find a door cost a heap. He said there was about twenty winders in this house. Is there?"

"I don't think I ever counted them. You might count them some day, just for fun."

"Well, anyhow, he said he could count 'em from where he was and he bet each winder upstairs cost $4 and a cellar winder cost at least $2. I ain't ever heard anything so foolish, have you?"

"It was perhaps a rather high estimate. Some day when we are over at the glazier's we might ask him just out of curiosity how much one of our windows cost. A cellar window, for instance."

"I thought maybe we might go over that way this evening if it stopped raining," Bobby said hopefully. "You ain't had a lot of walking today, have you?"

"Not a great deal."

"Billy says burglars always get in through cellar winders. Do they?"

"Not any oftener than through other windows."

"Once would be often for me," Bobby sighed. "Balls go through winders awful often, I think."

"So a ball went through one, did it? I hope it wasn't where the boy would get himself into serious trouble."

"No, sir. That's the nice part about it," Bobby said cheerfully. "It was our window. It went through, just as easy, this morning."

"Our window? Did the boy feel sorry? I suppose he offered to pay?"

"I'm—well, I'm offering now," Bobby stammered. "It was me."—Chicago Daily News.

Children Versus Church.

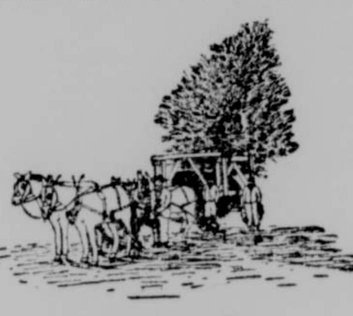
In a strong article in Suburban Life Magazine, Margaret Woodward raps the present-day woman and shows how the ancient and honorable calling of home-making is being neglected by the modern woman. As an example she cites the following: "Across the street a new family has moved in, consisting of father, mother and several small children. These children are allowed to amuse themselves by committing acts of lawlessness in adjoining yards. When visited by an irate neighbor, whose lawn had received a donation of tin cans and other abominations, the mother admitted she did not know what her children were doing. When asked why she did not look after them she offered as an excuse church duties, which were so arduous as to leave her no time."

HORTICULTURE

HOW TO MOVE LARGE TREES

Process Now Made Possible Through Contrivance Attached to Ordinary Wagon.

The moving of large trees is now made possible through a single contrivance which may be attached to the running gear of an ordinary wagon. The tree can be raised to any desired angle and retained there, by means of the endless chains on the cog-wheels in the upper part of the frame-work and their connections with the block and tackle below. The old-fashioned guy ropes, usually fastened to the head of the tree, are discarded, as they have frequently proved to be injurious by disconnecting or loosening the roots from the ball of earth.



Moving Large Trees.

In order to get the wagon directly over the ball of the tree, and also over the hole where the tree is to be replanted, the rear axle of the wagon is removed, and the back of the truss or elevated framework upon which the tree is suspended keeps this part of the wagon together at any width required. To prevent damage to grass areas, wide tires are used. In the case illustrated, 14-inch tires were used on the rear wheels.

CULTIVATION OF PEACH TREE

Thorough Culture Kills Weeds and Forms Mulch Conserving Much of the Soil Moisture.

It is very essential to take the very best possible care of the young trees. They should be kept thrifty and healthy, and all the necessary care given them to conserve the moisture and plant food in the soil.

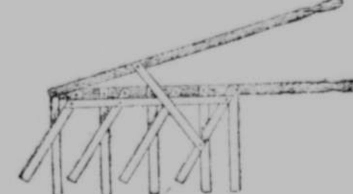
Early in the spring, as soon as the soil will permit, it should be stirred six to eight inches deep; thus if the trees have been planted as deeply as they should, plowing this depth will cause them to produce a deep root system which will not be injured as quickly by freezing or drought. After this plowing the fertilizer should be applied and worked with a disk harrow or cultivator.

Frequent cultivations should be given with the cultivator or disk harrow, running deep enough to form a good soil mulch and prevent subsequent baking or crusting of the surface and prevent loss of soil moisture by evaporation. Thorough culture kills all the weeds, which are a constant drain on the soil mosture and plant food and also assists in decomposing and liberating any plant food which may have been turned under.

USEFUL AS HEDGE TRIMMER

Implement Easily Put Together by Using Several Blades Attached to a Wooden Handle.

Hedge cutting or trimming with a sickle or with hand snips is very slow and tedious work. As I had considerable hedge to take care of, says a writer in Popular Mechanics, I made a trimmer with several sets of blades similar to a regular trimmer. The blades were attached to a wood handle and operated with a wood lever as shown in the sketch. The operation is the same as when using the regular hedge trimmer.



A Hedge Trimmer.

Learn to Graft.

Why not urge the boys to experiment in grafting different kinds of fruit trees? Dig up some small fruit trees, such as plum, cherry, apple or peach. Some of which can be raised by planting the seed. The plum and cherry trees can be found almost any time where the sprouts come from the old tree. Then get some limbs from a tree of the same kind and of a choice variety and bury them all in a box of dry dirt in the cellar. At any time during the winter or spring graft them and put them back in the dirt till time to plant out.

Care of Fruit Trees.

Look well to the little fruit trees set out this spring. See that they do not suffer from lack of water. When trees need water pull the soil away from around the roots, give each tree a pailful, and, after it soaks in, replace the earth.

GOOD CULTURE OF POTATOES

Desirability of Planting Seed Deep in Soil—New Land Planted to Clover Is Best.

In growing potatoes, my pet idea is to plant the seed deep, so the crop will get all the moisture possible. Let the seed be at least 4 or 5 inches below the level of the soil in which the potatoes are planted, says a writer in the American Cultivator.

By all means set the seed in deep. We need not cover them full depth when planted, but leave the furrows to be filled in gradually during the subsequent cultivations. Do not hill the potatoes much; just round the earth about the vines sufficiently to keep the tubers well covered over. Soil suitable for potato growing must be well drained and when this has been done, either naturally or artificially, it is very important, this planting deeply so the roots will form well down deep in the moist, cool soil, which makes ideal conditions for the production of large tubers in abundance. This is the principle of so-called "trench culture" of potatoes. Happily, we can perform now nearly all the work of cultivation and harvesting by machines run by horsepower, thus doing away with the costly and tedious hand labor. In growing all crops we must cut down the expense of culture to the lowest possible mark.

In selecting soil for potato culture, new land or land recently in grass and clover affords ideal conditions for the growth of the potato. The second season after plowing up the grass or clover sod is much more suitable for potato culture than the first, as obviously we cannot plant the seed deep on a new tough sod, but a year or two, first in corn culture, will tame the sod so as to fit it admirably for the potato.

RIGHT TIME TO PLANT TREE

Work Should Be Done Just as Soon as New Growth Is About to Begin—Start With Season.

It may be said that the right time to plant any tree, root or shrub is just as the new growth is about to begin. It follows from this that the planting season may be prolonged if the tree or plant can be kept in a dormant condition. This is constantly done by keeping trees in a low temperature until two weeks after the natural planting time.

But there are other considerations, besides the convenience of the planter. A tree will make a better, healthier growth, if it starts with the season. The condition of the soil is more likely to be right then, than later. We are more certain of sufficient moisture, and just the proper amount of heat. Later there may be a lack of rain, and too much heat. And yet we sometimes have in the early part of the season too much rain, so that the soil is really not fit to work. It is too much like mortar. So it is sometimes necessary to hold trees waiting for the proper condition of soil. So it can be seen that the best general rule is to plant just before the new growth starts.

There is no harm done if the buds swell and open, and the leaves begin to expand, provided the weather is not too hot and dry. But it is preferable, because a little safer, to set them out say twenty-four hours before the buds open.

It goes without saying that trees may be successfully transplanted both earlier and later than the ideal time. It is done often.

Rape for Hogs.

Rape may be sown as late as the first of August and still make a lot of good pasture for hogs, says a writer in the National Stockman. It is a good thing to sow in the corn at the last cultivation, but owing to the fact that it winter-kills I should like to sow something else with it. I expect to seed down five acres of corn with the following mixture per acre: One bushel soy beans, four pounds of rape seed and one and one-half gallons of crimson clover. If for any reason I fail to get a stand I will dril in rye after the corn is siloed.

Guinea as a Forager.

The guinea fowl is a great forager and destroys many insects that the hens will not touch. They do not scratch the garden, and, though not easily kept near the house, they make known the places where they lay by a peculiar noise, which enables one accustomed to them to find all the eggs they lay. They really cost almost nothing to raise, and when roosting near the house create an alarm should intruders make their appearance.

Cribbing Corn.

If you are a little doubtful as to the keeping qualities of the corn you first gather, put a load in one crib, then a load in another, allowing each load to air out well before being covered up by the next load. You will thus avoid heating and subsequent mold.

Grading Pig Stock.

To grade up your pig stock is as important as grading up the dairy cows. The most conservative course is to select the breed most popular in your vicinity and improve on the common individuals by the use of improved boars.

Fine the Soil.

Plant root hairs feed from the minutest particles of soil. Clods are useless. Crush them and make plant food available. A land-roller, pulverizer, mumbler and several kinds of harrows are indispensable.

YOU AUTO HEAR THIS.

This is the way Slidell Brown, of the West Virginia Argus, looks upon the benzine buggy. There is food for thought in his utterance, and they will be read with interest if not with profit:

"The automobile is a rubber-tired cash separator, which is being used largely to keep prosperous American citizens from worrying over how to invest their money. There are a great many varieties of cash separators, but the automobile is far the best. It can go through the ordinary flush citizen in a very few months and leave very little cash in the tailings. In fact it's work is approached in thoroughness only by the private yacht, the society bug and the private schools for girls. The automobile is driven by gasoline, assisted by water, oil, electricity, wind and gas, and sometimes horses and mules. Some drivers have also used brains with great success, but the supply is too limited to be generally adopted. If every automobile driver were equipped with a small set of brains, we would have no more accidents which occur while a car is being driven about 15 miles an hour, the speed limit. An auto consists of an engine with 175 parts connected with a clutch with 95 parts to a gear box with 75 parts and then to a differential with 50 parts. When all of these parts are feeling well and working together, like the old Guard Republicans in New York, the automobile is said to be in good running order. However, if any individual part of an automobile is feeling convalescent, and will not work at all, the man who wants to sell the machine to you secondhanded, will solemnly swear the machine will run like a watch.

"Automobiles come in all sizes, including the piker size, the family size, the bank director size, and the fool size. A small car with only 11 condensed horses in it can be bought for $350 and can be driven over the curb and into a tree as successfully as a big car, which costs $5,000, and has tires as fat as elephant's legs.

"Automobiles are now very carefully made and are entirely practicable, being used for hauling trunks, transportiug passengers and getting rid of the idle rich. Automobiles are made which can run 100 miles an hour and will stop when requested. Very few automobiles break down any more but the number of owners who break up is steadily increasing. This is because the automobile is no longer a weird hobby, but a badge of prosperity, and a great many people are wearing the badges who can't afford to pay their dues.

"Automobiles are more costly now, because they are more reliable and also because hundreds of people are busy every day inventing new things to hang on them. Ten years ago an automobile would go 10 miles and then stop a month, because of a 50-cent breakdown. But now an automobile owner will go 200 miles, pay $35 in fines, wear out $50 worth of tires, eat $10 worth of food, knock $75 out of a $40 buggy, and neglect $1,000 worth of business all in a day.

"The number of automobiles made in this country next year will approach 125,000. This will not supply one-fourth of the people who want them, but after the people who can afford them have bought, there will be 100,000 left—and they will all be sold."

COUNTRY SCHOOLS.

The United States Bureau of Education has given wide publicity if not actual indorsement to the views of the Kansas state superintendent of public instruction concerning the detectiveness of the educational methods in rural schools. The Kansas educator asserts that country school buildings are poor, unsanitary and ill-equipped. The supervision, he says, is wholly inadequate. Of the 12,000,000 rural school children in the United States, he declares that less than one-fourth are completing the work of the primary grades and that high school privileges are denied the majority of country boys and girls. The charge is a very sweeping one.

Apparently he does not except any state from his indictment. Manifestly there is a difference in rural schools in different states, and in any particular state where school funds are raised partially by county levies there is a considerable variation from one county to another both as to the material equipments for educational purposes and as to the effectiveness of the educational methods used.

It is probably true, however, that in no state are the rural schools as effective as they should be. Judging from what is a matter of common information as to Maryland rural schools, there has been a marked improvement in school buildings within the last ten or fifteen years, and there is reason to believe there has also been an advance in the average of educational results. Many farmers take their boys who are fourteen years old from school the first of April and do not enter them again until December. The school year for these is limited to four months. What is needed in some rural communities is a better appreciation of the importance of carrying the educational standard beyond the three R's.

ROOM FOR 60,000,000.

In the churches of all denominations in America there is seating room for 60,000,000 persons, announces a statistician, who bases his figures on the last religious census. Every man, woman and child of our ninety-odd million could find room to attend at least one service a Sunday.

What is the proportion of regular church attendance to the population? It would be interesting to know. It would be deplorable if there were a general decline in religious feeling. Nearly all denominations are growing, though some not as fast as the population. There never was a time when there was more sincere religious effort than now. The Men and Religion Movement, which recently swept over the country, was probably the most powerful revival among men ever seen in this country.

"What is the matter with the churches?" is a question asked often enough by those who do not actively join in their work. They might be improved. But, all things considered, the churches are doing their duty about as well as any agency in America, probably better. The real question is, "What is the matter with the people who don't go to church?"

Old Soldier's Day, Thursday, the 29th. Don't fail to attend.

SCHOOL BOARD MEETING.

A Number of Scholarships Awarded at the Session.

The school commissioners of Garrett county met in advertised session last Wednesday and Thursday. All members were present.

Upon petition of the citizens of Maysville, near Kitzmiller, a school was authorized to be conducted in that village during the coming school year.

J. M. Nugent and Charles Funk of Bayard, appeared and protested against the proposed site of the Bayard school building. The Board stated and ordered recorded upon its minutes that it desired the building to be located if practical one-quarter of a mile nearer to Bayard.

The site of the new Mt. Zion school building, authorized several weeks ago, was determined upon by the commissioners and was ordered built upon the old site, the contract being awarded to Mr. B. E. Lawrence, of Swanton, for $350

Upon the resignation of two trustees of the Aaron Run school, George L. Michael and Lee Fazenbaker were appointed to fill the vacancies. Trustees were appointed for the new Spring Glade School as follows: Henry Strawser, Walter Flanigan and Charles Tasker; for the new Sang Run school, David Liller, Franklin Harvey and Jas. J. Gilbert; for the Three Fork Run school, William S. Harvey was appointed trustee to supply a vacancy in the board of trustees, and Joseph Howell was appointed trustee of the Bond school.

A school for the colored children of this county was authorized, provided an average required by law is assured and mantained.

Recommendations for scholarships were made as follows; Charlotte Hall, Joseph Littman, Oakland; Western Maryland College, J. R. Engle, Grantsville; St. John's College, F. G. Schrock, Crellin; Maryland Agriculture College, Dwight Townshend, Oakland; Normal School No. 11, Gilderoi Worton, Oakland, and Miss Marie Conner, Grantsville.

Appropriations for repairs and improvements were made and authorized for the following schools: South Point, Bond, Oakland Grammar, Sunnyside, Oakland High, Flatwood, Swanton, Lageer, Hoye's Run, Grantsville, Friendsville, Cherry Creek, Fairsweep, Cherry Meadows, Kitzmiller, Short Run, Deer Park, Blooming Rose.

Charles B. Callis, of Hoyes, was upon the recommendation of the local trustees, appointed principal of the Kitzmiller school, and likewise Miss Bessie Griffith was appointed assistant teacher of the Selbysport School.

The commissioners determined to visit the Dry Run school neighborhood today in an effort to locate the new building authorized for that section several weeks ago.

An order was passed directing the superintendent to give credit in the renewing of certificates for work done by the teachers in recognized schools.

Several bills were passed and ordered paid.

The board adjourned to meet Tuesday, September 10th.

All old soldiers of the Civil War are admitted free to the exercises of the Mountain Chautauqua on August 29th.

WAS ROBBED BUT MONEY RECOVERED.

Home of Mr. George Jeffries Near Lonaconing Entered Sunday Night.

When Mr. Geo. Jeffries a resident of Garrett Co., whose home is located two miles west of Lonaconing, returned from attending church Sunday evening at nine o'clock, he discovered that his home had been broken into and a trunk blown open and a sum of money had been extracted. He immediately telephoned for Sheriff Maffett in Oakland. The sheriff advised him to get a pair of bloodhounds from Fairmont, W. Va., and this he did. The dogs, together with Mr. F. C. Musgrave, their owner, arrived Monday at 9.13 and they immediately left for the home of Mr. Jeffries. A scent was obtained from the pocketbook from which the thief had taken the money and then followed from the house to the front yard direct to and along the county road leading to Lonaconing. The hounds got as far as Winn's store on Douglas avenue, when a gentleman went up to Mr. Jeffries and asked him if he got his money back would he be satisfied. Mr. Jeffries told him he would, if the thief would return the money which he took and pay the expense of the bloodhounds. The thief paid Mr. Jeffries the money and the sheriff ordered the hounds taken off the track.

THE DEATH RECORD

REV. H. C. SALEM.

Rev. H. C. Salem, pastor of the St. Clairsville Lutheran charge, Bedford county, Pa., died Saturday night at the home of David Fetter, of diabetes, aged 44 years. Rev. Mr. Salem left Osterburg on the Saturday evening train for Mr. Fetter's, intending to preach at Cessna and Messiah Lutheran church, Sunday. He was found in bed Sunday morning in a serious condition and was relieved of his suffering Sunday evening by death. He leaves a wife and five children and his aged mother. The remains were taken to Selin's Grove for burial. Rev. Salem went to Bedford county from Accident about four years ago.

REV. JOSEPH LEE, D. D.

Rev. Joseph Lee, D. D., died very suddenly last Friday morning at his home in Mountain Lake Park of heart failure, and was burind in the Oakland cemetery Monday morning at ten o'clock, after services in the Park M. E. church, which were in charge of Rev. J. A. Fullerton. Other ministers present and assisted were Bishop Thirkield, Revs. W. D. Reed, D. L. Reid, H. C. Howard, S. W. Davis, C. W. Baldwin, A. B. Riker, and P. Z. Musgrave.

Rev. Joseph Lee was born and educated in Ireland. He came to America from his native land in August, 1872, and at once became identified with the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was converted and began to preach at the age of fifteen, becoming a local preacher in the Methodist Church of Ireland and Scotland. Mr. Lee's parents died when he was very young, thus leaving him to "face life's battles" with more than the usual temptations of youth, yet always and everywhere his mind was pure and his life untarnished. His educational advantages were good for his day and these he improved by earnest and methodical study. He was a great reader of good and wholesome books, thus enlarging and cultivating his keen and robust mind. Mr. Lee by his superior ability and beauty of character attracted the attention of the leaders of the church and he was given positions of great responsibility and influence. As a preacher he was logical, scholarly, profoundly in earnest, and at times surpassingly eloquent. He preached the gospel in its essential purity and power, leading his hearers to new and enlarged visions of truth.

Mr. Lee was pastor of many of the most important churches of his conference, viz: Clarksburg, Buckhannon, Grafton, Moundsville, Wheeling. He also was Presiding elder of the Clarksburg and Parkersburg district. From the latter appointment he transfered to New York City and became pastor of the John's Street church which is the oldest Methodist church in this country. Later he returned to his native state and gave the remainder of his years to the building up of the church in West Virginia. For a number of years Mr. Lee had been engaged in temperance-reform work and was deeply interested in the present amendment campaign in West Virginia. Mr. Lee was an extensive traveler. He crossed the ocean thirteen times and has visited many countries of the Old World. He also has written books which are interesting and valuable. His Encyclopedia of the Bible is pronounced by competent critics as a very fine piece of work and fully attests his ability in scholarship and knowledge of the Bible. His book of travels is also interesting and instructive. Mr. Lee had many marked characteristics of character. Among them were his unassuming modesty and his steadfast and unfailing friendship. In the autumn of 1879 Mr. Lee was married to Miss Ida M. Engle, of Grantsville, Maryland, who has been a devoted helper with him in all his work. She with their three children remain to cherish the memory of a devoted husband and father. The children are Dr. Samuel Lee of Georgia, Missos Jennie and Nellie at home.

Thirty-Five Years Ago.

The following articles are taken from THE REPUBLICAN of August 25, 1877,—thirty-five years ago, and will be read with interest in 1912:

LOCAL NEWS.

Good flour is selling in Oakland at $8 a barrel.

Hon. A. P. Gorman was in Oakland on Tuesday.

The iron cages for the jail arrived at Oakland on Wednesday.

Mr. W. O. Ison accidentally broke the bone of his left thumb, on Wednesday.

Mr. Arthur Townshend left on Friday evening for a visit to friends in W. Va. and Ohio.

Mr. Geo. A. Spedden, assisted by several workmen, on Thursday erected a bill board for the circus, on the east side of Daily's park, fronting on Main and Liberty street, 250 feet long and 11 feet high.

Mr. Nicholas Merrill, living 1½ miles north from Oakland, on the Hooppole road, left at this office specimens of the finest apples grown in the county. We wish to state here that our farmers should pay more attention to the fruit raising, as a good quailty always commands a high price. Mr. Merrill always sells his surplus apples, readily, at from 25 to 50 per cent. more than the usual market price.

FOOT RACE.

A foot race, that caused some excitement and considerable amusement, took place in Oakland on Saturday evening last, between Thomas Martin and John B. Brant. By the conditions of the race Martin was placed at Wayman's crossing and Brant at the railroad crossing in front of Coddington's Hotel, and they were to run to the culvert at Stone Church and back to the railroad crossing. At the word "go" Brant made a much quicker start than his opponent, and in turning at the culvert gained a little, and came home about ten feet ahead. The distance for Brant was about 300 yards, and for Martin about 250 yards.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.

On Friday last Mr. Isaac Coddington, of Oakland, had his revolver apart cleaning it, and as he placed the loaded chamber in its place it was discharged, the ball taking effect in the index finger of his right hand, the upper joint of which was almost stripped of flesh, but the bone was not injured. Dr. E. H. Bartlett dressed the wound.

THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The brick work on the court house is completed, and the carpenter work, painting and plastering is progressing rapidly. The court room and jury rooms will be completed in time for September court, and the entire building by the first of October.

The Sheriff's house and jail is also being pushed forward, the brick work of which will be completed next week, and the entire building by the middle of October.

LITERARY.

The regular meeting of the Garrett Literary Society was held at the public school building on Saturday evening, Aug. 18th, at 8 o'clock. A good audience present. After the regular order of business the following were the performances for the evening:

Reading of the Society paper by Miss Nellie Peddicord. None of the performers present except the debaters. After a little delay the question, "Which causes the more misery, war or intemperance," was discussed. The debate was lengthy, but interesting and both sides were well supported by statistics and arguments. The judges for the evening were F. A. Thayer and W. P. Townshend.

Order of exercises for this (Saturday) evening.

Speech, N. B. Wayman; Essay, W. H. Tower; selection, W. Davis. There will be no debate this week.

As this (Saturday) evening is the evening for election of officers, a large attendance of members is expected and desired.

BITTINGER.

A few farmers thrashed their wheat crop last week, and the best yield reported was 129 bushels from four acres on C. E. Ellithorp's farm.

A gang consisting of five wagons, laden with gypsies, passed through this village last Monday, causing quite an excitement among the people.

Amos H. Reckner and son, Master Johnnie, of North Glade, were here on business Monday.

Rev. John A. Morgan, of Raleigh, N. C., is spending his vacation with relatives here, and preached a very excellent sermon from the Lutheran pulpit on last Sunday morning.

Prof. J. C. Beahm moved his family and household effects to their new home in Salisbury, Pa., a few days ago.

G. W. Engle returned to Baltimore on Saturday, after spending a few days among relatives and friends here.

Miss Bessie Wiley, who has been employed at Mt. Lake Park for some weeks, has returned home.

Clarence Bittinger, who is employed as a skilled workman on Otto & Otto's saw mill, spent a few days with his lady friend at Mt. Lake Park, and as a result the mill has been idle.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Beachy returned on Saturday from a week's visit with relatives at Canton, Pa.

Don't forget the picnic and its promised pleasures at Bittinger next Saturday.

SALOON ROBBED.

Mr. R. S. Jamison's Bar Raided and $43 and Revolver Stolen.

The saloon of Mr. R. S. Jamison, on Railroad street in Oakland, was robbed Sunday night of about $43 in cash, a revolver and some liquors, entrance to the room being effected by way of the transom over the front door.

The money and revolver had been placed in the safe in a rear room of the saloon on Saturday night, the day combination on the safe being set, hence the thief had little trouble in getting at the valuables.

From the Forty Years Ago column of the Cumberland Times the following was clipped Monday: "The Oakland correspondent to the paper started his letter with the following paragraph "As we have been permitted through a gracious Providence to exist through, over and beyond the time we were to be sent spinning into space by Prof. Plantmour's monstrous fiery comet we likewise resume our weekly duty in contributing a few lines to your popular journal." The letter then described the increase in growth of Garrett county saying it was "almost impossible to find an anti-Garrett man anymore."

The excursionists to the Park Tuesday were few in number, but those who were in attendance enjoyed a splendid day. The lectures were all that could be desired and the musical numbers of the program in the evening far surpassed anything yet attempted before a Mountain Lake Park audience. Another disappointing feature of the day was the non-arrival of Governor Goldsborough of Maryland, who was detained on account of the extreme illness of his son, and Governor Glasscock, of West Virginia, was unable to leave his official duties owing to the critical condition of internal affairs in his native state, his presence at Charleston being absolutely required.

Col. A. G. Sturgiss, whose journey to the Battle Creek Sanatorium at Hot Springs, S. D., was delayed on account of not being able to secure proper railway accommodations, left for that point on last Wednesday night, accompanied by his brother, Hon. George C. Sturgiss, of Morgantown. They arrived there on Saturday morning, the trip having been accomplished with little or no discomfort to the Colonel, whom the physicians pronounce curable and anticipate sending him home restored to his usual strength and vigor. Mr. George C. Sturgiss is expected at his summer home in the Park, on Sunday morning. The news that Col. Sturgiss can be restored to health was received here with a great deal of satisfaction and pleasure by his host of friends.

MARYLAND WEEK SHOW AND MEETING.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Preliminary arrangements are now being made for the annual meeting and exhibition of the Maryland State Horticultural Society and affiliated agricultural associations, in the Fifth Regiment Armory, Baltimore, November 18-23—"Maryland week."

The exhibition this year promises to surpass that held last year in several departments.

The premium list of the Horticultural Society, which has been sent to growers, offers many valuable prizes.

Fruit growers should plan to ship early ripening fruit to the Terminal Heating & Freezing Company, No. 402 S. Eutaw st.; later varieties, vegetables, and other farm products intended for the exhibit can be sent direct to Armory prior to opening of the exhibit.

All farmers and fruit growers should plan to attend these meetings. Any information concerning either Association meeting at this time, may be had by communicating with the respective Secretary, College Park, Md.

FRUIT PACKING DEMONSTRATIONS.

The School of Horticulture of the Maryland Agricultural College and Experiment Station desires to conduct as many demonstrations in packing apples this fall as possible. Any grower desiring to have a demonstration in their orchard, where an expert will be present to show how apples should be packed in boxes and barrels, should communicate with the School of Horticulture, College Park, Md.

There is no doubt that our growers should give more attention to the proper packing of this fruit. It is in the packing that the western growers have been ahead of us, for we grow finer fruit, but many orchardists have not yet learned how to pack and market it properly.

WILT OF TOMATOES.

In addition to the common leaf blight of tomatoes which is quite common this year, there are two forms of Tomato Wilt; one caused by bacteria and showing in wilted tips; the other, caused by a soil fungus, in which the leaves turn yellow from the bottom up. These are also prevalent in parts of Maryland this year.

The chief hope in controlling the two latter diseases, is in finding resistant varieties, and in order to do this, specialists of the State Horticultural Department wish to examine as many many diseased fields as possible. It will be greatly appreciated if anyone knowing the fields in which a number of plants have died from one of these diseases, will notify the Maryland Agricultural College & Experiment Station at College Park, Md.

ORGANIZATION OF A SCHOOL OF HORTICULTURE.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Maryland Agricultural College and Experiment Station, a special School of Horticulture was provided for.

This organization will coordinate the extension work in horticulture and greatly increase the staff of instructors in this subject at the College. The plan will enable the work to be done by a higher class of men and make it more permanent, as their service will be more continuous. The teachers in the School of Horticulture will be specialists in the different phases of Horticulture, such as Pomology, Olericulture, Floriculture and Landscape Gardening, and Bush and Vine Fruits. They are to be men who are broadly trained and can act as general inspectors and demonstrators in the State Department. This will give them an opportunity to keep in touch with the broad field of horticulture in all parts of the State, and enable them to teach their subjects with more direct application to the students' needs.

This organization will also enable the Institution to develope each special phase of horticulture in the State, and the people to avail of the help of specialists. The plan provides for an expansion of the demonstration work in the State.

From New England.

To the Editor of The Republican:

I thought the between sessions I would write you a line from this, I believe, the most beautiful spot in America. I have been here at the Summer Conferences for five years, and never saw Northfield more beautiful.

Several new buildings have been added to the campus since I was here, two years ago. The last and finest is Gould Hall, erected by Miss Helen Gould at a cost of about a quarter of a million of dollars, in memory of her father and mother. It is magnificent.

All streets and drives are oiled. There is a retired sea captain here from Connecticut, who drives through every summer in his touring car. Yesterday he took me for a spin into New Hampshire over roads as good all the way as the State road from Oakland.

The usual array of great teachers and lecturers are on the platform. Prof. Robertson, of Louisville, Ky., begins the day with a class in Greek for ministers. He informed us a few days ago that we need not bother preaching about Sin and its Consequences, as a certain class of people in a recent convention had voted Hell out of existence. His wit is unbounded, and his thrusts cause much amusement.

There are about three thousand people here, and nearly half of them ministers. There are in the same dormotory with me Rev. Rupp of Frederick, Md., and Rev. Crissman of Frostburg, Md., both Lutheran ministers. The Conferences last from June to October, but the first two weeks in August are especially for ministers and teachers.

Several prominent ministers from abroad are on the program daily. Hutton from Glasgow, McPherson and Brown from London, with Prof. Robertson from Kentucky, and Ross from New York.

Weather delightful as usual. No climate like the New England summer. I expect to join my folks in Vermont in a few days, where we will visit friends until September 1st.

Kind regards to all Oakland friends.

Sincerely,
JOHN A. MCCLELLAND.
